Beanies In Bloom As Frosh Begin

Last week-end saw another group of high school students enter university and become Varsity types. Victoria College and Trinity College had their freshmen week-ends on Saturday and Sunday, while University College waited until Monday and Tuesday to introduce the neophytes to the campus.

The freshies started out the school year by invading such male strongholds as Hart House and Strachan Hall at Trinity. Co-eds from Victoria and Trinity were led on a tour of Hart House by the warden and his staff. In past years the Vic freshies have been taken on a tour of the House but this was the first year for the Trinity co-eds.

The City of Toronto Police arrived at Vic this year about twenty minutes after a very quiet snake dance that stopped two street cars for a matter of seconds and wandered decently along the sidewalks of Bloor street so as not to hinder traffic. Two motorcycles buzzed back and forth on Charles Street (a one-way street) while tired freshmen stood and wondered what they had done to warrant such an honor guard.

Bloops and hats were the fashion this year. Vic gave the freshmen scarlet and gold caps called beanies, similar to last year's blue and white bloops. U.C. had their red and white bloops, and the engineers have their engineering hats which were introduced to the campus last year. St. Mike's claim that they were the original hat men on the campus with their good quality double blue caps.

The seniors at U.C. went to the stables of one of Toronto's larger dairies to scrounge pieces of harness, lamps, and other non-inflammable articles for the big barn dance in the J.C.R. last night. For once the students can call the common room a barn without being bitter.

St. Mike's did not have a freshmen week-end and will have the usual "hell week" in the first part of October.

The engineers' reception for the new class will get under way on Monday with a tour of the Skule buildings. The Lady Godiva Memorial band will serenade the freshmen on the front campus at 1:45 p.m. with several of their usual touching renditions. Later the Freshmen will attend a dance at the Drill Hall on St. George Street (on showing their A.T.L. cards) where they will meet freshies from other parts of the university.

President Smith, Students Feel Fee Raise Warranted

Fee increases of 29 to 70 dollars for University of Toronto students were announced this summer by President Sidney Smith.

The decision to increase fees, as other Canadian universities have done, was forced on the Board of Governors by new salary scales and higher operating costs, said Dr. Smith. "Yet even the higher fees that you pay cover less than one-third of the cost of your University courses," he added.

Fourth year Med's fees are highest ($529) with Dentistry, Engineering and Architecture not far behind.

In the President's Opening Address yesterday he explained that the university has received excellent support from private individuals and public corporations, but with increasing cost of yearly operations, finances have been stretched to the limit.

Mary Prior, III OT, comments, "In view of the fact that the Federal government has granted the university a sum of approximately $110 per student, I do not feel that an increase in the fees was necessary." Bike Benazon, II University College, replied, "I certainly feel it was justified, sad as the news was, when one considers the spiralling cost of living."

Several Meds students voiced the opinion that studies were going to suffer even more in the future because students will have to spend more time in part-time jobs during the year to earn enough to stay at college. This, they went on to say, would lower the graduate standard.

Many students felt that the fee rise was "inevitable" and that the only course will be to "pay up".

In his opening address yesterday afternoon, President Sidney Smith credited the fee rise and the Dominion grant to universities with ending a "veritable nightmare of trying to stretch inadequate funds to meet soaring university expenses."

"In common with every other Canadian university, we were obliged to increase tuition costs this year," Dr. Smith said, and added that the step was taken with "great regret and misgiving".

"However," he continued, "even the higher fees the students pay covers less than one-third of the cost of university courses."

Dr. Smith sketched the dilemma which faced the university this spring. Contributions from campaigns (such as the Varsity Building campaign) cannot be maintained year in and year out. The Ontario government has increased its annual grant during the recent years, but there are limits to provincial revenues.

Then the Dominion Government announced its decision to provide financial assistance to all Canadian universities.

"I cannot speak too warmly of the relief and encouragement that we feel by reason of this decision," the President said. "It recognizes and emphasizes a salient fact—that not only the community and the province, but the nation as a whole, has a stake in the welfare of our institutions of higher learning."

He hoped to see implemented within one year the establishment of fellowships, scholarships, and bursaries on a national scale. The Federal Government announced at the same time as the grant that it was ready to consider such a scheme, in order to extend to good students the opportunity for higher education.

Dr. Smith also expressed the "utmost concern" for the effect of the rising cost of living on the members of the academic and administrative staff. "It is an understatement that university employees have never been, and are not now, in the lap of luxury," he said, and added that the salary increases that were established last January are well on the way to being swallowed up by rising costs.

NFCUS Delegates Urge Further Aid For Universities

Federal aid to Education, the International Activities Commission report of Dennis Lazure, the new permanent national office and secretary-treasurer, and the election of new officers were among the most important topics discussed at the annual conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. The conference was held from September 11 to 14 at the University of Western Ontario at London.

Jean de Margerie, fifth year medical student at Laval University, was elected the new President of NFCUS.

The University of Toronto was represented at the conference by Syd Wax, President of the local student council; Graeme Ferguson, Chairman of the SAC External Affairs Commission; George Morrison, vice-president of All Varsity Aid last year, Joan Presant, chairman of the local NFCUS committee, and Peter Alley, chairman of the local International Student Service.

By a unanimous vote the University of Toronto elected to take over the NFCUS International Activities Commission (IAC). The purpose of IAC is to vote Canadian student opinion on international student levels and to be the source of contact between Canada's National Student Organization with other national student unions.

A continual source of controversy at the conference was the report of Dennis Lazure on the IAC's work during the past year. Of primary interest was the Communist-dominated International Union of Students executive council meeting held in Warsaw this past summer, which Lazure attended as an observer. Lazure told the NFCUS delegates that the IUS council had adopted a more conciliatory attitude to the western unions and their grievances with the IUS. He said that a door should be left open for possible affiliation with IUS and he reported that the IUS had agreed to meet the western unions not already affiliated in a conference this fall to discuss possible western affiliation with IUS.

On the question of Federal Aid to education, the NFCUS delegates voted to extend their appreciation to the federal government for their recent grants. They also mandated the national executive to take what steps were necessary to press the federal and provincial governments for complete implementation of the Massey Report particularly in regard to the increased number of scholarships.

Rugby Tickets Now On Sale At The Arena

Student tickets for the four Blues home football games — McMaster, Western, Queen's and McGill — go on sale today at the south door of Varsity Arena. Tickets will be available from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. today, Friday and Monday for $1.50.

Students must present their own admit-to-lecture cards when purchasing tickets; no one can buy tickets for another person.

A practice game with the Beaches O.R.F.U. took place yesterday, but the first home game of the Intercollegiate series will be McMaster versus Blues here Saturday.

ISS Students Match Ideas During Meet

Seventy-five students from sixteen different countries came together near Ottawa this summer for four weeks, at the fourth International Student Service summer seminar.

Subject of the seminar, held during the month of August, was "The Needs and Contributions of East and West." Through an intensive series of lectures and discussions lasting from 9:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. most days, the students received an introduction into the history, political structures, economics and cultures of Asia and Canada.

Some of the countries represented at the seminar were Canada and the United States, Pakistan, India and Ceylon, Germany, Finland, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France and Israel.

MASTHEAD MEETING

A masthead meeting will be held at 5 p.m. today in the editorial office.

No Sex In Varsity

Have you noticed a student about the campus, maybe he was tall, or maybe short; maybe he was well dressed, more likely not; maybe he was a "she", maybe not. At any rate if you have seen this student you will remember the alertness, the inquisitiveness in his eye even if you did not see the pencil or camera which is ever in hand.

If you have, this was probably one of The Varsity staff on the pleasant task of interviewing a blonde freshie or hot on the trail of a scoop which will make downtown papers lower their heads in shame.

Anyway, the point is that if you're interested in being pleasantly harassed, disturbed, and in other ways emotionally and physically upset, The Varsity is the place for you.

Each year the graduates leave vacancies to be filled on The Varsity staff. That doesn't mean you have to have experience to join the staff; just an interest in journalism. There are many departments on the paper; for the terse-spoken student there is news reporting; or if you are the adjective type, maybe feature writing is your line. Make-up, art, music and drama reviewing, photography and sports supply a variety of fields. We even have a morgue if you're so inclined.

The Varsity news office is in room 78, University College basement and is open daily from 10 a.m. 'til late evening.

We can't promise blonde-chasing to all, and scoops are of your own making, but we can guarantee a harassed air, fun, a tremendous improvement in your English, and, if you try hard enough, ulcers.

See, no sex.

Fair Exchange

Are your books gathering unprofitable dust in the closet at home? Why not follow the example of other students and bring your books to the SAC Book Exchange, located just behind the Drill Hall at 119 St. George. Pictured above is Jean Martin, one of the UC crop of freshies, looking for a text for her psychology course.

A general meeting for all students interested in work on The Varsity will be held at one p.m., Friday, September 28, Room 13, University College (just inside the Tower door).

New Atomic Lab At McMaster U

Canada's number two atomic research lab is now located at McMaster University in Hamilton. Some of the most outstanding work in nuclear physics in North America is being carried out in the $675,000 building opened last May, by Premier Frost.

"McMaster has a unique place in the field of nuclear physics," the Premier remarked, "as is attested to by the new building. At the inception of the Canadian atomic project in 1942, a supporting research team was set up at McMaster. The need for the research building has grown out of this work which is now quite outstanding in North America."

Faster Service .Now Instal New Machines For Candy, Cigarets

Students will not receive any discounts on texts purchased at the University Bookstore this year. The withdrawal of the 5% discount on cash sales was announced about two weeks ago by Mr. Alex Rankin, General Manager of the University of Toronto Press.

Miss MacMurray, Manager of the Bookstore, was not aware of the reasons for this change of policy. Mr. Rankin is out of town and not available for comment.

Two years ago the University Bookstore made it possible for students to make cash purchases of texts at a 10% discount. Three publishers, notable among them the Macmillan Company of Canada, objected strenuously to this policy and refused to supply books while the discount was continued. The 10% discount continued till the end of the year.

Last year, however, the discount was decreased to 5% on all cash sales. This policy was continued till Sept. 10 of this year when Mr. Rankin ordered all discounts to be stopped.

Meanwhile, Coles' continues to give a 20% discount on all new student texts.

In addition to the usual texts, microscopes, and stationery, the University Bookstore is sporting brand-new cigarette, soft drinks and candy machines. "There have been so many requests by the girls," Miss MacMurray explained, for "there is no women's Hart House where they can buy these things." So far there had been no candy smudges on the books, she said.

The system of ordering books was changed very slightly from last year. There are no orders to be filled out except for stationery and the books are to be taken directly to the cashier. In this way the Bookstore hopes to speed up its service, said Miss MacMurray.

So far no candy smudges . . .

Book Bargains?

Seek SAC Exchange

For the student whose budget won't cover new texts and for all those with books gathering unprofitable dust in the attic, the Students' Administrative Council Book Exchange provides an economical solution. With a little patience, bargains can be found at as much as half the original price of many books, and the most specialized texts can be sold.

The Book Exchange, located at 119 St. George, is a non-profit paying organ of the SAC, and is run by the students under a manager appointed by and responsible to the SAC. The Exchange collects ten per cent of the price of each book sold, but this fee is used only to meet such expenses as rent and salaries.

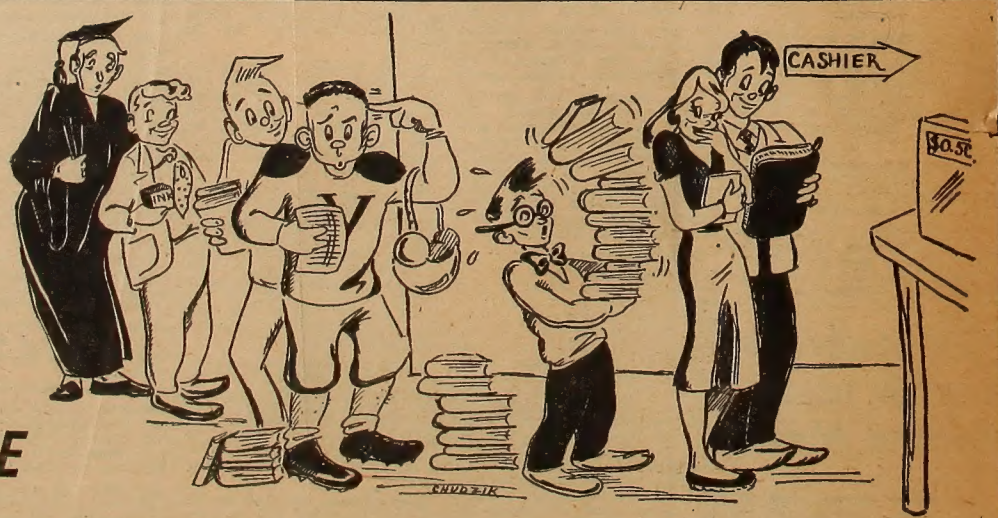
Open from 9 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. on weekdays, and until 12:30 p.m. on Saturdays, the Exchange, which resumed business operations this Monday, will be operating for five or six weeks.

At present, it is estimated that the Exchange has over 2,000 books in stock, but most of these are in the transient class, and students with books to sell are urged to bring them in immediately, as the demand is very heavy in the first two weeks of term.

When a book is sold, the amount of the sale is credited to the account of its original owner, and this money can be collected on dates which will be well advertised in The Varsity. Any books that are not sold may be left at the Exchange for possible sale next year, or the owner can retrieve his unpopular merchandise.

Book Exchange officials suggest that students buy their second ter mbooks now, as many have been brought in, and if the matter is neglected until January, the Exchange will be closed and only the extravagance of new books will be possible.

Books are usually sold for about 75% of the original price depending on the condition. The Exchange officials can help doubtful sellers settle on a reasonable price.



The Exchange specializes in personal attentions, such as helping students choose the right books for their courses. There are directories available for all faculties and the books are grouped on the shelves according to subjects.

There are a large number of books on every subject from Hebrew to Cookery, and such gems as President Sidney Smith's personal encyclopaedia can be picked up for a reasonable sum.

Students in the Old Pass Course and the New General Course are advised not to give up hope about disposing of old books or buying second hand ones. Thoughtful professors have in many cases assigned texts that have been in circulation for years in various courses, or stagnating on the shelves of the Exchange. This revival may cause the settling of some very old accounts on the Homecoming Weekend.

B & W Offers Big Surprise In New Item

After several hurried meetings the Blue and White skeleton executive has drafted a full and varied season of events, aimed at forwarding the new three-fold policy of the Society.

These aims are primarily to promote a university consciousness; to further intra-university relations on an individual student level; and to stimulate interest in the cultural facilities available outside the University campus.

The events this year will closely follow those of preceding years with the possible omission of a pep rally. There will be football weekends, football dances, an Art Gallery Night and a Christmas Tree. The Society also promises a bigger and better Homecoming Weekend. A new feature of the program will be a Museum Night, to be arranged early in the spring.

Bloops will be back this year, along with a new and entirely different item, which Blue and White Society officials refuse to disclose at present.

The Society has put out a call for help, asking interested persons to attend their first meeting in Room 1 in Trinity College at 1 p.m. today. "We need anyone with a touch of the abnormal and a flair for promoting All-Varsity spirit," says its officials.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

The initial column of a new series is always a formidable task for the columnist, no matter how eager he may be. He wants to find the striking opening, the memorable phrase, the tingling hyperbole, to catch the reader's mind and have him banging his fists at the door for more. But originality takes time and sweat and imagination, and the dread deadline draws near.

So to a simpler approach. I will start off this regular column on movies with a What and Why. And then, instead of trying to sound arty, start talking about movies instead.

Like all new editors, the new Editor of The Varsity has some tricks in his bag. One is to be a consistent and definitive critical reporting of movies. To get an attitude that readers will come to recognize and be able to use as a gauge, a one-man column on movies will appear in these pages at least twice weekly. I will be the one man. The other occupant of this space will be the Drahma Critic.

The first purpose of this column is to give some idea of what pictures are around that might be worth spending an evening or a lecture-free afternoon at. And I, following more senior and proven movie critics, like the movies and get mad or nasty about some movies only because I want them to be as good as they can be, within their scope and intention.

I don't expect every movie to be a HAMLET or a BICYCLE THIEF as some practising critics seem to. I feel, for instance, that MA AND PA KETTLE pictures have a place. Perhaps more satisfying pictures might be made from the KETTLE-gotten gains.

To be specific, full-scale reviews, as well as some capsule ones, of "important" pictures will start in the next column. TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GIRL and BITTER RICE are on the priority list.

But I can't resist passing comment on the expensive MGM version of SHOWBOAT. This long-playing extravaganza wheezes along at 33 and one-third RPM too often. It is not news now that William Warfield's basso rendition of Ol' Man River, is an exciting film event. (Although my companion complained about not being able to see him because of the fog-laden Mississippi set.) There is competence shown by Ava Gardner as Julie who sings, the dancing Champions, Joe E. Brown and Agnes Moorhead. But the film carries itself only because the Kern-Hammerstein tunes are imperishable despite inept work by the principals, Kathryn Grayson and Howard Keel. As Magnolia and Ravenal, their singing is pretty poor, but at the intervals when they are forced to "act," it is even harder to resist the impulse to hiss and hoot and giggle. They take themselves so seriously.

Jose Ferrer's CYRANO DE BERGERAC is something absolutely different. This tremendous one-man show is wending its way through the neighborhood houses now, and even the pop-corn munchers and the old ladies who hoarsely ask "What did he say?" are subdued by the sweep of Ferrer having a ball with the delightful Rostand verse.

It is true that the supporting players are run-of-the mill, but perhaps their lack of distinction enhances rather than hinders Ferrer's swashbuckling and yet often subtle Cyrano. Only when Olivier has played Shakespeare, has the screen provided a performance so full of command and excitement.

Double bills can be like ptomaine poisoning. You take a beating without much warning. A case in point was having a cheaply-made British import, THE PAPER GALLOWS, inflicted upon the CYRANO audience. I have forgotten the director's name as well as that of the three principals. Purportedly a suspense-filled mystery drama, the director resorts to a bag of shoddy and obvious tactics to keep up the suspense. He shocks you with sudden crescendos of Wagnerian music and sudden closeups which lead to nothing. This is cheating and dishonesty camouflaging a lack of imagination and idea.

The acting was so deplorable, it was worse than the Grayson-Keel scenes in SHOWBOAT. The audience laughed and laughed as the heroine stood in danger of murder while the hero busied himself with self-torment and wild-goose chases.

You can easily feel that the theatre manager should be strung up for exposing you to a lemon like THE PAPER GALLOWS. But at the same theatres this week, the double bill is of different aspect. Gabriel Pascal's ornate production of Bernard Shaw's CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA is coupled with Carol (Fallen Idol, Third Man) Reed's THE WAY AHEAD. There can be no boredom there.

The New Principal

Stick Around

By PEARL PARNES

"My generation of students were shy. We never spoke to women students unless our official chaperon was present. The present generation has none of the inhibitions we had." Thus does the new principal of University College, Professor F. A. C. Jeanneret, underline his enthusiasm for the present generation.

A kindly dignified man with greying hair and warm, intelligent eyes, Principal Jeanneret takes over the leadership of University College following Dr. W. R. Taylor who died suddenly last February.

The new principal's association with the college he now heads dates back to 1908 when he entered the college as a Freshman. Since that time he has never severed his connection with U.C., joining the staff a year after graduation, and filling the positions of college registrar, lecturer in French, and finally becoming head of the French Department in 1926, a position he will continue to fill.

During this time he has been able to teach for a year at Upper Canada College, study at the Sorbonne in Paris, and both study and lecture at the University of Chicago. His recipe for becoming a principal is to "just stick around long enough and anything may happen." Particularly if your list of achievements is as long as his.

Aside from the shyness, Dr. Jeanneret sees very little difference in students of his own year and those he now teaches. Commenting on the apparent youthfulness of the new crop of freshmen, he denies any change in age levels. "First year students have always looked very young."

One of the things he most admires in the present generation is their directness. "There seems to be more real honesty now, though we used to have long discussions in my day when we would attack controversial questions, particularly on religion, in a hammer and tong fashion." As far as politics were concerned, "socialism was only whispered, and a liberal was as red as you could get."

Charges made today against the universities as "hot-beds" of communism are ridiculous, Principal Jeanneret feels. "Young students are naturally interested in advanced ideas, politically and otherwise." He pointed out that most criticism of universities is contradictory and thus self-destroying, making accusations alternately of radicalism and reaction.

A serious collector of fine old editions, Principal Jeanneret is the proud possessor of 70 volumes of 1785 edition of Voltaire, purchased from a collection of Papineau, the French-Canadian rebel. One of his treasures is a rare first edition, one of three existing copies, of Corneille's works, published in 1644, which he discovered in an old book shop in Toronto. A very valuable find, the bookseller told Dr. Jeanneret, "If it's worth 40 cents to you, take it."

Alternate president and vice-president of the "Visites Interprovinciales," Principal Jeanneret has a deep love for the French-Canadians. For many years he directed the Ontario Department of Education school for teachers at Quebec City, one of the first real contacts of Ontario teachers with the French-Canadian culture. A reproduction of Morrice's "Ferry at Quebec" which hangs above his desk recalls for the principal his first glimpse of Quebec when he was just 17 years old.

"The scene has something symbolic about it for me," he remembers. "I first saw Quebec when the sun was setting behind the beautiful old buildings of the town, in one of the loveliest sights I have seen. Quebec has been in my system ever since." The scene made an indelible imprint on his life, for he became thrilled with the romance of Quebec and has maintained close contact with his friends of French Canada. His work has been recognized by Laval University with the honorary degree of Litt. D. He has also been made an officer of the Academy of the Republic of France.

Centre-half of the old Berlin Rangers when that team won the Canadian soccer championship, Principal Jeanneret is a strong supporter of athletics. "I believe every student should take part in some game if he is physically able." He also supports student participation in extra-curricular activities, so long as the student remembers that his primary business is study.

"In my years as professor, many students have told me that they regretted not taking their studies seriously enough. Only one ever regretted having been too serious."

His many years in the University, during which time he saw classmates and students rise to important positions in their own fields, and experienced the heartbreak of seeing them go to their deaths in two world wars, along with his own son, have given Principal Jeanneret a deep understanding of and sympathy with the dreams, and ambitions of his students.

A close friendship, both socially and professionally with the professors of the other arts colleges, to ensure a healthy rivalry and good sportsmanship, and a firm, enthusiastic backing of his own staff have given Professor Jeanneret the courage to accept this new job. His aim is to keep University College "liberal, broad, independent, free from bias and prejudice, loyal, international in outlook and yet proudly and staunchly Canadian."

College of Art Moves Seniors To Old Estate

The senior students of the Ontario College of Art will be moved to Glendon Hall on Bayview Avenue by the end of the year, said Art College Principal L. A. C. Panton recently. The junior students will still be accommodated in the present school, but they will fill it to capacity.

The Art College will move into the main building only at Glendon Hall. The rest of the estate will still be left to the professional departments which were using it last year.

Emphasize Classics For Arts 'Philistines' Jeanneret's Formula

A former Modern Language professor came out with a strong plea for greater emphasis on the Classics when Principal Jeanneret of University College gave his first Convocation Address Tuesday night.

Principal Jeanneret gave the address in Convocation Hall shortly after he had been invested in the office by University President Sidney Smith. He succeeds Dr. W. R. Taylor, who died last spring.

The speaker expressed particular concern for "Philistines" in honor courses other than Classics, and in the new General Course. "They may have missed the thorough discipline of early language training in Greek and Latin," he said, "but why should they be deprived of an acquaintance with the highest forms of intellectual and aesthetic achievement, if only through the medium of translation?"

The new principal then suggested that courses in Greek and Latin literature (such as are now offered by the Classics department to students in English Language and Literature) should be made available to students in most of the other departments.

"Students in every field might be provided with that invaluable mental discipline that comes from the careful reading of the great Greek philosophers and historians," he said.

Principal Jeanneret also commented on the place of the Arts College in the face of ever-increasing mechanization, and concluded that "it is more than ever incumbent on the Arts College to provide its students with a liberalizing education."

He added that there can be no question as to the object of the Arts College: whether it is intellectual culture or technical training. There is a place for technical and vocational training, but that place is not the Arts Colege, he said.

"The interest of the individual student must never be lost sight of in this age of mass production," the UC head warned, and added, "Democracy is in the midst of a great moral, intellectual and spiritual crisis and requires — as never before — the intelectual honesty, the love of truth, the ability to think clearly and the sense of moral values of highly disciplined leaders."

BLUES WIN FIRST TWO

Rain Falls As Varsity Wins 26-0

Playing at Guelph in the rain for the fourth year in succession, the Senior football Blues literally ran over the OAC Aggies and piled up a 26-0 count in their annual exhibition game last Saturday afternoon. Insistent rain squalls kept the Blue attack on the ground, and the Aggie defence proved incapable of coping with the situation.

The Guelph squad could hardly be described as a real test for the Blues this season, and ball carriers like Bill Bewley, Bob Dale and Steve Oneschuck ran for substantial gains at nearly every try. It took the Aggies till late in the third quarter to penetrate into Blue territory, and there, too proud to kick for a single, they were stopped on the Varsity ten yard line.

This sortie into enemy territory was the only defensive lap on the part of the Blues during the whole game. Even pass defence, usually a weak point on the part of any team this early in the season, was not too weak on the part of the Blues. Two interceptions by Bill McFarlane and an interception coupled with a pleasing 65 yard run that was called back because of interference by Bob Rumball served to halt any Aggie hopes of hitting pay dirt.

Probably the most pleasant surprises of the game were the running of young Bob Dale, a product of Lawrence Park Collegiate, who appears more than capable of filling the shoes of last year's Gerry Washington, and the showing of the Blue front wall on the whole. With veterans like Johnny Evans, Don Longmore, Al Brown and Al Dancy playing some of the best ball we have seen them produce and the biggest turnout of newcomers in some seasons along with stars from the Intermediate squad of last year backing them up, the Varsity line showed signs of developing into a force to be reckoned with in the intercollegiate loop this season.

Coach Bob Masterson gave all of the forty-odd players that were dressed a chance to strut their wares and as a result the scoring was pretty well distributed among the Blue backfield. Bobby Dale burned in the first major for the Blues from 15 yards out on an off-tackle sprint, and Bob Garside carried over late in the first quarter for another. Both were converted by Bill Bewley. After driving right down the field in the second quarter, the Blues sent Bill McFarlane over on an end sweep from 5 yards out. Steve Oneschuck kicked the extra point.

Al Haig got into the scoring column with a single in the third quarter and a long touchdown run by Steve Oneschuck in the final stanza completed the scoring. The game ended in a terrific downpour that all but drowned the faithful few spectators remaining.

Upset Beaches 16-11 In Exhibition Game

By MAL CRAWFORD

The concensus among the working members of the Devonshire St. cabin-in-the-sky has it that the Ontario Athletic Commissioner and a full battery of judges and lawyers will be down to the Balmy Beach clubhouse tonight to investigate the Beachers' 16-11 loss to Toronto Varsity yesterday afternoon.

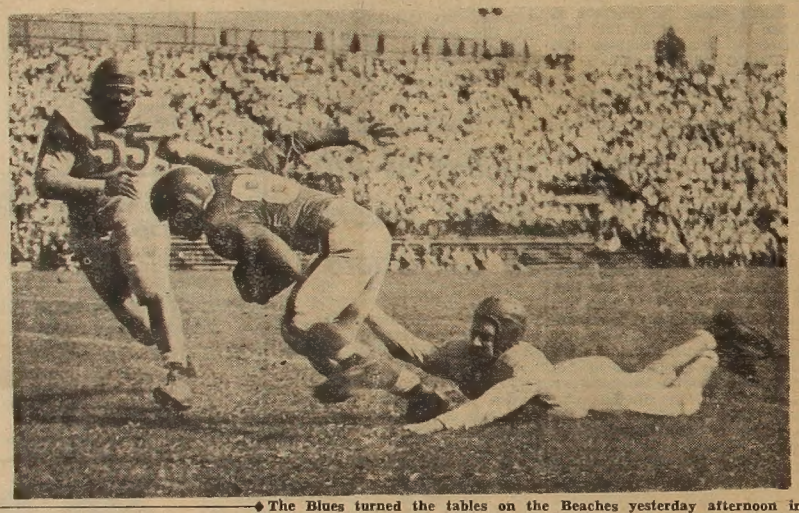
When a semi-pro football team, league champion last year and evidently headed in the same direction this year, loses to a green college team that last year scored about as many points as you could count on your fingers, even the most innocent of sportswriters suspect something sinister.

Showing a modicum of offensive strength, greatly improved defensive football, and marvelous display of opportunism, the Blues edged the ORFU squad by one touchdown.

The first Varsity major was scored after Bill Bewly intercepted one of Gerry Tuttle's passes on the Beach 47. Bewley for 8 yards, Bob Dale for 17, and Oneschuk for 9 took play to Beach's 13. On the next play—the fourth after the interception—Oneschuk crashed over Beaches left tackle to go the rest of the way for the major. Bewly missed the convert.

Beaches defensive backfield looked lazy on this occasion as on several others. This does not detract from the game played by Oneschuk or the rest of the team, but it was still obvious that Beaches knew it was only an exhibition game.

The second TD was a recovery of a fumble behind Beaches goal-line. When he went back he fumbled it trying to pick it up and Brown pounced on it for a score.



The last score, with about five minutes to go, occurred when Howie French fumbled the snap as he stood back to kick on his own 40. Ray Yakasovitch ploughed through to recover it. Bewly ran twenty yards on the next play. Then Varsity, behind 11-10 at the time, executed the best, or at least the most pleasing play of the game. Quarterback Lawson handed off to Bewly as if for another end run. Once around the end, Bill dropped back and fired a pass to Al Haig, who was well beyond the deepest defender. The end run pass is a play that has not been used enough by Canadian clubs. We have occasionally seen it done off a pitch-out, but never before off a hand-off.

Varsity blocked poorly at first, but after Bewley's pass interception they picked right up where they left off at OAC. If their stellar halfbacks like Dale, Bewley, Gumball, McFarlane, and McFadden can run around the big Beach line, the might maul the intercollegiate opposition. They have yet to show that they have a pass attack. Quarterback Ollie Mandryk completed only one pass, good for 21 yards including a nice run by Jim Bell.

Beaches outshone the Blues statistically, but lacking the scoring punch. Tuttle completed eight passes for 117 yards, and led the team to a 327 yard total offense. Of their 185 yards on the ground, right halfback Ralph Pulley gained 83. For Varsity Bobby Dale, freshman star from Lawrence Park ran the most, 48 yards. Blues' total rushing was 146, total offence, 187. Haig's kicking, as usual, was the best, 36.6 to Howie French's 34.4.

Tuttle scored Beach's first with the score 5-0 against them. After five consecutive first downs, Magee and Pulley doing most of the ball carrying, Tuttle carried over from the one. They scored again right after half time to go ahead for the only time in the game, 10-5. Ed Fisher, last year with Varsity, played end against his former teammates.

A Year Ago Today

The Blues turned the tables on the Beaches yesterday afternoon in Varsity Stadium and avenged a 25-12 defeat they suffered at the beginning of last season. Gilchrest (55) of last year's winners is shown about to deliver a coup-de-grace.

Speaking of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

The 1951 edition of the Varsity Blues thrilled a crowd of shivering spectators yesterday and surprised a group of so-called experts who were firmly entrenched in the most comfortable press box in Canada by bumping off the Beaches.

Highlighted by the Bewley to Haig touchdown play which put the Blues on the road to victory (and by the way Mr. Lawson, that was about as sweet a bit of quarterbacking as we have seen) that caught the Beaches completely off the track, the game was a sight for sore Varsity eyes.

We thought the Blue line compared favourably to what the opposition had to offer. In fact, Varsity blocking assignments were carried out with a thoroughness at times that made the Beaches look like something less than a professional club.

However, that game did not win the Yates Cup, and if reports emanating from London, Ontario and vicinity are to be believed, it may be that Western is again the team to beat. From all reports on pre-season performances, the Mustangs have the strongest line in the league. For our money, the team with the strongest line in the league is the team to beat.

If the Varsity front wall can match that of the Mustangs, the Blues are going to cause a lot of headaches in the Intercollegiate loop this fall. With running backs like Bobby Dale, Bill Bewley (he also throws a pass), and Steve Oneschuck to tote that pigskin, the Blues have developed their most potent ground attack in several seasons. What they have to offer in the way of an aerial offensive is yet to be discovered. The McMaster game coming up should resolve that problem.

Provisions For Freshmen In Interfaculty Schedule

The University of Toronto Interfaculty schedule begins next Monday with the Senior Tennis tournament and carries through in all types of sport until the baseball finals next October. In between there will be tournaments and league play in Golf, Track, Football, Volleyball, Lacrosse, Hockey, Water Polo, Swimming, Fencing, Boxing, Wrestling, Soccer and Squash.

The Intramural system at Varsity is actually a 17 college conference. Each college and Faculty has its own Athletic Association, its own finances, coaches, managers, etc. The larger colleges and faculties have entries in all fields of sport, whereas the smaller ones only have entries in the tournaments, and the team sports requiring fewer players.

Each sport in Interfaculty competition has its own trophy and there is a trophy for the college or faculty winning the most events in all competitions. This is called the Reed High Point Trophy, and points for it are awarded so that smaller colleges and faculties receive more points than the larger for doing the same thing. In this way, the smaller schools have an equal chance at the trophy.

Last year, the Reed trophy race was very close. The Faculty of Forestry, largely on the strength of their championship football team took the trophy with 11,857 points. University College was a close second with 11,745 and SPS was third with 10,514. Points are accumulated, by winning championships in sports, by winning group titles in the various leagues, and by the number of entries in different sports in proportion to the enrolment.

The Tennis and Golf tournaments will be held next week. In the Senior tournaments, each college or faculty is limited to eight entries, to be chosen by the Athletic rep. The junior events are open to all students and entries should be made in the Intramural office by Tuesday.

The fall team sports, football, volleyball, soccer and lacrosse all start within the next two weeks, and the teams are already starting practices. Students interested in any of these team sports should see their college or faculty Athletic Associations, to find out practice times.

Dr. Smith On:

Building...

"Three years ago the University of Toronto embarked upon a campaign for funds to underwrite a building program. The reason for doing so was very simple — we could not keep first-rate people on the staff without giving them the tools for their jobs.

"The professors were the first persons to plead for adequate facilities, space and equipment.

"I mention this because I once saw in print the extraordinary statement that the building program was the outcome of the vainglory of the administration. I assure you that was not the case. The additional facilities were needed for, and requested by, the professors."

Speeches...

"Not many months ago it was proposed in this very province that members of a university staff should not discuss, even with a graduating class, matters of national import.

"While I recognize that university teachers should not use their forums for the indoctrination of students in partisan views, yet I maintain and I will defend the right, and indeed the duty, of a university to enable its students to understand and to decide for themselves public issues.

"Members of the staff of this university must feel free to express freely their honest and well-founded opinions on public service."

Solitude...

"Today there are beating upon you forces that were little known to those of an earlier generation during their college days—the standardized cliches, the impact of the predatory market place, the unthinking prejudices, the clamorous mediocrity and meretriciousness so freely disseminated by radio, screen and press.

"I suggest to you that you will be better able to withstand those forces if you are prepared to stand on your own feet and to remove yourselves on many occasions from the group. In silence of loneliness, when we stand aside, ponder, survey and reflect, come some of our most creative moments. Solitude produces a clarity of inner vision that is otherwise unattainable.

"You should organize your precious time so as to reserve for yourselves periods of solitude. Your reward will be manifest in greater strength of mind, of character and of purpose."

PRESIDENT SIDNEY SMITH

Aims...

"What are your aims? You will have individual answers to that question, and doubtless you will modify them from time to time. Not the least of your aims should be to ascertain, understand and assimilate the spiritual heritage of the West. There is a unity of wisdom, though it is often difficult to hold fast the vision of that unity.

"Do not be deceived by the academic diversity of colleges, faculties, schools and institutes, nor by the fact that your own course may seem exclusive and unrelated to others. You must not be so preoccupied with your own special studies that your energies and interests become channeled in only one direction.

"The true objective of every member of this university should be to become an educated human being."

...And Women

"I am not unaware of the observations that are sometimes made that it is a waste of money, time and effort to teach women in the universities. One hears the question: 'What is the use of educating a woman, when as soon as she marries she will likely get married?'

"To me this question is as stupid as it is ridiculous. What if a woman does marry as soon as she graduates? Is that a loss to the home, the community or the nation? Better educated husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, will make for a better society.

"There are few professions in which women may not play roles comparable to those of men. It is the task of universities to help women to develop themselves and to take their places in our complex society.

"By virtue of special knowledge and interest, and in many ways not open to men graduates, university women can influence and improve our society, whether it be at the community, the provincial or the national level.

"In all honesty, however, I am compelled to question whether the masculine element, while paying lip-service to the place of women in professions, commerce, industry and politics, is always prepared to welcome women and to work with them. To my mind that is a very serious problem, the solution of which will have a direct bearing on the welfare and progress of Canada."

Rebels Wanted

Glancing over the staff lists of The Varsity as we go to press with the first issue of a new term, one is struck by the fact that for the first time since 1945 the veterans are really gone.

With one or two notable exceptions, The Varsity staff is truly "post-war." In itself this is unimportant. Yet it is merely a reflection of what has become a fact throughout the university. A new generation, bred in a violent era, has entered the university.

It would be unfair (and probably unwise) to compare this new crop of young people with the veterans. Their immediate problems are not the problems that have obtained during these past five years, nor is their outlook in any way the same.

There are indications that they are a serious, sober group of young. There are also indications that they are a less open-minded, less liberal group. Subjected throughout most of their adolescent lives to an ever-growing stream of propaganda, designed to indoctrinate rather than teach, there is a dangerously "penetrating" way to their thinking. It is almost as if they were looking for confirmation for preconceived answers, rather than for new ways to criticise old ideas, and for new and stimulating ideas to develop.

We mention these things not to indict, but rather as an observation, an observation which is a rough background upon which the policies of this paper will be built in the coming year. There can be no hard and fast rule, and such generalizations as we have indulged in above will many times prove wrong.

Somewhere among the ten thousand undergraduates in this University there are some whose rebellious tendencies will lead them out into the open where the intellectual battles can be fought. This paper, and particularly this page, is dedicated to bringing as many of those battles to the University's attention as space allows.

Hello

The Varsity is pleased to be able to say an official "Hello" to its new landlord, Prof. F. C. A. Jeanneret, the newly installed Principal of University College.

Living in the basement of University College as we do, we have from time to time an opportunity to get in the UC official hair. Undergraduate newspapers being what they are, we are never the best of tenants. But we try.

In any case, for ourselves, and for the undergraduates of the University, we extend congratulations and a welcome to Principal Jeanneret.

Comment

We note with interest that the powers that be in Ottawa have removed the ban on Norman Mailer's The Naked and the Dead. Last year's sin is this year's profit in the bookstores . . . The Blue and White Society suffered a minor hemorrhage when they saw the profusion of multi-colored beanies that blossomed on frosh domes over the weekend. An order for several gross of last year's hotcake special Bloops is in jeopardy . . . At Tuesday's UC Fall Convocation Professor Dale ended four prayers with the formula: ". . . through our Lord, Jesus Christ, Amen." Three quarters of an hour later Principal Jeanneret said: "University College is by definition non-sectarian. We do not recognize any denominational priority." What prayer book do you read?

The Onion Skin

Newshounds

By MAX PARSONS

I came into town last night to find things in a great uproar in The Varsity office. The first night is always a little hectic.

There are a few new faces, and several old ones. There are also some that are gone — out into the cruel world. The Managing Editor (I'm not quite sure that I will be able to get used to the idea of a female in that post — it's unnatural) and I were chatting about problems. At the beginning of a Varsity year there are always about four times as many problems as anyone thought of anticipating.

While we were there a young freshman came in and started asking questions about The Varsity. He was, as the man says, looking for work.

He'll get it. More than he ever imagined was possible. When I left that small dungeon in the basement of University College sometime later I wondered what it is that draws them in.

The magic of print, according to the romantics. There are also a few idealists floating about who are interested in changing the course of the world's events. Even a couple of journalists, if you look under the piles of copy paper strewn about the tables.

But there is something more than that according to the real addict. Most people come to the University to study. Some of them get their major education from the paper. It's screwy, but it works.

Somewhere behind it all there is an idea, which if developed, is one of the strong things that keeps people working into the night to turn out news and opinion for other people to glance at and then use for wrapping fish (or garbarge). It's a thought that the best way to get ideas out where they can be some use to people is to provide them with information, and with a medium through which they can blast away at others.

It's not always very tolerant, nor successful. There are writing bores, just as there are talking bores. More axes are ground every year in print than on all the carborundum stones in the world. Propaganda and lies and salesmanship flourish in a mountain of paper and an ocean of ink.

Yet every once and a while in the university press someone comes along with an idea that may not set the world on fire, but at least has the merit of being worth fifteen minutes of someone else's time. He may even do it well enough to put his name on it (I've been getting away with murder for a long time) and that is a kick.

On this paper, and on hundreds like it throughout the western world, young men and women are writing trash and near trash, which is as much a part of their education as their Philosophy 4x's and their Economics 7g's. They are learning to think in print. Some of them are getting to be dangerous citizens. Most of them are not and will not be professional writers. Some are just along for the ride. Most come out with at least some of the effects of their brush with university journalism marking them.

Last year it took a carload of newsprint to turn out the 100-odd issues of the paper. That is a lot of trees, no matter how you arrange them. And all over that carload of newsprint undergraduates of this university were venting their spleen, and hatching their schemes, and reporting their community.

I was wondering as I came away last night just what the young man I met will turn out in the pages of this paper. The inside dope on Bloops? Or a fast story on the gal who's editing the NEW Toike Oike (a nice job too)? Or a pungent account of a VCU meeting? Who knows.

About fifty per cent of the people who come down to The Varsity office to enquire about working on the paper disappear in a week. Only about twenty-five per cent come back for a second year.

Yet one and all they get something out of it. More people list The Varsity as an extra-curricular activity in Torontonensis every year than could possibly get into that small hole in the UC basement.

Some smart young thing that comes into that office in the next few days is going to turn out to be Editor-in-Chief in 1954. And if I didn't have so much faith in human nature, that would be a shock.

On This Page...

This page, which the editors have moved to the back for easier reading in lectures, on buses and in similarly confined places, is designed to present opinion, both from the editors of The Varsity, and more importantly, from the student body at large.

Each day we will carry here an article, preferably controversial, contributed by persons who ordinarily do not write for the paper. If you have something you've always wanted to get off your chest, write it down and bring it in. Or come in and discuss your idea with the editor first. In any case, the space is yours (try and keep it under 400 words) and we want those who have something to say to make full use of it.

For those who don't run to an article, but having an equally burning desire to say something to more than their immediate circle of friends, the page will carry letters. Letters should be short, and to the point. They must be signed with the name, course and telephone number of the writer. In rare instances letters are carried without a signature, or with a pseudonym, but even then we must have the name of the writer on file. No letters will be carried unless we have the name of the writer.

In a lighter vein is the space to the right. Traditionally one of the outstanding examples of undergraduate humour in Canada, The Champus Cat will lap up contributions that meet its standard. There have been lean years recently for the Cat. We refuse to believe this is the true state of humour on the campus.

Articles and Cats should be typed, if possible. Letters should be legible.

Help Wanted

Several staff positions have not yet been filled. Reorganization of the former Art, Music and Drama department has left us without a Drama Editor and a Music Editor. Also waiting to be filled is the position of Assistant News Editor.

Although it is Varsity policy to fill such positions whenever possible from the staff, applications are being considered for the Drama and Music Editor. A letter, or a personal call on the Editor will bring more information.

All departments, of course, are taking on new personnel. Undergraduates from all years, and particularly from the freshman year, are welcome. Experience is not necessary. We train you.

I was in my den Wednesday night, leafing through Lady Chatterton's Lover, when Mrs. Patrick Fitzpatrick Mavourneen O'Shannon Mulrooney, my proprietaire, knocked on the door.

"Faith and yez are wanted on the telephone, Mr. Guignol," she said. "Sure 'tis a scandleous and undalcent hour of the night for a girl to be after callin' a respectable young man."

When I answered the telephone, a saccharine-coated voice said, "Do you know who this is honey?"

"Lonesome Gal?"

"It's Cynthia," said Cynthia. "I'm dying to talk to you about a lecture I heard this afternoon. Come right over."

"!" I exclaimed, hanging up.

Dressing carefully, I chose one of my Bond Street suitings, inserted my rhinestone discharge button in the lapel, put on a pair of handlasted shoes that I had picked up in a little shop on the Plaza de Colon in Cordoba, pulled my toque down over my ears, and got my custom-built Delahaye out of the garage. In a moment I found myself knocking on Cynthia's door.

"Come in, the door's open," sang out Cynthia, employing a range of an octave and a half.

To call Cynthia's apartment ornate would be like describing Maple Leaf Gardens as roomy. There were Bokhara rugs, red velvet hangings, miniature reproductions in plaster of Rodin and Maillot, ikons, samovars, scimitars.

The air was redolent of patchouli, surging up in waves from the chaise longue where Cynthia reclined sinuously. One red rose was clutched in her teeth, and a ten-inch cigarette holder dangled carelessly from her finger-tips. In her other hand she fondled a champagne cup, while a magnum of Lanson was chilling in a silver bucket beside her. Theda Bara, at the zenith of her tragic career, could not have been more beautifully devastating than was Cynthia at that moment.

ISSUE PARKING STICKERS AGAIN

Presidents' Parley

Newly-installed President of University College Professor F. A. C. Jeanneret gets together with U.C Lit President David Rose and WUA President Margaret Fleming. The three presidents are pictured here at the reception in West Hall which followed President Jeanneret's installation by U of T President Sidney Smith at Convocation Hall Tuesday. The new president will continue to fill the position of head of the UC French Department which he has held since 1926.

'Bumpers Away!' New Parking Oath To Free Sidewalk

Parking facilities are still at a premium around the University of Toronto. The situation is similar to that of last year, with the University giving out parking tickets to staff, and the Students' Administrative Council carefully allotting about 85 stickers for student parking in the area north of Hart House Tower.

The Superintendent's Office in Simcoe Hall has already issued approximately 1300 stickers, a figure identical with the number of stickers issued by Sept. 21 last year. A survey made last year by The Varsity revealed that the reserved parking areas can accommodate about 450 cars, or roughly one-third of the number of stickers issued. The administration has done nothing to improve this condition.

The SAC is issuing stickers similar to those provided last year, but printed in blue instead of black. Although many holders of last year's stickers are attempting to use them again this year, application for parking space must be made annually.

Last year, cars in the SAC parking space were a severe impediment to pedestrians on the walk west of Hart House, as bumpers projected more than one foot over the narrow sidewalk. This year with each sticker issued, the SAC requires the receiver to swear that he will park at least one foot from the curb.

National SCM Meet Students In New Home

After 20 years of planning, the Student Christian Movement of Canada and the local SCM have recently acquired offices near the University that also provide a student service centre. The SCM has rented 143 Bloor St. (the former Phi Delta Theta Fraternity House) from Victoria University for five years.

The building has been completely renovated and will provide space for luncheons, receptions and for student discussion groups. There are two large reception rooms and kitchen on the first floor, while the basement will contain a tuck shop and other rooms for the students.

The national SCM office has been moved from Bedford St. to the third floor of the new Toronto SCM building.

There is a reception in the building at 4:00 p.m. for Skule, Nursing, and Physio and Occupational Therapy today. On Sunday Vic and Forestry will be welcomed and on Monday there will be a reception for U.C., P.H.E., Pre-Meds and Architecture.

Peace At Last In Peace Council

The University of Toronto Peace Council has a completely new executive this fall. This is the result of an unusual coup carried out last spring by a number of engineers and other interested students during the council's annual nominations meeting.

About sixty students, mainly from the campus political clubs and the engineering faculty, showed up at the meeting, which was held in the basement of University College.

Council President Don Anderson was engaged in a battle of wits and constitutional questions and it was soon apparent that he had never read the Council's constitution and couldn't even find one. When an Engineer produced one it turned out that anyone could join for fifty cents without accepting the Stockholm Peace Petition.

The reformers then passed the hat, listed the members as they joined, and moved a vote of non-confidence in the executive. Claiming that the meeting had to be over by two o'clock, Anderson called for adjournments and, after recognizing the votes of the older members, he left the meeting.

The engineers then carried on with the nomination meeting, and planned for the elections the following week. A few days later the old Peace Council had an election of its own and replaced Medsman Anderson as chairman.

About two hundred students showed up at the elections with 64 members of the reformed peace Council voting. Dennis Bishop, III SPS, was elected to head the new executive, which consisted of students from many different departments of the University.

When the two executives were turned in to the Students' Administrative Council for recognition, no decision could be reached. The matter went behind the closed doors of the University Caput for settlement. After two weeks of considerable debate the executive as headed by Dennis Bishop and his Reformers was found to be the only one that could be constitutionally recognized, and it rests at that.

Bishop says he intends to carry on the Peace Council with a good publicity drive and meetings that will be addressed by many non-political speakers genuinely interested in working for peace.

No Haze Daze More Studying For McGill U

McGill freshmen this fall were given a chance to meet their professors on an academic footing without the distraction of hazing, parties and the usual college rah-rah, as they returned to the compus a week ahead of other students.

The purpose of the new policy is to impress upon the freshmen that the prime occupation of the student is studying. McGill University authorities, alarmed by the large number of examination failures last spring, have decided on the new tack to free freshies from the adverse influence of their senfors, who in the past have been notable for illustrating that play need not necessarily come second to work.

In addition, the authorities have decided to make incompleteed assignments a possible reason for expulsion.

The McGill authorities hope that the restrained and gentle introduction to campus life which this year's freshmen will receive will make a lasting impression.

Warden's Aide

Overdue Changes?

"Hart House, as a totality, is to me a synthesis of beauty and function and I consider it a great honor to have been asked to become Assistant Warden this year," said David Gardner in a recent interview.

"Born, bred and stuck-in," is the way David described his early life in Toronto. He attended Lawrence Park Collegiate where, besides being president of the Dramatic Society, cheer leader, valedictorian, Lawson Cup winner for proficiency, he also broke the track and field record in the shot-put.

In 1946 he enrolled at Victoria College in Art and Archaeology from whence he graduated in 1950. In his final year he was president of the Victoria Dramatic Society and chairman of the U. of T. Drama committee and was also a Vic Moss scholarship candidate for the class of 50. David Gardner, during his extra-curricular activities gave an outstanding performance in the field of dramatics.

At high school he won the Ontario Dramatic Verse Speaking contest in 1946. He played in 7 of the 14 Robert Gill productions at Hart House from '46 to '50. His most important roles included Marc Antony in Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," Nicholas the young professor in Davies' "Fortune My Foe," and Othello in Shakespeare's "Othello." He also took an active part in Vic Drama productions.

Commenting on his position as Assistant Warden at Hart House, Gardner said "My purpose here is to act as a liaison between Warden Ignatieff and the male undergraduates; to help them understand more fully the varied activities under this roof." He added that "It is unfortunate the average student fails to make full use of these opportunities for sounding out their interests in life. Even by taking part in only one sport, or one club, or by the attending of one debate or play or taking part in one art discussion, I feel the standard of the graduate would go up."

On the proposal of admitting co-eds to Hart House, David Gardner remarked that several concessions had been made to them already whereby they can enjoy such activities as the art shows, the Lee Collection, the Sunday Evening Concerts, dances, Athletic Nights and even the odd debate. "But regarding the wholesale invasion of Hart House by the fairer sex, not only would the male sanctuary be disrupted but a building designed for male activities would have to be drastically enlarged."

With regard to university drama, Gardner stated it seemed a shame the U. of T. lacked a course in dramatics. "One need only look," he said, "at the ranks of the nouveau-professionals in the Canadian theatre world to realize the majority are graduates of Mr. Robert Gill and Hart House theatre. For this reason a course in dramatics could be justly recognized and added to the courses in art, music, armhitecture and literature and thereby complete the Faculty of Arts."

Varsity Meeting

Students interested in working on The Varsity should attend a general meeting being held by the staff in Rm. 13, University College, at 1 p.m. today. At this meeting the editors of the paper will explain the functions of the various departments and what work is involved.

The amount of work required to publish a daily paper assures anyone coming to The Varsity that he will have ample opportunity to write, copy read, or help with the other work connected with publishing a daily newspaper.

Students interested in working on The Varsity who cannot come to the meeting today should drop into The Varsity office in Rm. 78 in the basement of U.C. within the next few weeks and have a talk with one of the editors about what they would like to do on the paper.

Mechanical Femineer New Toike Oike Ed

Not to be outdone by The Varsity, which this years boasts a woman Managing Editor for the first time, the Engineering Society last Wednesday published their quarterly The Toike Oike under the editorship of woman.

Toike Oike's new editor is Harriet Grover, IV Mechanical, a petite brown-eyed blonde. She intends to include technical papers written by Skulemen in future issues.

The new magazine is a combination of the old "Oike," former Skule scandal sheet, and the Transactions and Year Book. This occurred when the Engineering Society was unable to bear the financial strain as a regular year book and a newspaper appearing "every now and then."

Regretfully, however, the Engineering Society announced Skulemen may have to purchase future copies of the Toike Oike. Engineering Society President Doug Sherk said, "Costs are rough and we may have to attach a 10c label to any future publications."

USA Draft Gets Harvard

Cambridge, Massachusetts — (exchange) — Enrolment in the Harvard Law School is expected to be around the normal 525-man mark, despite the fact that 200 of the originally accepted men have been drafted. The size of the class was kept normal by admitting another applicant, everytime it was learned that a man had been called to service.

Housing Service

Rooms and Rumors

By PEARL PARNES

A young man named Dennis arrived from Switzerland with $300 in his pocket and a desire to study electrical engineering at the University of Toronto. Within two hours after his contact with the Students' Administrative Council's Housing Service, he had found room and board free in exchange for light duties and a job at the university to enable him to earn enough money to pursue his studies.

This is merely one example of the work done by this student-controlled service. Run by and for students, its primary function is to find adequate and inexpensive accommodation for the students of the university.

"We often have to explain this to homeowners who protest that, by charging our standard prices, they can make no money," explains Charles Iliffe-Dean, Secretary of the Service. An hour in the little office on the second floor of Hart House, complete with two gas lamps, old typewriters, a Frank Carmichael reproduction of two telephones constantly ringing, would convince anyone of the conscientious task done by the staff in weeding out the best accommodation available and forcing owners down to the cheapest prices possible.

"Attitudes of homeowners vary," commented Christa Erdie, a member of the staff. "Sometimes we have to battle with landlords to keep down prices, and then along will come a homeowner who offers the use of her home for $18 a month to help students. We even received a call from a woman who had seen an apartment for rent, remembered her own student days and problems, and called to let us in on it."

Requirements of homeowners also vary. One woman insisted she be listed for "a first year student, quiet, poor, from the west, and a good cook." Many specify abstainers or insist on either a man or a woman. One elderly schoolteacher admitted she would prefer a man but felt she had better take a woman. Another asked for a couple with a child so that her son could earn money baby-sitting. On the whole, however, there has been a great deal of difficulty in getting accommodation for married couples, particularly with children.

"Everyone seems to want to rent spare rooms to single students," said Mr. Iliffe-Dean, "and we are no longer forced to accept anything and everything, as we were immediately after the war."

Students with families are still forced into inconvenient shelters, and there was one point when a young couple entered the Housing Office with a three-months-old baby, threatening in a tearful manner to sleep in the office unless some better accommodation could be found for them.

Discrimination is one of the problems the staff has been faced with. They refuse to list religious or race requirements under any conditions and often have refused to list rooms where the owner has specified a religious group or boasted that her home was in "a nice neighbourhood, not where all the foreigners and Jews live."

Seeking More Books For SAC Exchange

A record was broken yesterday when close to 1500 books were sold in the SAC Book Exchange. Nevertheless the shelves are filled with books on all subjects.

The demand is so great that the main difficulty is to get enough books. Exchange officials urge students to bring in their used books now while the demand is still strong.

During the first week of sales last year, between seven and ten thousand books were sold. Book Exchange officials expect these figures to be topped this year.

Although the Exchange is short of French, History and Political Science texts, officials report they are well stocked with books on every other subject. The turnover of books is rapid and officials ask students to buy their books as early as possible to avoid being disappointed.

Mel Moyer, III C & F., of the Exchange advised students not to become discouraged if they are unable to find what they want. "At least two men are in the store at all times to help students. Only yesterday two studens searched fruitlessly for the same book and had given up the search when an Exchange employee was able to find books for both of them," he pointed out.

A net operating deficit of almost $6,000 last year has forced the University Bookstore to withdraw its discount on sales of text books to students. This was revealed by Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University of Toronto, in a letter released yesterday to E. A. Macdonald, General Secretary of the Students Administrative Council.

A deficit during the year 1949-50 forced the Bookstore to reduce its discount from 10% to 5% on cash sales of texts to students, the President said.

Despite the reduction in discount, the deficit of the Bookstore last year was greater than when the discount was 10%, said Dr. Smith. The decrease in student enrolment accounted for the smaller volume of sales, according to the President.

Although the University did not wish to make a profit on the sale of texts in the Bookstore, Dr. Smith explained that any service department of the University should not be operated at a loss.

For this reason, said Dr. Smith, the University Press was forced to eliminate the discount.

Cleaner Meds Show, Reformed 'Bob' In This Year's College Productions

By DENISE RICHARDS

Some of this year's College shows are still only twinkles in the eyes of their directors; others are almost ready for the traumatic experience of birth. But, whether the scripts are in the embryonic stage, or the casting about to start, the officials in charge of the five college and faculty shows are confident that each will be outstanding in its own way.

The Shows planned for this year are "The U.C. Follies" (University College), "The Bob Revue" (Victoria College), "Dentantics" (The Faculty of Dentistry), "Daffydil Nite" (The Faculty of Medicine), and "Skule Nite" (The Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering). Plans for the All Varsity Revue recently received a setback when the director found it necessary to resign. There will be no definite news about the A.V.R. until the Students' Administrative Council has met.

The oldest College Show on the campus is the U.C. Follies which started life as a U.C. Literary and Athletic Society show — (possible origin of "Leaping Lit."?) — and developed into a College show. The directors of the Follies, Victor Beube (III) and Barbara Cornes (III), promise that there will be entirely original scripts, score, and music this year.

There will be the usual amount of girls with choreography by Cynthia Barrett, and a college orchestra. For dates of casting, which will be starting soon, see future ads in The Varsity.

The "Bob Revue" is a perfect example of emergent evolution (Phil. Id.) this year. The "Scarlet and Gold" and the "Vic. Bob" have been combined for the first time, which will result in the first association of women with the "Bob".

The "Bob" started 79 years ago, when Bob Beare, the janitor of the Victoria College Men's residence gathered Freshmen and Sophomores in his quarters for an evening of entertainment, leading the singing with his violin. This grew into a strictly stag show put on for the Vic Freshmen and did not compete with the Scarlet and Gold, the co-ed College show which started two years ago. George McCowan (IV) and Phelps Bell (III), the directors of the Bob Revue intend to combine the best features of these two shows.

"Skule Nite", the explosive show of the Engineers, will certainly be marked by some "unusual" happening. Two years ago, a prop in the show, a large idol of the Buddha type, was left on the steps of the city hall after a cast party, clutching, in one of its six hands, a note from Connie Smythe to Controller Balfour, who were having a slight tiff over hockey tickets at the time. Balfour's claims that the whole business was a Communist plot hit all the downtown front pages until the donors were identified.

Incidentally, the "idol" was one of the fabulous machines that are the signature of Skule Nite. Their species is the best kept secret on the campus until opening night.

"Dentantics" will feature the dental nurses, who will be doing some eyefilling. The orchestra will be composed of dental students, who "may not be dentists, but are definitely musicians".

The theme, of course, will be greatly concerned with matters of the mouth, and professors who expect to attend are warned that they may recognize themselves onstage.

A "clean show with a medical savour" is the paradox promised by the directors of "Daffydil". The sets will be supplied by the department of Arts as applied to Medicine, which may mean some very realistic interior scenes.

The main difficulty about Daffydil is that there is only one performance, and the tickets usually give out before the Medsmen can provide enough for their dates. However, they will be having a professional orchestra, so a few musicians may be able to see the show from the "pit". (Conservatory registrar, please note.)

Fees, Please

Lining up is still part of the University curriculum, as those who left paying of fees until the last minute will well know. However, line-ups for fees are considerably shorter this year as Simcoe Hall has radically improved its system.

Nominations Open Today For 7 Posts

Nominations are open today and Monday at the engineering stores for the fall by-elections of the Engineering Society. Positions open are for the 1st year vice-president and secretary of the society and for the IIIrd year SAC representative.

Skulemen in the class of 5T5 can run for president, athletic rep and debates club rep for their year.

Another post has been vacated by David Bishop, IV Electrical, who has resigned as chairman of the electrical Club so that he can devote more time to his studies on the reorganized Peace Council.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

To be quite frank, movies shouldn't be here in this space at all this morning. But the Drahma Critic hasn't got his fangs properly honed up yet, so movies it is.

A comment on things to come in films is in order. It is encouraging to note that two widely-acclaimed films, both Hollywood-made, are soon to be seen. One is A PLACE IN THE SUN, the newest version of Dreiser's An American Tragedy. The critical whooping suggests that despite a young, inexperienced cast, the film is several steps above average. Even more promising is Elia Kazan's A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE. The Tennessee Williams play stars Vivien Leigh, along with Marlon (The Men) Brando, Kim Hunter and Karl Malden. The latter three are from the original New York cast. Kim Hunter will probably be best remembered from her innocuous bit as heroine in the Powell-Pressburger opus, STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN, while Malden did a fine bit as the medic in HALLS OF MONTEZUMA.

Other pictures on the horizon are THE BRAVE BULLS, PEOPLE WILL TALK, AN AMERICAN IN PARIS, and the TALES OF HOFFMAN. The bullfighting film is Robert (All the King's Men) Rossen's production based on the Tom Lea novel and stars Mel Ferrer. PEOPLE WILL TALK is the latest Joe Mankiewicz film, the successor to his ALL ABOUT EVE. AN AMERICAN IN PARIS is the newest Gene Kelly musical with lavish MGM technicolor production and George Gershwin music backing the dynamic Kelly dancing. And TALES OF HOFFMAN is the newest Powell-Pressburger effort, the last ones being THE RED SHOES and THE SMALL BACK ROOM.

Last night was spent on the double bill of CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA and THE WAY AHEAD. Some will say that a double bill of this weight is a lot to take, and they have a point. It is a lot of movie. But it is a lot of fine movie.

The four Odeon neighborhood theatres are featuring this bill right now, and it deserves recommendation. The GBS play gets an expensive production which sometimes seems to drag. But Claude Rains, who is every inch Julius Caesar (Shaw variety), and Vivien Leigh as the kittenish and adolescent Cleopatra, make the picture fun. CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA does not come up to the other Gabriel Pascal versions of Shaw plays, PYGMALION and MAJOR BARBARA — they were very tidy pictures. But both for sound acting from the stars and an excellent British cast which does justice by Shaw, and an eye-filling production, the film is worth catching.

THE WAY AHEAD was made during the war by Carol Reed, just then coming up as a top British director. David Niven is the only name that is well-known although Leo Genn, Stanley Holloway, John Laurie and many other familiar faces are present as members of a conscripted platoon whose conversion from civilians into fighting men makes up the story.

There is honesty and sincerity in THE WAY AHEAD that makes you realize what the successful American-made BATTLEGROUND lacked. In fact, among American war pictures only the Lewis Milestone-made films, ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT and the recently re-released and re-titled SALERNO BEACHHEAD (A Walk in the Sun), have that same feeling of genuine-ness.

NFCUS AND YOU

YOU ARE A MEMBER OF NFCUS! DO YOU KNOW WHAT IT IS? WHAT IT DOES FOR YOU FOR THE TWENTY CENTS YOU PAY TO IT?

NFCUS is primarily an organization devoted to serving university students across the country, to the idea of improved student conditions on a national level. "Our entire programme must be evaluated," says Arthur Mauro, immediate past president of NFCUS, "on a basis of what will be most beneficial to Canadian University students."

Two projects serving the students of this country are the regional exchange plan and the annual compilation of comparative text-book prices at universities across the country. The latter project (begun and carried out by the University of Toronto NFCUS Committee) aims to bring prices into line and to reduce text costs if possible at all the universities which are members of NFCUS.

In the past the report of current prices showed great variations in the costs of texts in various parts of Canada and even between Hamilton and Toronto. The latter city proved to have the highest price for texts.

Through the report several universities succeeded in getting reductions in costs while recommendation was made to several university NFCUS committees to look into the possibility of starting a campus or cooperative bookstore for students if one was not already in existence.

The last report on text-book costs to the NFCUS conference in London recommended that the government be approached by the national executive about revising its discriminatory and inconsistent duty regulations on texts. "It is recommended," the report went on, "that the government be asked to admit all educational books, including dictionaries, duty free. The federal sales tax on books does not seem justifiable. In some cases non-educational books are exempted while law books and dictionaries are taxed."

However, the most important and practicable recommendation was that fuller use be made of the exemption of "adopted texts" from duty and sales taxes through the preparation of comprehensive lists by university faculties. Adopted texts refer to those books that are on the curriculum of any school in Canada for use as texts or works of reference.

All such books are free from duty. It was recommended that the NFCUS committees seek to have such a list prepared by each professor or department and included in the calendar.

NFCUS regional scholarships enable students to spend their penultimate year at universities in one of three sections of the country. Last year nine students took advantage of the plan.

A recommendation was made that the local NFCUS committees be asked to approach their respective registrars with the aim of having the inter-regional scholarship plan included in their calendar.

Toronto Mandates

Three specific mandates were accepted by the University of Toronto NFCUS committee at the conference. Most important of these is the International Activities Commission, whose chairman is to be Syd Wax, president of the U. of T. Student Council. He takes over the position held by Denis Lazure of the University of Montreal last year.

Toronto's second task is to investigate the possibility of securing a national radio program for NFCUS, preferably celebrating national student day, November 17th.

Finally, on its own recommendation, Toronto offered to compile a brief on living conditions, general tuition and text costs, the opportunity for scholarships and bursaries for all institutions of higher learning in Ontario. This brief is to be distributed to all secondary schools in Ontario to further the equality of opportunity in Ontario for education.

"We want to prepare a pamphlet that will give prospective university students some means whereby he can compare the costs of courses and living at various Ontario universities," Joan Presant, chairman of the Toronto NFCUS told the commission at the conference. "In this way the student can better choose which university he wishes to attend. If we can work it out for Ontario we hope to expand the service to a national scale."

Last year the Toronto NFCUS committee had three specific tasks assigned. It organized a national student travel service for the second year, was responsible for the national debating finals and a brief on comparative text book costs at universities across the country. The committee also arranged several regional scholarships for Toronto students to study at other Canadian universities, and co-sponsored with ISS the Carabin exchange weekend between the University of Toronto and the University of Montreal.

American Rep

Don't apologize for your international program nor subordinate it to your national projects, Bill Denzer, newly elected president of the United States National Student Association, told the delegates at the annual conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students at London recently.

The USNSA is the American counterpart of the NFCUS. Three representatives of the American organization attended the NFCUS conference as visitors.

Outside of Denzer's speech on suggestions for cooperation between Canadian and American student unions through seminars, travel and student weekend exchanges, the US delegation took no active part in the conference.

Denzer stressed that American and Canadian students can do a great deal together to accomplish peace.

Regarding the USNSA attitude to the communist-dominated International Union of Students, Denzer said that there are indications of a change of attitude in IUS, "But how permanent a change is it?" he added. "We in the USNSA do not feel that the IUS can change. However we should continue to send representatives to the IUS council and executive meetings, and press for changes if only to prove that they cannot change."

It has been the policy of the American student association to sit back and wait to see what happens, Denzer continued. But we can't wait any longer.

Because the USNSA believes that the IUS is neither democratic nor representative and that it cannot become so, Denzer said that his organization believed that, a new, truly representative and democratic, international student organization must be set immediately up with a permanent international secretariat and a positive, constructive policy.

Finances

Several suggestions for increasing the number of sources for additional income for the NFCUS were presented in commission by the new permanent secretary-treasurer, Yves Pilon, and were later approved at the plenary session.

Pilon reported that in 1946 the NFCUS president approached the National Council of Canadian Universities, a body of university administrative officers, with the proposal that one dollar of each student's university fee be given to the NFCUS. He received some support from that body for his plan, Pilon said.

The executive on the basis of this report was mandated to approach NCCU relative to the fee to be included in student's tuition fees and returned to NFCUS.

At present the NFCUS fee is paid by the student council on the basis of twenty cents per student.

Other sources of additional income recommended included a conference registration fee, philanthropic sources, a travel service, an annual publication, and social activities already practiced on some campi.

Travel Service

A national student travel service is to be established at the national office of the NFCUS for students travelling abroad.

For the past two years the University of Toronto NFCUS committee has been in charge of arranging bookings on ships travelling to Europe for Canadian University students. However only 24 students took advantage of this service during the past summer while 240 passages were obtained. Part of the reason for the lack of response was due, it was felt, to the lack of publicity on the various campi and the late announcement of the bookings. However, Robert Johnson, past NFCUS secretary, said in his report on the travel service that fewer students were going to Europe last summer.

The national secretary-treasurer has been empowered to arrange a booking service for the coming summer. Representatives from the United States and British student union travel service both told the conference that they would give every assistance possible in helping the NFCUS to establish a permanent travel service.

John Harrison, United States representative of the British National Union of Students in New York, told the delegates in an address that the adequate formation of a travel service depended on a good idea of the number of students who will want passage. It is only the volume of bookings that will make the service successful and profitable, he said.

Last year the BNUS operated a charter plane service between North America for students at reduced rates.

Duties of Mr. Pilon regarding the establishment of a permanent travel service include bringing up to date the booklet published by the University of Manitoba NFCUS committee entitled "So You're Going to Europe." It contained information on money, clothes to wear, and other information for a prospective student traveller abroad.

Pilon embodied his suggestion in a report to the conference which was later adopted. They include acquiring scenic and descriptive publications of the countries, cities and sites of the student's proposed intinerary, and helping him acquire passage, passports and visas.

Pilon stressed, however, that the success of a travel service depends entirely on the cooperation of the local NFCUS committees.

A recommendation that information about available bookings be in the hands of the local NFCUS committees before January 1 was adopted by the conference to ensure that adequate publicity is given.

Pilon was also requested to work closely with the American and British student travel services to acquire the lowest rates possible.

If the travel bureau can be put on a permanent footing with adequate volume, it will prove a major source of additional income for the NFCUS, Harrison said.

Seminar

McGill University will continue its attempt to obtain funds for a NFCUS-sponsored summer seminar. For three weeks 100 students from NFCUS universities across the country will gather for a series of lectures and discussions designed to promote greater understanding among Canadian students and to make them more familiar with the mechanics of their country.

For the past two years the seminar had to be cancelled because funds were not forthcoming from provincial sources. "But it is not an impossibility by a long shot," a former McGill NFCUS committee chairman reported.

By last February the McGill NFCUS committee had arranged for all the details of the seminar including a program of lectures, topics and costs. However, it had to cancel plans for this past summer because of insufficient time in which to approach the provincial governments for funds, on the proposed basis of $100 for each student attending.

There was some discussion among the delegates at London about the advisability of cancelling plans for the seminar entirely because of impracticability, and its doubtful value because of the limited number of students who could attend. However it was generally agreed that it would prove its worth by bringing Canadian students together to live, work and study as well as providing an opportunity for exchanging and discussing common ideas.

The McGill committee was requested to investigate possible sources of money for the seminar through private sources, philanthropic foundations or the federal government.

A new aspect of the seminar question is a brief containing a full exposition of the purposes, aims and program of a national seminar, garnered from the universities across the country. The brief will then be sent to the authorities at all NFCUS universities for their criticism and later published. In this way, it is hoped to be able to secure more support for the seminar.

YVES PILON

Office

Yves Pilon, new permanent secretary treasurer of the NFCUS came out of the conference with a large pile of work to carry on his shoulders. It was work that has been piling up or left undone in the past by the NFCUS because the organization has had neither a permanent headquarters nor a permanent secretary.

Now however, Pilon will represent the co-ordinating link for all the plans and activities of the organization and will help them to be carried out more efficiently.

An outgrowth of the NFCUS fee raise adopted by all the universities except one, the national office and the employment of a full time paid secretary should give the federation a more solid foundation.

One result of the conference is to make the national office a virtual clearing house and filing cabinet for an untold amount of paper material. It will serve as a centre for the exchange of information between universities both in Canada and abroad, as well as providing literature about the history of the organization, committee reports and travel folders.

Among the duties assigned to Pilon are the responsibility for establishing a travel service for Canadian university students, for being the permanent general secretary of the Canadian University Debating Association, and for supplying all the Canadian university newspapers with regular news releases on the activities of the NFCUS.

NFCUS BRIEFS

At the annual NFCUS conference the following recommendations were approved by the delegates:

—that the second Austrian goodwill tour of North America be promoted by NFCUS. This tour of Austrian students takes the form of a program of folk songs and dances performed by Austrian students and teachers.

—McMaster University accepted the task of investigating the possibility of obtaining reductions in royalties for campus stage productions.

—The national office is to act as a centre for the exchange of information between the various universities and is to build up a file of information on student constitutions, handbook, financial and athletic setups, and other relative items.

—Ottawa University accepted a mandate to compile a history of NFCUS. The history is to include a comprehensive archive of the past activities of NFCUS scattered among university committees.

—The organization of a national system of purchase cards was deemed impossible on a national scale because of fair trade laws prevailing in many provinces. The implementation of such a scheme was left to local committees. Such a scheme would allow a student to buy goods at a reduced rate on presentation of a card.

—The next annual NFCUS conference should be held at the same place and within the same week as the national ISS conference in order to provide further cooperation between the two organizations and to provide more adequate representation at the latter conference because of the reduced travelling expenses for distant universities. The national executive of NFCUS is to negotiate with ISS in this matter.

—St. Dunstan's College, Charlottetown, P.E.I., and Memorial College, St. Johns, Newfoundland, are to be invited to join NFCUS as associate members. Though these colleges will receive no material benefits from NFCUS, it was felt that they should be represented in the confederation and be allowed to attend the conference as guests. Both colleges indicated their wish to join on such a basis previous to the conference. As associate members they will receive NFCUS literature.

—It was recommended that the individual NFCUS committees provide service to students visiting their centre in the summer. This service would include accommodation, entertainment and generally look after the students. If possible the local committees were asked to help these students secure summer employment in that centre. (Many students, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, spend the summer working in a city where they can improve their French or English as the case may be.)

—British Columbia accepted a mandate to investigate the needs of students. The report would include fees, cost of living, and summer employment as a means toward implementation of the Massey Report so that "no Canadian student be prevented by financial need from attending or completing his university course because of financial need."

—It was recommended that the executive of NFCUS look into the exemption of university fees from income tax for both parents and students, a power that lies with the discretion of the f[illegible] minister personally, and al[illegible]ption for university students [illegible]employment insurance.

—The 25th anniversary celebration of the founding of the NFCUS on a national and regional basis is to be eliminated and is left to the local committees.

—The University of Western Ontario requested and was given the job of publishing the second NFCUS yearbook, on the condition that it pay for itself. Mel Platt, president of the UWO sudent council assured the conference that enough advertising could be found to make the yearbook pay for itself. This would allow free distribution to students at NFCUS universities across the country.

Queen's

Queen's University will continue to take no part in NFCUS activities for the second year. Failure to get approval of a hike in student council fees before students registered prevents Queen's from paying the twenty cents per student which is the requisite for being a full member.

However the delegates at the NFCUS conference agreed that if the Queen's student council could pay the six cents per student as it did two years ago, they could remain an affiliate member until next year. The Queen's observer said that if the council raise is approved, they will be able to become a full member at that time.

The question of the raise in fees will be discussed by the university authorities today.

As Blues Beat Beaches

Bill McFarlane, star runner of last year's Intermediates, is up with the Senior Blues this season and from present indications will be one of Varsity's big threats in their drive for the Yates Cup. In the above picture McFarlane is being brought down by Balmy Beach tacklers after a fine run-back of a kick-off. That's Bruce Gillan finally dragging down the elusive Blue runner, with Steve Pruski assisting. Matti Ferrentino, former University of Buffalo star, is closing in. The Blues won the exhibition tilt, their home opener, by a 16-11 score.

McMaster Here Tomorrow For Exhibition Football Tilt

With their hearts set on winning a berth in Senior Intercollegiate sport circles, the McMaster University football squad will pay the Blues a social visit tomorrow afternoon at Varsity Stadium. A win or even a good showing against the Blues would give the Macmen a good argument in their fight for admission to the league.

McMaster dropped a 7-3 decision to the Golden Gaels from Queen's last Saturday in their only exhibition game of the season, but according to Varsity spotters who attended the contest, the Hamilton squad had the edge of the play for the major part of the afternoon.

Al Smith, formerly on the staff of Weston Collegiate and Ottawa Tech is the Marauder mentor and the first full-time football coach that McMaster has employed. Al started his football with the Guelph Aggies where he starred in the backfield as a kicker and passer. He also put in some time on the Argo lineup before joining the air force.

Some of the bright lights in the Mac attack are Brian Timmis Jr. and Alex Ponton whose famous fathers teed off against each other on football fields in Eastern Ontario more than twenty years ago. Timmis Sr. was a famous plunging back for Hamilton, and Ponton a renowned quarter of the Balmy Beach club.

Danny Masulka, a 220 pound freshman who hails from St. Catharines and was a schoolmate of Varsity's Steve Oneschuck is one of the stalwarts of the McMaster line. Lorne Wrigglesworth, who starred for the Marauders at quarter last season will be performing those duties again tomorrow.

Varsity fans will be in for an interesting afternoon tomorrow as the McMaster backfield formation is something entirely new. Using a system that could loosely be described as a weird variation of the T, the Marauders often have two and three men in motion on spinners and fakes. The result is novel to say the least.

Dissatisfied with both the pass attack and the pass defence exhibited by the Blues against the Beaches Wednesday, coach Masterson will probably take the opportunity to test his team's pass know-how should the weatherman grant him a suitable day tomorrow. There was a gaping hole down the Blue middle on a couple of occasions last Wednesday afternoon that will have to be remedied before the Intercollegiate schedule opens a week from tomorrow in Montreal.

The only thing we know for a fact is that there had better be some cheerleaders in attendance this game or the Blue and White Society will be looking for a new place to hang its hat.

The Blues have been exceptionally lucky, at least by last year's standards, as far as injuries are concerned. Aside from a couple of troublesome leg muscles owned by Bill McFarlane and Bill Bewley, the Blue trainer seems to have few things on his mind. There seems no explanation for this other than the fact that the coach sleeps with his fingers crossed.

Trinity Beats Gun Football Practices Well Under Way

Trinity's Red and Black football squad have been out practicing all this week in preparation for the Intramural opener October 15. The Buttery boys will be under the direction of Chad Bark again this year and the team already is taking shape. Jim Linklater, who led the Trinity line last season, is unable to play this year, and is now coaching the line.

Coach Bark plans to use the same formation as last year in the backfield but is experimenting with a split line on the strong side. Last year's quarter, Rick Gaunt, is up with the Intermediate Blues, but his shoes are being adequately filled by Doug Andison. Red was out for some of last season with a broken arm and appeared briefly in the Mulock Cup final on defence and in a place kicking role. He is pitching some beautiful passes in the practices, and if he can carry on in league competition the Trinity boys should be a strong contender to repeat as Group III champions.

The team returns pretty well intact, but several high school stars are expecting to displace some of the returnees from their positions. Bill Corcoran, 6' 4" end on the pass-minded UTS team of last year, is a sharp prospect.

Chad hopes to use the two-platoon system as he did last year, but will abandon the idea if he feels he lacks the necessary reserves.

Speaking of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Applicants for Varsity track, the Intercollegiate sport which ranks second only to football in the fall, have already begun working out at the stadium under the watchful eye of Hal Brown. This is no time to start predicting intercollegiate championships (we did that last year just the day before the meet and turned out very, very wrong), but the team looks right now like it will be pretty solid, when last year's team, which returns nearly intact, is strengthened by the freshman stars who are, or we hope, will be turning out this week and next.

The middle distances will be especially strong. Murray Gaziuk, the best in his class to come to Varsity for some time, has done the 880 under 1:57 and should equal or better that mark this fall. He can run a good mile too (broke the interfaculty indoor record last year with 4:19.6) but will likely leave that race to Chuck Wortman, Herb Tilson, and one or two others who may come up with good efforts. Wortman and Tilson, with the possible additions of George McMullin if he can get away from his post-grad studies, will also be good bets for the three mile.

In the quarter mile, Eric Kofmel, who did 52 flat at Michigan State last year, will be good if he gets in shape. John Dashwood played rugger instead last year, but ran the quarter well indoors, and Jim Bassingthwaighte might be a man to note if you can spell his name. Both these men will also double in the half mile.

The situation regarding sprinters is not so rosy. Monty Harris did the hundred in 10.4 last year in the TSSAA. Old stand-bys like Mike Zuberec, and sophs like Clint Husband and Hugh Sutherland may turn out. If Bob Dale and Greg McFadden can leave football long enough to run, they may turn the trick.

Ron Carr and Leon Smith will do at least 5'9" in the high jump, but broad jumping looks uncertain just now. Ed Bednarz of York Memorial is out and putting the shot just under 40 feet, has done about 42. Endel Tulving throws a pretty fair discus, and Phil Henderson, who won the javelin last year at McGill after just learning how to throw it a couple of weeks before, should be out soon. No very good pole vaulters are at hand.

So the picture in field events shows one or two adequate performers in nearly every event, but little depth. No hurdlers are around who can fill Bill Farlinger's shoes, but Bob Bazos might come out if his back-bone behaves, and Tauno Ojala is a long-legged Finlander who may turn out very well.

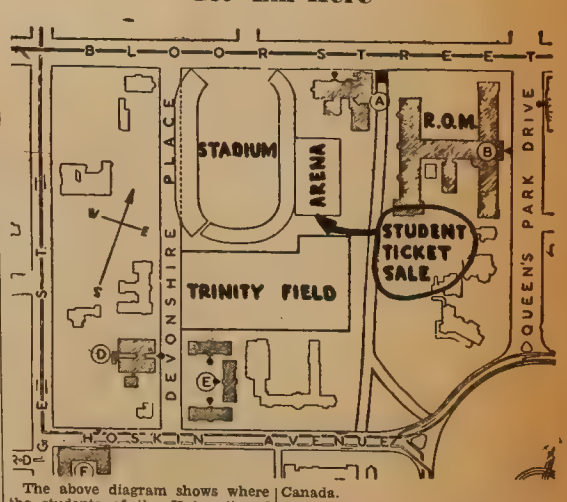
Hal Brown is sure there are many students here, new or old, who could do just as well as the athletes if they were to train during the month between now and the meet. The records we have mentioned are the performers' best times, made at the peak of condition. None of them could go out and do them today.

The track has been renovated, with drainage pipes installed, and is so hard that Hal has the boys doing most of their running on the grass for the first week in order to avoid shin splints.

Line Coach

Pictured above is Moose Mustard, former Varsity lineman and all-Canadian star middle two seasons ago, who yesterday was appointed line coach of the Blues.

Curtis, Whaley To Coach UC



University College has signed two of the nation's best football players to coach the UC entry in the Interfaculty loop. Ulysses Curtis will coach the backfield and Marvin (Stretch) Whaley will coach the line. They will begin practices Monday.

Curtis and Whaley are both members of last year's Dominion Championship Argo team. Curtis graduated in PHE at Florida A and M, and Whaley took physical Education at Morgan State College.

About 25 prospects were out yesterday on the back campus, even though regular practices will not begin till Monday. There will be another such informal work-out today. Trying out for quarter and throwing well were Pete Nichols and Ken Wass of last year's squad, and Gerry Henderson of the hockey Blues, in addition to a couple of freshmen passers.

Art Cringan, star guard last year with the intermediates, will play for UC due to unforeseen academic difficulties.

Get 'Em Here

The above diagram shows where the students of the University of Toronto can obtain the biggest bargain in football tickets that has ever been offered. Upon presentation of one admit-to-lectures card (it must be the student's own) and the sum of $1.50 the rugby fan can obtain ducats to four games featuring the Blues against the other four top Intercollegiate teams in Canada.

Tickets are on sale from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. today and each book contains an admission to the games with McMaster, Western, Queen's and McGill. The nominal fee charged by the Athletic Association for the tickets works out to only 37½ cents per game or about one-fifth of the price charged to the public.

New Plays Run 8 Days At Theatre

A change in the coming theatre season schedule at Hart House was announced yesterday by Robert Gill. A new policy has been adopted with regard to the number of performances that will be given. This year, there will be eight performances per play instead of the previous seven. Opening nights will be on Fridays, and the play will run until the next Saturday.

The first play of the season will be "The Mad Woman of Chaillot," by Giradoux. It will open on October 26 and will be followed by a double bill, "The Boy with a Cart" and "A Phoenix Too Frequent" both by Christopher Fry. In January, "Pygmalion" will be presented, and late in February "Richard II."

Gill wished to stress the fact that he is reading for all the plays now with exception of "Mad Woman" which is going into immediate rehersal. "This year there are quite a few parts for first year students," he said. "If you are interested telephone MI 7193 for an appointment or drop in personally."

Give $1000 First Prizes In Design Competition

The National Industrial Design Committee, in co-operation with the Aluminum Company of Canada, the Canadian Lumbermen's Association and the National Gallery of Canada, has announced that it will stage a second product design competition. The purpose of the competition is to stimulate interest in good industrial design among the public, the designers and manufacturers, and the retailers and merchants.

The contest is for good designs in four categories of articles in wood and aluminum suitable for mass production by available manufacturing processes in Canada. The specific items required are, namely: chairs, one in wood, one in aluminum; a writing-desk in wood; a set of front-door hardware in aluminum. In each division of the competition there will be a first prize of $1,000, a second prize of $500, and a third prize of $250.

The judges will be: Prof. E. A. Alicut, head of the department of Mechanical Engineering, University of Toronto; G. Allan Burton, General Manager, Robert Simpson Company, Toronto; J. B. Parkin, President, Association of Canadian Designers, Toronto; George Nelson, prominent United States furniture designer, New York; J. S. Luck, designer for the Aluminum Laboratories Limited, Kingston, Ontario.

Entry forms for the contest are available from Donald W. Buchanan, Secretary, National Industrial Design Committee, National Gallery of Canada, Ottawa. The closing date for the submission of designs is Jan. 15, 1952.

No Visitors!

At its recent conference in London, The National Federation of Canadian University Students decided to turn down a proposal made by retiring International Affairs Commission chairman Denis Lazure (University of Montreal) that an invitation extended by Lazure to a group of Soviet students to visit Canada be ratified by the National Federation.

The proposal would have seen a group of Russian students come to Canada this year for a tour, and a group of Canadian students go to Russia to return the visit. The NFCUS Conference turned thumbs down on the proposal.

Ordinarily such decisions are made, and then forgotten. This is one instance of the traditional NFCUS reaction to controversial issues that should come under some close scrutiny.

It would be difficult to say that the proposal was vetoed for one definite reason or another. But the impression stands out that the reasons were hardly adequate: "They wouldn't be allowed on our campus," "They will give NFCUS bad publicity," "If NFCUS does this it may get a Red reputation and that will finish it for twenty-five years!"

To say that the representatives of the various universities who make up NFCUS exhibited an attitude which in a sense merely provides the communist-dominated International Union of Students with ready-made propaganda would not be far off the mark. But that is only one aspect of the situation.

If the university students of this country are afraid, for one reason or another, to bring into this country for visits young men and women whose ideas are diametrically opposed to ours, then surely we have lost a large degree of faith in ourselves and in our democratic institutions. If we are aware of some of the large political issues that face us, and of the vast numbers of carefully trained people who are the opposition, then we should from time to time welcome the opportunity to bring them to Canada, and meet them on our home ground.

A little honest controversy over the visit of some dyed-in-the-wool Russian communists might be very good for the too often smug, isolationist tendencies that the Canadian student has shown so willingly and so frequently during these past five years.

In spite of the fact that this editorial might seem to follow rather closely the current communist line on this issue, we would rather enjoy the prospect of a Russian communist student entering the lists in a Hart House debate.

Canadian student leaders might well take another look at the principles and ideas which are currently directing their actions. The ostrich who sticks his neck out only to the point where his head is well buried in the sand, should realize he is in danger of losing his plumage.

New Toike Oike

It's always a pleasant task to welcome to the ranks of undergraduate publishing a new work. Although today we are welcoming not a new, but a reorganized publication, it is still one of our happier editorial tasks.

Toike Oike, published by the Engineering Society, which "every now and then" has graced the campus, comes to us in a new dress. To be produced quarterly, it is in a shiny magazine format, pleasing to the eye and, we understand, easy on the purse. The new Toike Oike has gathered in some of the advertisers from the now defunct Transactions and Yearbook, and hopes to make the Oike a free publication.

To the Toike Oike staff, and its charming editor, The Varsity extends its congratulations. We are looking forward to the November issue.

Music, Music, Music

A strong preference for Gilbert and Sullivan, and an operetta-director who played the piano with one hand and conducted with the other, came up in a recent survey of music on Canadian campuses conducted by The Varsity, University of Toronto.

Gilbert and Sullivan productions were performed in the 1950-51 year at four Canadian universities, Dalhousie, McMaster, Toronto and Acadia. Dalhousie's production of the "Mikado" ran for four days to capacity audiences. It had a cast of nearly one hundred students and was accompanied by the University's own 25-piece orchestra. The Dalhousie Club has the advantage of working under an unlimited budget, because the operetta is well received on the campus and makes money.

Two years ago, 70 members of the University of Alberta Mixed Chorus took a ten-day, 1,300-mile tour of eight Alberta communities, and appeared before 4,500 patrons. The tour came right on the tail of spring exams and aroused enthusiasm throughout the province, and preparations are in hand to make it an annual event.

Students at Mount Allison University join with people from neighbouring towns in the Junior and Senior Symphony Orchestras, which put on concerts before the student body. Attendance at such concerts all over Canada is poor to fair, as university students seem to prefer light music and operettas to the longhair stuff. Attendance at serious music performances and cultural affairs in general appears to be best at universities where concert and extra lecture costs are covered in the student fees.

This is the case at Western and Mount Allison. At Western the Nine O'clock Committee which arranges Sunday evening concerts) receives one dollar a head from student fees. Attendance at the five concerts held last year was good. At Mount Allison, a Concert and Lecture card is paid for out of the general fee.

The Acadia Athenaeum told about a professional production of "La Traviata," which also visited the Dalhousie campus, of which the "most amazing aspect was the accompanist, who played the intricate accompaniment with one hand and directed the performance with the other." The report said that such a display of virtuosity and energy almost made one forget the absence of an orchestra. Another Acadia music feature last year was the Quantz Trio, a combination of piano, flute and cello, whose effect is described in the Athenaeum as "unusual but remarkable."

Music has been used as a way of raising money on several campi. At Dalhousie, the "Black and Gold Revue" was presented this year to help raise the students' $10,000 quota for a new rink. University of Toronto raised close to $500 last year in a band contest where votes were cast in hard cash. The money raised in this new scheme was dedicated to aid for Asian universities. Winner of the contest was the notorious Lady Godiva Memorial Band, which prefers discords to legitimate chords, and offers a fair indication of U. of T. musical taste.

All across Canada originality seems to be the key-note in student productions. Western's "Purple Patches," Dalhousie's "Black and Gold," Montreal's "Bleu et Or," and Acadia's "Follies" (now extinct) are student-produced and student-written to a very large extent, as are many of the minor campus shows.

In the 1948-49 school year, the University of Toronto's Trinity College's Keith McMillan and Ron Bryden wrote a complete show, "Saints Alive," and in 1949-50 Saskatchewan's Neil Harris wrote and produced a six-act musical revue called "If You Please." Alberta's Music Club presents monthly recitals and guest artists. Audrey Farnell, a soprano who began her music career at the Mount Allison Conservatory, returned to her alma mater two years ago as guest artist. Ar[illegible] of course, people whistle wherever you go.

CYNTHIA CONCLUDED

I became aware of a Chinese screen blocking off one corner of the apartment. From behind it came sounds of garters playfully snapped, of soprano giggles and of baritone promises of undying love.

"Who's there?" I asked Cynthia.

Just my room-mate, Laura Larue, and a business acquaintance."

I instantly recognized the name of the diseuse at the Libido Lounge, the most notorious spot on Yonge Street.

"But I want to talk about us," murmured Cynthia. "Come closer." Nervously twisting my toque, I advanced toward Cynthia.

"I called to give you back your Kinsey, and to tell you about the first of a series of lectures on Wolf Wisdom given by the chief physician of a leading Toronto hospital to more than 60 girls in Wymilwood at 5 o'clock today," said Cynthia, pausing for breath.

"Yes," I countered brilliantly, "I read about it in The Varsity."

"Have you ever had a course on sex?" asked Cynthia.

I stammered something about reading The Varsity regularly. Obviously something deep inside Cynthia was awakening; she seemed bent on exploring her potentialities.

"What you need is a course," she said. "I'll take notes at the lectures, and pass them on to you. I'll be your tutor."

"But I already have 16 hours of lectures a week," I protested.

"It won't take you long. You can probably try your final exams this week."

"No," I said firmly.

"Just think," said Cynthia, seizing my hand. "At this time next week you may be doing post-graduate studies."

"No," I said.

Before I could utter a protest, Cynthia kissed me roughly, impetuously, on my ruby lips. I realized something horrible might happen, and that I must never again allow myself to be kissed in such abandoned fashion. I'm a nice boy.

I struggled out of Cynthia's embrace, repelled by her craven behaviour, and ran out of the apartment, stifling a sob, I was almost sick with disillusion.

When I reached the street, I took a deep breath of pure, fresh air, as I reflected on my narrow escape. Cynthia and I were through, and I was glad. After all, it could never have been. We have nothing in common; she's a girl and I'm a boy.

Hard Times

Cambridge, Massachusetts, Exchange: Yale students will not only have to keep their own rooms clean this year, but will also have a bi-weekly inspection to see that they do it. "If the rooms look like pig pens," said Business Manager C. Hamilton Sanford, "it will be because we have pigs living in them."

It was learned that the university has further decreed that no student may engage private aid to clean his room. Disciplinary action will be taken in cases where there are flagrant and repeated breaches of sanitary requirements.

The discontinuance of maid service was first announced last May. In the pre-war days, even beds were made, but since the war maid service had considerably decreased.

A considerable reduction in the number of college guards has also been effected. Beginning this year, there will be no college guards at any of the residential colleges between the hours of 1 a.m. and 9 a.m. Instead a foot patrol of campus will circulate among the colleges during these hours, according to John H. Bowers, assistant superintendent of the police.

Because colleges will not be as thoroughly patrolled as in the past, students will be completely on their honor not to bring girls into rooms, said Bowers.

Janitors for undergraduate buildings remain however, their only two duties in students' rooms are to empty waste baskets every two days and to vacuum rugs once each month. Last year rugs were vacuumed once a week while waste baskets were emptied each day.

These economies go into effect exactly one year after newly-elected President A. Whitney Griswold declared that Yale, in the non-academic field, must economize in every possible way.

Some positions formerly filled by hired help will now be open to students, with undergraduates replacing hired girls in several instances as elevator operators in university buildings.

Finding that Yale students "seem to have adopted the easy moral standards of society around them," Dean William C. DeVane of Yale College issued a letter of warning against cheating to his vacationing undergraduates in early August:

"I am sure that fierce punishments are not good correctives for this malady," the dean wrote, "but I hold it my duty to warn the student that punishment up to and including dismissal will be meted out in those cases where the cheater is caught."

The dean's letter was sent just before the Army football scandal broke, but the discussion leading up to the strong note occurred at a June faculty meeting.

Yale was preparing to clamp down sharply on class cutting next year, said the dean. Juniors and seniors can no longer "manage their own attendance" but will be limited to 20 cuts each term.

Defeat Luckless McMaster Oneschuk, Rumball Get TD's

By BRUCE MacDONALD

It was a disappointed crowd of Varsity fans that filed out of the Bloor Bowl about 4.30 last Saturday afternoon. They had seen the Blues take a 14-6 decision from the visiting McMaster squad, seen a thrilling 75-yard touchdown run by Steve Oneschuck after he picked up a Mac fumble, and witnessed a Varsity line that looked like a stone wall for most of the game, but the team they had come to see, the team that looked like a Yates Cup winner a few days before against the Beaches simply was not playing that afternoon.

Offensively speaking, the Blues failed to go anywhere in the first half, and it was only McMaster fumbles and some adept recoveries by Varsity that put the Blues out in front and kept them there. McMaster made substantial gains on end sweeps after finding the Blue line a tough nut to crack and along with a polished pass attack that made the Varsity pass defence look woefully inadequate at times kept the Blues on the defensive for more than the first half.

The Blues came out of the dressing room looking more like the team that had upset the Balmy Beach club three short days before and began to take matters into their own hands. A sustained drive in the third quarter ended in a touchdown by Bob Rumball, and had it not been for a couple of tough breaks on pass interceptions, one by Bill Macfarlane and the other by Alex Lawson in the fourth quarter, the scoring in that final stanza might have been an entirely different story.

Lawson's near interception, which was ruled incomplete by the officials, gave Lorne Wrigglesworth, a standout for the losers, a chance to carry over from the Blue ten yard line for McMaster's only major of the game.

The first quarter ended without a score, but as play rolled into the second quarter, Alex Ponton who had been matching kick for kick with Varsity's Al Haig was injured, and Blue superiority in that department began to make itself felt. Haig stood back on the Mac 40 and kicked the first point of the game. McMaster then started their best drive of the game which ended on the Blue 29 yard line when Oneschuck picked up Wrigglesworth's fumble and went all the way down the field for the touchdown. Bewley kicked the extra point.

With only three minutes of play gone in the third quarter, Tom Bird pounced on a McMaster fumble near the visitors' 50 yard line and the Blue machine began to roll. The Blues picked up a first down when McMaster, the defensive team, was penalized for holding. Mandryk pitched a strike to Bird on the Mac 23 for another first. Rumball juggled the ball up to the 12, and then carried again to the 7 yard line for another first down. Oneschuck cut through a nice hole to the 2; MacFarline carried to the one, and on the third down, Bob Rumball went over standing up after taking a pitchout from Mandryk. Bewley again converted.

In the dying minutes of the third quarter Bill MacFarlane made a beautiful pass interception and ran the ball to the McMaster 15 only to have the play called back due to a Varsity offside in the line. Haig collected his second single on a mighty 70 yard punt as the fourth quarter got under way.

Three minutes before the final whistle, McMaster's luck took a change for the better. Wrigglesworth pitched a long one to Jack Gray from the centre field stripe that was run to the Varsity 18 yard line. Lawson almost ended the threat for the Blues, but failed to hang onto the pass and it was ruled incomplete. On the next play, Wrigglesworth carried around the left end and bulled his way over for the major. Bashak converted for the Macmen to make the score Varsity 14, McMaster 6.

17 Trinity Frosh Finish Scavenger Hunt In Court

Trinity's annual scavenger hunt, part of the freshman initiation, ended this year with seventeen of the frosh in police court.

Fifteen of the first-year students face possible charges of disorderly conduct and malicious damage; the other two many be charged with breach of the Liquor Control Act.

This is the second time in three years that Trinity has had trouble as a result of its initiations. In 1949 the traditional Cakefight had to be stopped after flying chemicals from a "smoke bomb" burned a student's face orange.

Trinity freshmen — "Worms" — are required to participate in a scavenger hunt each year. This year they had to get, among other things, a copy of Flash, a membership card in the Toronto Radio Artists Club (a downtown private club which sells liquor only to its members), and a streetcar advertising sign. Also on the list, by tradition, were two bottles of beer.

Trouble started Thursday night when freshmen invaded Yonge streetcars in groups of fifteen and twenty to get the necessary signs. On one car, according to TTC officials, it took an off-duty policeman and another passenger to restore order. One car was delayed for six minutes. Three other cars were damaged.

Complaints from transportation officials brought the police on the scene. Fifteen of the freshmen from the streetcar were taken to No. 12 Police Station and their names were taken.

Police say that it is up to the TTC to take any action in this case. The streetcar commission's Superintendent of Investigations said Saturday that no decision had been made, but "it looks as if the boys will be facing charges of malicious damage to the signs and disorderly conduct on the streetcars."

A meeting was held yesterday between officials of the TTC and the company which owns streetcar advertising rights to decide whether or not they would press charges. The decision of the meeting has not yet been released.

The two freshmen who face possible charges of breach of the Liquor Control Act are John McLeod and Ross Crate. Both are minors.

They were returning to the College Thursday night with the required bottles of beer when a police prowl car stopped to question them about a false alarm which had been turned in. During the questioning the policemen caught sight of the beer, which the students were hiding beneath their gowns.

No official charge has been laid against them yet, but police say a summons will probably be issued. One police official added, "The fact that they are university students won't amount to a great deal."

The police seemed to feel that if any charge was laid it would be a relatively minor one of having liquor in an illegal place. However, the freshmen are also liable to the more serious charge of illegal possession.

If...

. . . we had a Student Union building, I would not have been trapped in the Boiler Room when I found a quiet little room where I could eat my lunch today.—Well-broiled Freshie.

New Contest Cash Prizes For Designs

The National Industrial Design Committee has announced that the Aluminum Company of Canada, the Canadian Lumbermen's Association and the National Gallery of Canada are co-operating to stage a second product design competition. There are four divisions to the competition with a first prize of $1,000 in each division, as well as smaller awards for entries placing second and third.

One of the judges will be Prof. E. A. Allcut, head of the department of Mechanical Engineering. Two of the other four judges are from Toronto. They are G. Alan Burton, general manager of the Robert Simpson Company, and J. B. Parkin, president of the Association of Canadian Industrial designers.

The requirements are for designs of specific items that are capable of being mass-produced in Canada. Desigs are to be of an aluminum chair and a wood chair, a writing desk in wood and a set of front-door hardware in aluminum. Entry forms for the contest are available from Donald W. Buchannan, secretary, National Industrial Design Committee, National Gallery of Canada, Ottawa. The closing date for the submission of designs in Jan. 15, 1952.

Dave Gardner

Pictured above is Dave Gardner, new assistant warden at Hart House, to whom we present our apologies. A feature article on Dave was printed in Friday's issue, but a feat of mismanagement prevented the picture from being run alongside.

Vic Frosh Elect Representatives

The Vic Freshmen went to the polls for the first time on Friday to elect their year representatives. John Lewis was elected president and Nancy Fockler, a former Miss Toronto Cheerleader, was elected associate president. Other offices announced at the Howdy Hop on Friday night are: Barby Beath, secretary; Sheila Catto, social directoress; Drew Buchland, treasurer.

Blue & White Cheerleaders Being Picked

On Saturday morning 32 co-eds showed up at the cheerleaders' trials on the Trinity field, but by noon there were only 22 left to shout "kick 'em high, tackle low . . .". A group of merciless judges from the Blue and White Society and The Varsity analyzed each contestant's good points . . . such as personality, appearance and cart wheel ability. The judges also considered enthusiasm, but all the co-eds there seemed to be full of enthusiasm (or something else that counteracted the cold).

Most students think that a cheerleader's life is just one gay round of cheers and cart wheels. Little do they realize the problems facing these representatives of old Toronto.

Take, for instance, the problem of uniforms. The Blue and White Society can supply the cheerleaders with bloomers and skirts only. Any girl knows that this is not quite enough clothing when you have to face 27,000 pairs of critical eyes.

Another big problem is the question of whether Sally of Jane will go on the McGill rugby weekend. This question is solved by a form of lottery. The old veterans amongst the cheerleaders get the extra games. But this still leaves the picture of a poor little cheerleader sitting by the radio listening to the big game . . . all dressed up and nowhere to go.

These pitfalls (or should it be pratfalls?) are carefully explained to the prospective cheerleaders by the chairman of the Blue and White Society. However, he also pointed out the brighter side of the picture . . . such as the kicks they would get out of the job and the chances for advancement.

Three men also showed up to be cheerleaders.

Holwood Now Arts Building

Baldwin House Loses Name

The University College men have been evicted from their former residence, Holwood Hall (above), which has been converted into a General Arts Building. The men have been moved into French House, a former girls' residence — for further developments see outlines under the picture at top right of this page.

The first step has been taken towards the construction of a new University College Men's residence, but so far the only result has been decreased accommodation for out-of-town students.

Holwood House, the former men's residence, is being turned into a General Arts Building. It will replace the small houses south of Knox College on St. George, which house the Department of Slavic Studies and Faculty of Law, and which will have to be demolished to make room for the new residence.

For the present, Holwood is being replaced as a residence by 5 Wilcocks St., a former UC girls' residence. However, it will hold only about half the number of students Holwood did. Holwood House, at the corner of Queen's Park Crescent and Hoskin Ave. held from 48 to 55 students. 5 Wilcocks holds 24 students. The accommodation of Wilcocks is better, since all the rooms are either single or double. The rooms in Holwood held four men, and at peak years six.

Simcoe Hall officials will not say when construction will begin on the new UC men's residence. It was first announced by the late Dr. Taylor at the 1949 UC Fall Convocation. Since then spiralling construction costs have prevented any work on it. At present, the university is waiting for costs to decrease before they start building the new residence.

Despite the decreased quarters, Dean Bissell, in charge of UC residences, says that nearly everyone who was eligible for space in the residence was taken care of. However, he adds, he was obliged to strictly enforce the ruling that no resident obtain less than third class honors. "I think we found a place for everybody," he said Saturday, "but there may be one or two we couldn't accommodate."

University officials cannot say the exact cost of renovating Holwood from a residence to an office building, but guess it will cost close to $50,000. As soon as it is finished, the Departments of History and Slavic Studies will move in. The Department of Law will take over the present history building.

The History Department is also planning to transfer the name of its old building to its new one. The new Arts Building will be called Baldwin House, although the property will retain the name Holwood.

Pictured above is French House, until recently a residence for University College women. Now known mundanely as 5 Wilcox Street, French House is housing the displaced men from Holwood Hall. However, women assigned to French House need not worry(?): 146 St. George Street has been equipped as the Gallic residence.

Wrong Tally— No Doughnuts At Tuck Shop

"The Hart House Tuck Shop ran out of doughnuts and milk Thursday because of a miscalculation in the amount of food ordered," said George Marshall, in charge of the tuck shop.

Marshall declined to give the exact quota usually sold, but did state that there had been an increase in the sale of sandwiches over last year.

The supply of sandwiches was depleted for about ten minutes yesterday morning, but milk and doughnuts were not available all day.

No satisfactory estimate of quantities can be made for a week to ten days until the demand is ascertained, Marshall explained.

Pictured above is on of the electricians needed to install new lines during the recent reconversion to men's residence and arts college of French House and Holwood House.

Co-eds Short Phones In Whitney Hall Rush

The telephone situation at Whitney Hall, and at French House (the new U.C. men's residence at 5 Wilcocks Street) is in the words of James Durante: "Catratstrophic." The 210 co-eds at Whitney have only six phones this year instead of the normal nine. The three phones on the second floor of Mulock, Cody and Falconer Houses were removed over the summer to save costs and have not yet been replaced. At the height of the dating season, one co-ed at Whitney said that nine phones were hardly enough. She thought that six phones during rubgy season was "awful."

Another co-ed said that while more girls lived on the second floors of the houses than on the first and third floors, the sight of the holes in the walls where the phones used to be was worse than the inconvenience of running up and down stairs.

Any co-ed who thinks that the situation is bad at Whitney, should be thankful that she is not living at 5 Wilcocks Street. The new U.C. men's residence (replacing Holwood House) has lost its phone. Anyone phoning the number listed in the phone book under French House will get Middle House at Vic.

French House has a phone. But it is the old graduate house number that was in 146 St. George St. when French House was moved there. Incidentally, anyone phoning French House will get an English answer.

Miss Gillespie explained to The Varsity that French is not spoken throughout the house. Co-eds answering the telephone or talking to one another in the upper halls or in their rooms, may speak English.

The Bell Telephone company was unable to say when the telephone service would be restored to Whitney House or to 5 Wilcocks St. And at present no one knows what the phone numbers will be, if there are any phones.

Unto the Hills . . .

The main house at Caledon Hills Farm where twenty-five staff and students gathered over the weekend to discuss the general topic of "The function of the university." Highly vocal, the sessions produced little agreement, saw participants searching through the haze not only for ideas but also for Toronto. Caledon Hills Farm is the rural appendix to Hart House, purchased two years ago to provide a country place in which the men of the university could get away from the city for the purpose of working Toronto out of their systems, engaging in talk, or pursuits that pleased their fancy. Its popularity has increased greatly since it was opened. The Farm features two good swimming ponds, odd caves, fresh air, some work.

Rail Splitting Is Cathartic At Talkfest

Universities in general and the University of Toronto in particular, came under heavy fire over the weekend when a group of students and staff members gathered at Caledon Hills Farm to try and find out what they were thinking on the general topic of "the purpose of the university".

The meeting, organized by a small group of staff members who have been interested in the growing problems facing the universities, brought together highly vocal members of both the staff and undergraduate body who from Friday night to Sunday afternoon threshed out the many difficulties they found in so large a topic.

The group found many opinions prevalent, both on the student and on the staff level, and little general agreement. In discussions that tended to be highly theoretical (a point of objection on the part of some students) they tried to find some common basis for discussion, and rarely succeeded.

The discussions will be continued throughout the fall. Most participants agreed that the gathering of a group of staff and students under such conditions was valuable.

Rhetorical heat was worked out in tree-gathering for rail fences.

Visit of Royal Couple To Clash With Dance

Hart House officials are in a quandary.

They don't know what to do with the All-Varsity Fall Dance, scheduled for October 12. The date was fine, until the King's illness postponed the visit of the Princess and Prince by one week. Now the Royal couple are going to be visiting Hart House the morning after the dance.

The problem is now to get the House cleaned up before the Royal Visit at noon. This is complicated by security regulations, which prohibit anyone from entering Hart House Saturday morning without a special pass.

The only parts of the House which the royal couple will see are the quadrangle and Great Hall, but House officials feel just the same that the entire building will have to be spick and span after the dance. How and when the big cleaning job will be done is the $64 question.

There is also the question of any special preparations for the royal visit, which have to be made Friday, and which might conflict with the dance.

If the dance is held, warns Hart House Publicity Director Gerry Hart, IV Meds, lighting will have to be restricted, since the only people who can remove lighting fixtures are university electricians.

Should the Board of Stewards decide not to hold the dance, it will be the first time since 1938 that Hart House has not sponsored an All-Varsity Fall Dance.

And more important, such a decision could cost Hart House $700. A union ruling says that if the four bandleaders demand payment for the broken engagement, they have to be paid.

Flow Gently

Addled Taddle

By MIKE BENAZON

Taddle Creek . . . a burial ground for dead cats, a repository for garbage, a breeding ground for mosquitoes, a dunking pond for freshies, and inspiration for poets. Today Taddle Creek is a sedate little road running along the east side of the Engineering Buildings. Yet at one time it was "a mighty stream," flowing through the University grounds. It entered the campus at Bloor Street, at the east side of what is now the Economics building, pursued its way south where Hart House now stands, and followed the present route of Taddle Creek Road to College Street.

On December 4, 1880 the Taddle was mentioned in The Varsity for the first time (in fact it was one of the first issues of The Varsity): "a rustic bridge has been erected over the River Taddle. Handrails of some sort should be added to complete the structure, for without such support the snow-covered and rather cylindrical surface is a perilous path."

But the authorities chose to disregard the advice of The Varsity. And so a few months later there was another article in The Varsity: "the 'dear boy' who the other night fell into the Taddle off that meandering mantrap which spans the ravine has promised us an article on Middle Age Architecture."

The "rustic bridge" mentioned crossed the Taddle at College Street. Unfortunately (or fortunately) that rustic bridge had only a short life, for in June, 1881 it collapsed and floated some distance downstream.

It is evident from the 1881 issues of The Varsity that Taddle Creek played an important part in the life of the student, particularly the freshman student.

"At twelve o'clock a trial took place and sentence was passed to duck the three remaining culprits in the Taddle, but this order was rescinded."

The Taddle was the coup de grace in hazing freshmen. This treatment, however, was not to be sneezed at, for:

"The stench arising from the Taddle is very pronounced. The prevalence of so much fever in the city is surely a good reason for the prompt abatement of this long standing nuisance."

By 1883 the Taddle had degenerated into a cesspool. But this proved to be no deterrent to students with a poetic turn of mind. Such gems as the following, written in October, 1883, are found frequently in the early issues of The Varsity.

"O gentle Taddle! wandering by thy side
I watch thy merry waters glide,
And hear the murmur of thy limpid tide,
Taddle.

How many a deed of blood and derring do
Has beared senior or relentless soph put through,
And stained with Freshmen green thy waters blue,
Taddle.

The City Council would thy stream immure,
And shut thee up with bricks and lime secure,
And make thee—Ichabod—a common sewer,
Taddle."

The last verse of this poem tells us what became of the Taddle. Due to the odour, and the danger of spreading fever, it was decided to make the Taddle into a sewer, where it runs today, below Philosopher's Walk. But even yet, the ghost of the Taddle is occasionally said to appear. Its favorite haunt is the east side of the Library, where after a heavy rainfall it haunts the basement of the stack room.

The "epitaph" to the Taddle appeared in The Varsity, October 20, 1883:

"O mighty Taddle! I stand for the last time at thy side, and look as far as thy manifold indescribable impurities will allow into thy dark depths. Strange thoughts come and go in my disturbed mind — tears start to my eyes and something, I know not what, affects my nostrils . . ."

Warden Clarifies Rules for Attire

The signs in Hart House asking that members refrain from wearing sweaters and windbreakers in the Great Hall are meant to clarify the previous ruling of the Board of Stewards, which called for standard of dress becoming the dignity of the House, said Warden Ignatieff Friday. The new ruling was made at the end of the last term, when it was felt that the order was too indefinite to be effective.

As yet, no form of enforcement has been provided for, but Ignatieff said that, if necessary, this problem will come under discussion by the Board of Stewards. So far, no action has been taken other than an occasional reminder to students wearing hats and overcoats in the Great Hall.

Ignatief said that students have complained to him about the standards of dress in the House, and that they insisted on behaviour and clothing suitable to the atmosphere and dignity of Parliament in the House debates. However, he said that he had hesitated to impose rules and regulations about the matter because he felt that the loss of decorum and propriety indicated by the problem is a fundamental one in modern society, and that a ruling might not be effective.

His trip to Finland this summer made him realize how much our standards have slipped in comparison to Europe, the Warden said. There, he explained, even in the Co-operative restaurants of the workers, men without ties, or otherwise improperly dressed, and women without stockings, would not be admitted. This indicated, he said, not snobishness, for Finland is a very poor country, but a sense of a propriety, which, he feels, should be developed by a university education.

Students feel that a certain standard of dress and manners should be enforced in Hart House, the Warden said, but he feels that many other students will resent it as an infringement of personal rights. Ignatieff wants it made clear that his first concern is to make all male students feel welcome in the House, but that he also wants them to be very conscious of their appearance and behaviour.

The Warden is sure that if the matter of enforcement of the ruling about the Great Hall comes to an issue, the majority of the students will be behind him. He pointed out that at Guelph, in spite of the inconvenience of changing from farm and laboratory clothes, students who enter the dining room improperly dressed are fined by their own Administrative Council. A certain amount of conformity to the dictates of good taste is an indication of maturity, which, said the Warden, seems to have deteriorated at the University of Toronto in the past two or three years.

A Salesman died in the packed Royal Alex last night and I, sitting with the Gods, felt his death was right.

I had met Willie Loman, a Salesman played by Duncan Baldwin, at 8:20 p.m. By 11:40 p.m. I realized his death was right and good. It was also a little sad. For the first time in his life Willie was even — the mortgage was paid, the refrigerator was his — but Willie felt he had to be more than even. Because Willie was a part of the Great American Dream — but the dream became his nightmare. It was a little sad.

I don't know whether author Arthur Miller intended that his play should have that effect on me. I don't think he tried at any time to preach or sell any idea, although to a less-gifted author the temptation might have been too great. Miller has written a beautiful, penetrating commentary on one part of our society. He has peopled his commentary with highly credible, intelligent characterizations. He has lighted it with glistening humour. And he has finished it with a logical ending. It is an honest commentary.

The director of the play kept faith with the writing. It would have been very easy to have murked up the clarity of the American Dream by playing Hap (Ted Jordan), Willie's second son, as a comic relief. Instead he rightly crystallized into a strong character with his last declaration to follow in his father's tracks. Biff (Steven Rich), Willie's first son, could have been more starry-eyed. It is always easy to cast a player who will declaim at great lengths on the beauty of nature and his love of manured boots. But Biff didn't overdo it. That was because Del Hughes, the director, understood that the play was a commentary.

When the curtain went up on Jo Meilzinger's set I must confess I was a little suspicious of the 3-level, scantling-outlined house. But when Sylvia Davis came running in with a clothes-basket, I could smell the fresh sun-dried laundry. When Willie spoke of the cement he had used to repair the house, I could see the trowel marks. And when Meilzinger chose to put a leafy arbor over the house, by merely projecting a floral pattern over the whole set, I could feel the soft air of that suburban home.

When Willie died, many in the audience died. All through the play there was an undertone of audience thought — "There but for the Grace of God", . . ." That was a tribute to a perfectly acted, highly-tensed commentary on our society.

When Willie died, I thought his death was right — and from the dazed looks of the home-going audience, I knew it.

Progress Reported On U of T Songbook

The University of Toronto songbook is at about the half-way mark, according to E. A. MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the SAC, after two years of collecting songs, checking copyrights, and arranging financial details. Mr. MacDonald said that the book will probably contain about 150 pages with 150 songs, and will be of pocket size with a soft cloth cover. The songs will have melody lines and illustrations.

The finance committee of the SAC will be asked to give the song book committee about $200 for copyrights. However the SAC will just be the campus distributors of the song book, according to Mr. MacDonald, as the book will be published by Anglo-Canadian Music Sales Corp. The SAC will not have any money invested in the songbook but a Caput-SAC liaison committee must approve the book before publishing as it will be a University of Toronto book.

The song book was originated on the campus by Al Heisey, who graduated from engineering last year. In 1949 the music committee of the SAC asked Heisey to work on a song book and to model it on the University of British Columbia book. A committee headed by Heisey spent a full year on the preliminary collection of the songs and ironing out copyright, printing, and financing troubles.

Dean Bennett of Victoria College is no longer Dean Bennett. He has foregone this title in favor of the term Principal, to promote internal harmony within Victoria College. The head of Emmanual College, the other half of Victoria University, and other United Church colleges, have principals, not deans.

The new name, however, does not indicate any change in duties for Principal Bennett.

University of California Prepares For Possible Earthquake or Fire

Berkeley, California—(Exchange)—If disaster strikes the University of California in the form of an earthquake or fire everyone will know what to do to survive. This is the aim, a master plan on civil defense, nearing completion by the U. of C. Disaster Organization.

Under the co-ordination of a university public health instructor, the plan is designed primarily to prevent panic should a disaster strike.

Each building on the campus has a committee whose duty it is to see that the plan is carried out. Each employee in the building has been assigned a specific task.

Signs have been posted on all buildings telling whether or not they are safe for shelter. Three thousand dollars have already been spent on the program, while 1500 persons are involved in it, all of them employees of the university.

Finland Report

Ambition Plus

Seven Varsity students are back at their studies after a three month trip to Finland as guests of the student body of the University of Helsinki. The Finnish students are engaged in constructing a students' town on the outskirts of Helsinki.

When the choir of the Technical Institute visited Toronto last October they expressed a desire to have Canadian students visit their project. The trip was arranged through the efforts of Urho Toivola, Finn minister at Ottawa, and Kingsley Graham, Finn consul in Toronto.

The land for the project was bought by the Finnish students themselves and they are now busy raising funds and hiring contractors to do the labor. The actual project will take ten years to complete and includes three residences which will house 750 students. Materials from war wrecked buildings are being used, including the bricks from the Soviet Embassy which was the only building destroyed by Russian planes. The Varsity students were working the Sauna—a Finnish steam bath which regulates temperatures up to 120°C.

The Canadians were impressed with the Finnish enthusiasm and initiative. The country has succeeded in paying off 93% of their war reparations and in doing so have built up their country's trade and strengthened their economic position.

John Digby, Meds II, found the course at Helsinki very similar to ours. The government, however, pays all student fees and is responsible for their instruments. The modern hospitals of Helsinki are confined to one area.

"Finland," said Elmer Sopha, Law, "is optimistic about the future. Although it is not a satellite of Russia, the Communist influence is quite marked. The son of Uusi Suomi, editor of the Conservative daily was working in the same district as we were and he asked us not to reveal his identity for fear of losing his job."

Due to the fact that they make their own rules, Russia or her satellites consistently win field events. At a game scheduled for 8:30, the Russian team did not arrive until 10:00 and then won the game 126-53.

The Varsity students found that the Finnish were very well informed about our country. "They are," said Sopha, "very anxious to be friendly with the west, particularly Canada."

The rest of the party accompanying Nicholas Ignatieff of Hart House and his wife included J. Wilson, Meds IV; J. Craif; D. Wilson; Jana De Costa; F. S. Innings and W. B. Harris.

Saskatoon (CUP) — Rugby will not figure in Western Canadian intercollegiate competition, for the second straight year, The Sheaf reported last week. Last year the University of Alberta dropped its football team because of lack of interest and funds. At the University of Manitoba a football team is just being organized.

Western intercollegiate competitions still take place for tennis, basketball, track and other sports.

By MAL CRAWFORD

McMaster's novel backfield formation with four backs in motion before the snap of the ball was a lot more confusing to us sportswriters than it was to the Blues last Saturday. With everybody running every which way and the ball carrier coming from some place where he wasn't a second or two before, no two people in the press box ever shared the same opinion as to who had carried the ball.

But as the figures show, the Blues didn't have too much trouble with it, limiting the Mac ball carriers to less than three yards per try. When the ball was snapped there were generally two backs on either side of the play, all in flanking positions outside the end, leaving Wrigglesworth all alone behind the centre. Without anyone right back of the quarter to charge fast into the line and make the defending linesmen search him before they rush the quarter, the pivot man has a rough time of it. Wrigglesworth was passing pretty well in the first half until the Varsity linemen found they didn't have to look for a ball carrier before they rushed the quarter. As a result Wrig's passing was rushed badly in the second half.

Buster Brown, former McMaster tackle now playing for Hamilton Tiger-Cats, was sitting beside us trying to spot the Blues' weaknesses for Mac coach Al Smith. Though he felt that the Marauders had a territorial edge over the Blues and that the score did not do them justice, he could not see that the showing would help much in getting them into the Intercollegiate league until a sixth entry appeared to balance the circuit.

On the subject of McMaster's helter-skelter backfield system, he mentioned that in the Queens' game, which was played on a wet field, the backs were slipping around in the mud quite a bit which frequently slowed up the plays. Personally we think that backfield-all-in-motion is a good idea for giving the backs a head start in getting up speed, but not much good for deception, the way Smith uses it. It's what you do after the ball is snapped, not before, that gives deception.

Varsity perhaps didn't look quite as good against McMaster as they did against Beaches, if you can go by the opponents' reputations. One very cheering note though was the way the Blue line pushed the bigger Maroon front wall around, stopping running plays dead and rushing the passer. When they did just that to the Beach line, everyone said Beaches weren't trying, but this was twice in a row. The Mac line outweighted the Blues, nearly ten pounds per man And that backfield wasn't exactly small either.

Considering Bewley, Dale, and MacFarlane were still hampered by injuries, the Blues' ground offensive was superb. Bobby Rumball filling in for Bewley was a star, and MacFarlane looks better every time out. Passing is another story.

Haig's kicking, aided by sloppy play by Mac's safety men, was where Varsity showed the biggest edge. He got away two seventy yarders, and his average was his best yet, 43.3 from scrimmage. Alex Ponton averaged 42.8 for Mac before being helped off, but Timmis couldn't keep it up.

In case nobody noticed, this makes four straight wins.

Heads Up Boys, Here I Come!

Mustang Football Spirits Not Down Despite Tough Graduation Losses

By WM. CARRADINE,
U.W.O. Publicity Director

London, Ont.—The University of Western Ontario Mustangs, defending champions of the Senior Intercollegiate football loop, will have their work cut out for them when they go after their sixth college crown in seven years.

This is the year that all the other coaches in the loop have dreamed of—the year that the two McFarlanes, Bob and Don, George Arnott, Doug Grey, Blake Taylor, Bill Ford, Elmer Quintyn and Jack Mathews would not be wearing the purple and white. This is the year the three other coaches vowed would see the Yates trophy leave Wetstern.

However, the Mustangs and Johnny Metras are not going to let the trophy, emblematic of supremacy in the Intercollegiate loop, leave their University without putting up a stiff fight. Many a fan thought that the Mustangs were going to lose it to McGill last season, but the team would not be sold short. They trooped down to Montreal and walloped the McGill Redmen 24-2 in the play-off game of the season.

Finding men to fill the shoes of last year's starters who have graduated will not be an easy task for Metras. Graduation wiped out the complete first string backfield of the Mustangs last year. Without a doubt, the strongest department of the team this year will be the line—basically the same as last year, with the exception of all-star Bill Ford, now playing with the Toronto Argos, Elmer Quintyn and Ross Grant.

The Mustang front line, which blunted the fine edge of the McGill team and constantly broke through to throw the McGill backfield for substantial losses, is the one bright consolation for John Metras.

From top to bottom the Mustangs for 1951 will have the emphasis on weight and speed. Six of the candidates for Mustang berths tip the scale at 200 pounds or over, headed by hefty Ken Burgess who weighs in at a rousing 210.

Although the picture does not look so bright when the backfield is considered, John Metras is not losing any sleep over the different positions there. In fact, he is feeling quite happy with so many of the fine prospects. They are all fighting for a starting berth with the "glory-glory" boys.

At quarterback, Metras has two men who have played with the Mustangs in previous seasons. Ray Truant, from Windsor, is high up on the list for the starting quarter of this season, as he was subbing for George Arnott in most of last year's games. Either Bert Vincent, star of the 1948 playoff game in Toronto, or Bob McMurdo, the quarterback up from the Colts of last year, may also have the potentialities for the first-string quarter position on the Mustangs of 1951. McMurdo, who was voted the "Most Valuable Player on the Intermediate Team" of last year, is going into his third year at Western. He hails from Toronto.

The outlook does not look so grim on the half-line as many of the coaches thought it would, after the loss of the McFarlanes, and Doug. Gray. Gray, the Sarnia boy, who is doing so well with the Hamilton Tiger Cats this year. Johnny Metras still has some good-looking football material in Murray Henderson, Jimmy Carroll, Cam. Church and Stu. Jerome. Murray Henderson, who is also a track and field star, was playing second to Bob McFarlane last year, and didn't get on the field very much. Murray should be one of the top backfielders this year for the Mustangs if he can get his hands away from the fumbleitis that plagued him last year.

Jimmy Carroll, who did quite a lot of kicking last year, is expected to handle that chore this year, and also take over some of the running in the left-half's position. Bobby Peirce, another Londoner, is slated for quite a lot of work this season. Bobby, who, like Murray Henderson, is also a top notch track man, has been playing Mustang football for several seasons. Now that most of the stars have graduated, he hopes to see a lot of action in the halfback slot this year. One of last year's out-

Five Ex-Blues Play Football In Big 4, ORFU

The Blues haven't been a powerhouse for a few years now, not since the 1948 team which won the Yates Cup in Bob Masterson's first year as Head Coach. But Toronto still has its share of grads playing professional or semi-pro football in Canada.

Five are currently performing with Toronto Argonauts; Ted Toogood, Jim Shore, Pete Bennett, Jack Gray, and Nick Volpe. Toogood has established himself in the Big Four as a smart and tricky runner, always able to break away for a long gain. He is also a fine defensive player despite his 160 pounds. John Shore plays offensive centre for Argos and his desire for hard body contact has made him a hard man to beat. Pete Bennett, who has grown to a mere 235 pounds, plays offensive right tackle. His coach rates him one of the most improved Canadian linemen on the team. Jack Gray is a newcomer, played end until he was hurt the third game of the season. Nick Volpe plays safely, and was a top-notch place kicker last year.

JOHN SHORE

Two others are playing in the big four — Bruce Cummings, with Ottawa, is possibly the best kicker in the loop, and Dick Brown is playing his second year with Hamilton Tiger-Cats. John Chorestecki, Sarnia, is top scorer in the ORFU. Ed Fisher is playing for Beaches.

Fans Cool, Weather Warm

It must take more than a week to get fans in the mood for a football game if the ardour of the Varsity students last Saturday afternoon is any indication. The crowd watching the Blues take the McMaster Marauders into camp was one of the quietest that has graced Varsity Stadium in many a moon.

Over in the press box we could almost hear the voices of the cheerleaders, a skeleton crew of last year's squad, above the murmuring of the 6,000 stalwarts in the student's section. When the Mac supporters cut loose, a whole 1500 of them, Blue supporters were all but drowned out.

If there has ever been a football game played in more ideal weather, from the standpoint of both the players and the watches, then we would like to know just when that was. Sunshine and a cool breeze felt more like the holidays were still in progress than reminding us of football.

This handkerchief dropping routine on the part of the refs at least has added something, confusing or otherwise, to the task of watching a football game. We were particularly taken by the red and white effort that the umpire and the referee were sporting. They looked more like like distress signals on a ship at sea than anything else we can think of at the moment.

The grim look on Coach Masterson's face got a little grimmer in the fourth quarter when the trainer made about his third trip onto the field to help off an injured Varsity player. After the nighmares that Bob had as a result of injured players last fall there is nothing that makes him any sadder than a bum leg or a fractured bone. So far as we know, all Saturday's injuries were of the minor variety.

Those weird and wonderful gyprations in the McMaster backfield were certainly something to behold. They really take this man-in-motion stuff for all it is worth. Looked like public school let loose for recess when the Mac quarterback started to call signals.

We are beginning to wonder when those characters who run around at football games all dressed up in monkey suits are going to graduate or at least get tired of the pastime. All that energy going to waste almost makes us weep. What some guys will do to get into a football game free of charge!

It is difficult to say just what McMaster's exhibition games this season have accomplished as far as gaining them admission to senior Intercollegiate football circles is concerned. The difficulties of a five team loop are the main argument for the league's refusal to admit them, and that argument will not be changed by any number of exhibition games.

standing Colts, Syl. O'Hara is also fighting for the right halfback's spot. Ron. Tracey and Jack Jaques (the "Georgia Peach" — he played with the U. of Georgia last year on the Freshman team) will also be working hard for a permanent berth at right half.

In the fullback spot this year, Gerry Fitzgerald, who is a star in lacrosse and basketball, has the upper hand as far as experience is concerned, although Belec did play some nice games for the Mustangs last year.

Jimmy Black, one of last year's Mustangs, is also back in his flying wing position, and is battling off several promising freshmen recruits for that spot.

This year at Western saw one of the most promising freshmen turnout for many a decade. There is no weeping in towels at the Mustang camp this year, for many of last year's high school stars are driving hard to wear the Purple and White in the J. W. Little Memorial Stadium this fall.

That is the 1951 Mustangs from top to bottom. Although John Metras realizes that he has lost the backfield of "the best team that he had ever coached at Western," he is not wasting too much time crying over spilt milk. Only time will tell if the freshmen crop of this year, along with the returning Mustangs, will hold the Yates trophy in Western for the seventh time in eight years. Johnny Merras thinks they can.

The Mustangs open with an exhibition game against the Windsor Royals on the 22nd of September. And then follow that up with the Sarnia Imperials on the 29th. Both exhibition games will be played in London.

Seven days of hard polishing will will follow the second exhibition game, and then the Queen's Gaels invade the J. L. Little Stadium for the first game of the Intercollegiate season. Any way you look at it, the coming Intercollegiate season shapes up as one of the best in a long, long time.

Ex-Mayor

Samuel BcBride, present at a Hart House debate in 1929 when it was resolved that Toronto was intolerant, took the resolution as a personal insult. His response to this "insult" was to demand the complete reorganization of the University.

Compulsory PT As McGill Frosh Take on Sports

Montreal (CUP)—You have to be athletic at McGill from now on. As part of the new athletic scheme, all first year students will have to take a compulsory course in physical education.

This is nothing new for Toronto where compulsory physical education classes have been in effect for several years. The new plan scheduled for McGill will be similar to the one here, except credit toward graduation may be given.

Aim of the course is to allow students to maintain or improve their level of physical fitness and to use the excellent facilities available to them, it was reported to the freshies and frosh. It is designed to measure strength, co-ordination, agility and physical education on the basis of this test. Students will be assigned, if they require it, to a remedial exercise or a learn-to-swim class.

Otherwise the course will include a wide variety of sports.

Away Back When

Students Favor Hanging

At least that was the impression of The Toronto Telegram. A few weeks later Paul Martin stressed the pressing need for a revision of the Constitution. The date — 1925; the place — Hart House; the speaker — the Rt. Hon. Paul Martin, Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was to return to his Alma Mater in 1948 to see his social security program approved by a vote of 68 to 61. He and others like him can be given credit for the overwhelming number of political debates in Hart House, starting with the very first one in January 1924, when the House approved the recent formation of the Labour Party in Great Britain.

As early as 1926 the House turned its attention south of the border, and over the opposition of a visiting team from Minnesota, decided that the increasing influence of the United States in Canada should be diminished. Two years later the U.S. naval program was viewed with alarm, to be followed by a condemnation of the States for dominating the Western Hemisphere, and in 1936 the Stars and Stripes was hurled through the window of the chamber, much to the concern of at least one member, who retrieved the banner in the hope of averting an international incident.

In 1927 the Prime Minister, Mr. King, was the first holder of that office to participate in a Hart House debate, and the attendance reached a phenomenal 553. There were numerous debates on government policy, usually in the no confidence form, and on several occasions it was resolved that there was no effective alternative to the government in office, notably in March 1950, when such a motion was defeated in the presence of the Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent. The sympathies of the House did not remain long with any one party, and a visit by the Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett was the occasion for The Varsity to comment that "Last night's tongue-fest at Hart House afforded one more demonstration of the absurdity of debates, and another revelation of the political vacillation of the loquacious patrons of these vocal circuses."

Yet on two subjects the issue was never in doubt — Hog-town, and women. In 1929 it was resolved that Toronto was intolerant. Samuel McBride, the mayor, was present at the debate. He took the decision as a personal insult, and demanded the reorganization of the University. Ten years later, the House declared that it had no confidence in the administration of the city. The debate was attended by a live bunny and a skull, but there were no municipal repercussions.

As early as 1926, the House opined that "Woman has more than come into her own", thereby exhibiting psychic powers, for in the hallowed debates room, devoted exclusively to the use of men, there sat a co-ed with a boyish bob, completely unnoticed by the assailants of her sex. In 1936, women were admitted to a debate, and one of the gallants, believed to be an engineer, toasted the fair ones in a pewter of ale. The honour of Hart House was at stake, but it was saved when the aghast officials were informed that the brew consisted of nothing more potent than vinegar and soda. The story of women and Hart House debates has an even sadder ending — in 1948 the House upheld the conventional attitude on sex.

Now and then the debaters have turned their attention to their own affairs. In 1938 it was decided that science does not narrow the mind. Some years later, the House defeated a motion that the wise freshman enrolls in Arts.

And this year, the Artsmen will have another chance to vindicate themselves, in the first debate of the session on October 10. The motion before the House will be, "Resolved that Technical Training for the Professions has no Place in the University". Women will not be admitted.

Fraternities

The first fraternity was established in the United States in the early 1840's. In the 100-odd years since the fraternity idea has grown into a powerful, wealthy, and highly controversial system.

Nearly everyone has an attitude towards fraternities. A majority of students who have not, do not, and will not belong to them and are more or less against the system. Some of these are highly vocal. Many don't care too much one way or another. There are even those who feel the fraternities are relatively harmless. Members, of course, are in most cases enthusiastic supporters of the Greek letter societies.

Here at Toronto fraternities play a lesser role in undergraduate life than they do in most American, and some Canadian universities. There are forty-one fraternities here, eleven of them for women, thirty-one for men. Their membership probably doesn't exceed 1500 persons; about 12 percent of the student body. They are not officially recognized by the University, but are tolerated. Between them they own a modest fortune in St. George St. real estate. By and large they lead their own life, and are seldom in the news.

For the men's fraternities this is a hectic period. New members are being "rushed," with a continual round of parties, dinners, and all the various ingenious come-ons that undergraduate minds can devise. New membership is important to the fraternity: on the success of a rushing program depends the financial stability for the year, the type of chapter that will result, the fraternity's prestige among other fraternities. The competition for good material is cut-throat.

Those who are considering joining a fraternity might do well to take a little time before they take the plunge to look behind the highly artificial picture presented during the rushing season. For the fraternities, in spite of all their high-sounding principles and strong protestations of being nothing more than a system devoted to providing "social contacts for a group of congenial students in different faculties and different years" (The Students' Handbook) have built up some traditions peculiarly their own in these hundred years of growth.

They are not traditions that sit well in a mature mind operating in a democratic society.

The fraternity system is built on one main idea: exclusiveness. Out of this has grown a multitude of unhappy consequences.

High on the list is discrimination. And we are not concerned here only with racial or religious discrimination, which is not universal in fraternities although it remains prevalent. It is more subtle than that. Primarily economic, the fraternity discrimination perpetuates the idea of exclusiveness within the relatively narrow confines of a definite social strata. You have to be able to afford it. To this it has added other, more obvious, kinds of discrimination, such as religious and racial.

Also growing out of the idea of exclusiveness is the idea of pre-eminence. It is this feeling, carefully nurtured by the fraternity system, which inevitably puts the major part of a University like Toronto on the defensive. After all, some say, they go after the cream of the crop, so naturally they get good people.

Cream can go very sour.

Beyond this lies the wider, still less obvious field of the standardized mind. The fraternity, whether it would admit it or not, seeks and often demands a set of ideas and values which ordinarily leave small scope for the individual. Such an influence is of the creeping, crawly kind: people banded together in tight little groups such as a fraternity tend to try to be one of the boys.

And what about this business of "social contacts"? Certainly companionship and friendship are important parts of university life. But those who claim that fraternity friendships, growing as they do out of a narrow and limited group, with roughly the same background and same ideas, are either more firm or more valuable, are not telling the whole truth. Physically, it is easier to make friends in a fraternity. But the limitation is a little too large to make the fraternity a profitable field for strong, lasting and vital friendships.

Those who are afraid that they will be left out in the cold, that they will not "belong," need have little fear. A good eighty-percent of this university is somehow managing to struggle along and make their friends without the artificial stimulus of the fraternity system.

Against such a background there is another consideration that becomes important when talking about the University of Toronto. This is a provincial institution. It is designed to serve its community, as a community. It has gone beyond that, to the point where President Sidney Smith has claimed for it the status of a "national university."

Is it proper that such an institution should harbour within itself, by the subtle artifice of turning its head, the kind of group whose whole basis is a motivating force directed not at the community but at the small, so-called privileged group who "belong"? We do not think so.

The high ideals that are written in some fraternity charters are not borne out by the fraternity record, nor by their present activities. They have no place in a democratic university, because they are essentially a negation of the very principles of freedom, of tolerance, and devotion to service to which the university is committed.

Undergraduates who avoid such a system as that established by the fraternities may have to work harder to make their "social contacts." Those who have done it both ways find they like hard work.

For An Ideal

A Raw Deal?

By RALPH WINTROB

A person with all the qualifications wants to run for the presidency of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. He is prevented from even being nominated. Do you want to know why? Ask Denis Lazure, former chairman of the NFCUS International Affairs Commission.

But the formula, for those not within walking distance, is simple. Be an idealist, work hard at personal expense to give Canada a recognized voice in international student affairs. Wander off the heaten track. Work out a few liberal ideas and take them to a meeting of representatives of Canadian university students.

Lazure discovered that the delegates at the London conference wanted no part of his ideas or of him either for that matter. In short, they were not only afraid of his ideas — they did not trust him. When the conference was over, Lazure had been effectively prevented from having anything more to do with the activities of the organization he had worked so hard for.

There is no doubt that Lazure's ideas have not found a wide sympathy among Canadian students. His view was that it seemed worth taking another crack at co-operation with the IUS. To this end he proposed that NFCUS co-sponsor a meeting between the IUS and western unions to talk the matter over. Our ideas at such a meeting needed to be clear, precise and well formulated, he stressed.

He added quite forcefully: "This must be our last try with the IUS. If we feel that it is impossible to deal with them, we should go on and form a new Western Union."

The conference agreed with him, in everything except the idea of acting as a co-sponsor. And they agreed reluctantly. Delegates were split on the issue. Some of them felt that IUS was raising false hopes in the western unions for a truly reformed and democratic IUS. They expressed weariness with the cat and mouse game that the IUS and the western unions, including NFCUS, have been playing since the end of the war. They felt that all this new conciliatory attitude meant was another attempt by the IUS to prevent the western unions from organizing a strong, counteracting union of their own.

But in the interests of world student co-operation, they agreed with Lazure to try again with IUS.

Lazure and his report were the two most controversial factors at the conference. He wanted to be president but he didn't have a chance. Even his own university (Montreal) didn't support him.

There were two reasons for this. First, the conference was afraid of Denis Lazure, of his ideas — and his motives. They wanted to know what his game was, what lay behind his thinking. They questioned him minutely at every turn.

It was so bad that he prefaced his report on the Berlin Peace Festival and the Warsaw IUS Executive meeting with these words: "I am not a communist, and I am not leaving my studies to go into politics."

Lazure had attended these events alone, and because of this he asked the conference to accept his report in the sincere spirit in which it was offered. "I feel I must state the facts as best I can," he said.

Reason number two is an important one, though outwardly simple. He did too good a job. His contacts throughout the world were wide. He had gone to too many conferences. His ideas were, to the delegates, more his ideas than NFCUS ideas. He had managed, through personal effort, to make the International Affairs Commission important. And many delegates didn't like it. They wanted national activities stressed, to show the Canadian student he was getting something for his money. They didn't manage to do much about national program at the conference. But they still distrusted international work.

At best it was an uncompromising attitude.

Though the conference accepted many of his proposals, the delegates never once relaxed their distrust of Lazure himself. This flared up when it came to electing officers. He was kept out by a shabby display of tactical political manoeuvers.

The issue was whether or not the chairmen of commissions such as the International Affairs Commission were eligible for office if they were not accredited delegates from a university. The conference took two stands: they said "no" before the election (therey eliminating Lazure from the race). They said "yes" after the election, when it didn't matter.

Both Toronto and McGill protested. McGill made the strongest statement, so strong that they withdrew it when the conference threatened to throw it out of the minutes.

It was the vote of the smaller universities that caused this turn-about-face. What were their motives? It was suggested by one person present that these delegates, distrusting the ideas that Lazure presented, felt they would rather not let him be able to run for the presidency than to have to vote against him. With Lazure out of the picture, they were free to change their policy.

A final upshot of the whole messy business was the passing of a constitutional amendment proposed by Toronto to raise the status of the IAC chairman to that of a full vice-president with voting privileges. The effect of this move would be to put international student activities of the NFCUS almost on a par with national affairs.

Both of these amendments, of course, must be passed by two-thirds of the student councils of the universities who are members of the NFCUS.

Lazure got a raw deal at the conference for presenting the ideas he did. He felt that the best interests of peace, and welfare among students, throughout the world could best be advanced by not trying to split the student world into two camps, unless the IUS refused absolutely to operate as a democratic, representative and non-political unit.

For his ideas he was maligned and booted. He did not deserve the treatment he got.

OUR READERS WRITE

Noblesse Oblige

Editor, The Varsity:

I would like to applaud the stand of the Hart House authorities as demonstrated in the poster asking students not to wear windbreakers and sweaters in the Great Hall. I would also like to make a few remarks directed at those who will be affected by it.

The sartorial question in regard to recent undergraduates has been giving me heartburn ever since I graduated (U.C. '48) and began returning to the campus periodically for special events. Now that I am studying here again my gastric condition has deteriorated.

The other day I saw a freshman whom I at first took for a "beanery boy" or perhaps a messenger delivering to the premises. I was not irritated by this apparition because of what he was doing to the University but because of what he was doing to himself. Apparently students in the last few years have lost the ability to divine things for themselves, to get the feel of new situations. They have to be told everything. All right then, here it is:

You didn't come to University just to read books or learn some skills under the guidance of a man who had already read them and learned them. You came here to become an educated person, a citizen who would be a credit to his community. If that isn't your purpose, you're wasting your time here and very probably belong at a trade school such as the Ryerson Institute of Technology. You could also take a correspondence course and study in bed — in pyjamas! . . .

. . . There was a time, less than ten years ago, when a would-be freshman looked forward to wearing a suit every day when he got to University; and once there it made him feel that he had reached a milestone in his life and was entering on a new phase of his existence. I suppose some of the young men on the campus today didn't even feel a thrill the first time they put on long trousers. Clothes do not make the man, but changing a man in some external particular most certainly effects a change in his mental make-up. The hundreds of uses to which we in western society put uniforms testifies to this psychological fact.

To anticipate the inevitable excuse about finances which is always advanced now when such matters are mentioned, I will point out that gaudy shirts, pastel sweaters, gorgeous leather jackets and peculiarly-shaped trousers (which have to be made to measure) cost much more than a ready-made suit — with a few ties thrown in. . . .

. . . As has been pointed out so many times, those who attend university are the privileged ones in society. They must realize that they have assumed the burden of noblesse oblige: From those to whom much is given, much is expected. A student who comes to university merges himself into a stream of people going back through history into the Middle Ages. It is the mark of a creative society that its people recognize such significances, that they see that life is preeminently not what you make it, but what you think it.

The Hart House officials will find, I venture to prophesy, that their restrained notice will have only slight effect. It is characteristic of protracted adolescence to remain insensitive to suggestion. I think the practice of the former Warden of Hart House, Mr. J. B. Bickersteth, would bring the quickest results. He would go up to a student who was inappropriately dressed and quietly ask him if he could not wear a jacket and tie. As I observed several times this had just the right effect on the student, inducing a certain embarrassment without compensating resentment.

I am certain that the esteem in which the present Warden is held would guarantee similar success if he were to try this "gentle stratagem."

All Varsity For Sure In '52 Casting Will Start This Week

"There will definitely be an All Varsity Revue this year," promised E. A. MacDonald, secretary of the Students' Administrative Council yesterday after a meeting of the AVR Committee, a sub-committee of the SAC.

Subject to ratification by the SAC when they meet on Wednesday, Jim Guthro, director of the Blue and White Band will be the producer-director of the AVR this year. Ben Wise (IV U.C.), who was last year appointed to this post, found it necessary to resign, and his resignation was accepted by the committee yesterday. Both Wise and George McCowan (IV U.C.) promised to give Guthro any assistance they could.

Another proposal to be set before the SAC will suggest that an Assistant Producer-Director, and directors in charge of Scripts, Dancing, Scenery and Props, and Choral Work be appointed according to the recommendation of Guthro. If this is passed, the positions will be advertised in The Varsity. To provide for some continuity in the shows, this year's Assistant Producer-Director would presumably be in charge of next year's AVR.

The dates of the show have been set for the week of February 11th, with a matinee on Saturday the 16th. Casting will start this week as soon as rehearsal space has been found. Anyone who is interested in taking any part in the production is advised to watch for future ads in The Varsity.

Quite a bit of work has been done on the show during the summer, and Guthro has some musical arrangements ready, as well as some scripts. Sets from the last two AVR's are in storage, and can be made over, so it will not be necessary to start from scratch with the scenery.

Because of a failure to get plans under way early in the term, there was no AVR last year. MacDonald promises that this will not be the case this year.

Varsity Rivals City For Tunnel Honors

It could be termites but there is too much noise. Perhaps a secret passage is being dug from China to North America. But no, it is the new channel which is to join the new heating plant to the old tunnel in front of the Physics Building.

This concrete-lined tunnel, which will be six feet high and seven feet wide, is being constructed under St. George Street for a length of 900 feet. Nothing can halt progress and so the tunnel runs right through the basement of 42 St. George Street, home of the U. of T. Alumni Federation and the Men's Infirmary. "Alumni House doesn't seem the same without its lawn and front steps," comment some of the grads.

The new tunnel which will be used to carry steam pipes and electric power cables is but one of a network of some 6,000 feet of such tunnels under the campus conducting steam mains, electric cables, and steam for industrial processing. When it was being built last summer, it looked like a miniature version of the Yonge Street subway.

The old heating plant, located next to the Anatomy Building, is forty years old and is now considered outdated and inadaquate for the heating needs of the University. With the old plant in operation there are auxiliary boilers used to heat the Wallberg Memorial Building and the Museum, but the new system will be capable of heating all of the large buildings on the campus. A 20 per cent increase in efficiency is expected with the installation of the new heating plant.

If you happen to walk along Russell Street, west of St. George Street, the noise of hammering and rivetting will draw your attention to a massive framework of steel girders. The "boiler house," as the construction foreman calls it, will contain only two huge steel boilers, each of which is 16 feet wide, 36 feet high and 40 feet long, and auxiliary equipment. Each boiler will produce 75,000 lbs. of steam per hour using pulverized fuel, which will start through the network of underground pipes at a temperature of 387 degrees Fahrenheit. Rather hot.

Six men will manage the equipment which has automatic controls and should be ready for operation next March.

Next year the boilers will be cut down and no steam will be produced at the old heating plant. However, it will be used for generating direct current for some years to come.

Eventually electric power for the whole University will be delivered to the new plant from which it will be distributed at 4,160 volts per 60 cycles.

"THE LITTLE SUBWAY"

New System For Desserts In Great Hall

The new system of pricing meals at Hart House has confused many students. Miss M. A. Eames, supervisor of food services at Hart House says the basic part of the meal is 45 cents again this year, but that desserts are now an added item. In other words, the increase in price of the meals varies with the type of dessert selected.

Last year the basic menu included bread and butter, beverage and one dessert or ice cream. This year desserts as well as soup and fruit juices are extra. However there is a greater choice of desserts, usually three or four, instead of the one last year. And of course second helpings can now be bought.

Hart House, JCR Face Price War

The campus is about to experience a price war between the Junior Common Room and Hart House.

"Hart House prices for coffee, ham sandwiches and other necessities of undergraduate life, will have to compete with the drastically low prices of the U.C. 'Lit' Snack Bar," announced A. A. Strauss, Literary Director of the U.C. Lit, yesterday. "We are out for students," he went on, and added that the Snack Bar is "replete with luxurious-living lounge facilities."

Strauss stressed the difference in prices between Hart House and that of the Snack Bar.

"While Hart House coffee sells at ten cents a cup (including wooden swizzel-stick) Snack Bar coffee in the JCR will remain at the usual rock-bottom price of eight cents," Strauss said. "Similarly ham sandwiches will retain their familiar price of ten cents, although Hart House Tuck Shop charges twenty-five cents a couple."

It is understood, however, that the low prices will prevail only as long as the Junior Common Room is kept clean and tidy by patrons of the Snack Bar.

"In the event that it reverts to its usual dirty-little-old-self, the prices will be raised and the resulting profits will go towards paying for cleaning help," Strauss said.

Out of the Past

Initiation trouble is nothing new to Trinity. Two years ago this fall the annual Cakefight had to be stopped when Eric Ford, now IV Trinity (pictured above), had his face burned orange by flying chemicals from a smoke bomb used in the fracas. Eric suffered no harmful effects from the bomb, however, in spite of reports from the downtown papers.

Frosh Free Of Charges Says TTC

The TTC will not press charges against fifteen Trinity freshmen whose names were taken by the police Thursday night, TTC Superintendent of Investigations Evans said yesterday.

On Saturday the Superintendent said the frosh faced possible charges of disorderly conduct and malicious damage, as a result of their assault on streetcar advertising signs which had to be obtained as part of the Trinity first-year scavenger hunt.

Superintendent Evans said that the TTC decided not to press charges after discussions with the President, Sidney Smith. Disciplinary action will be left to the university, he said.

Provost Seeley of Trinity said he had received no official confirmation of this decision.

On Friday The Varsity stated that the Engineering by-election nominations would be on Friday, September 28 and on Monday, Oct. 1st. The nomination dates should have read Friday, Oct. 5 and Tuesday, October 9, with the elections following on Friday, Oct. 12. The positions to be contested are 1st vice-president of the Society, III year SAC rep and the president, athletic rep and debates club rep for the freshmen year.

McAdam's Marios

Hart House Glee Club will hold auditions for interested male undergraduates at 5 p.m., Oct. 2 and 3, in Hart House Music Room. Last year's members are requested to attend either audition.

The Glee Club, organized in 1932, is under the direction of Ward McAdam. An exchange concert has been arranged with the University of Rochester in Toronto on Nov. 10. Next February the Glee Club will participate in a joint concert held in Rochester, N.Y., with male choirs from the Universities of Colgate, Cornell and Rochester.

An annual carol concert will be broadcast over the CBC Trans-Canada network from the Great Hall, Hart House.

A corn roast will be held at Caledon farm this fall with other social events planned for the spring term.

Tells Meds Frosh Classics Needed

The message from the Dean of the Faculty of Medicine to the Meds freshmen class this year was based on a passage from a moderns scholar on the value of the classics. Dean J. A. MacFarlane quoted from UC Principal Jeanneret's inaugural address. Principal Jeanneret had quoted from Kenyon Cox on the value and principles of the classicists. Dean MacFarlane pointed out to the meds freshmen how the passage applied to them.

Doctor MacFarlane said that the freshmen would be bombarded by challenging principles from science, philosophy and political thought. He stressed that while realizing the potentialities of the new ideas, the student should look for the connecting link with the past.

Syd Wax, president of the Medical Society and the Students' Administrative Council, told the freshmen that there is an awful lot more in life than medicine and that they should try to lead a balanced life.

The guest speaker at the freshman reception in the Women's Union last night, was Doctor P. F. McGoey, an orthopedic surgeon at St. Michael's Hospital. Dr. McGoey told the freshmen that they would not have to worry about the medical profession becoming over-crowded as long as the engineers continued to turn out cars. Dr. McCoey said that a new school of embalming might be needed to take care of those injured by the engineers' inventions.

This year's freshmen class in medicine numbers 125, a drop of approximately 25 from last year. Co-eds are getting scarcer in the faculty. Only 12 entered first year while 25 graduated. Wax told the freshmen that when they reached their final year—in 1957—they would wonder at how fast the time had flown.

VCF Leaders Urge Prayer

The Varsity Christian Fellowship executive told the membership that prayer was the foundation of the group and the key to a successful year when the VCF met for the first time this year at an outdoor meeting in Hogs Hollow Saturday night.

President Ian Sowton, III U.C., said that the chief purposes of the V.C.F. were that the membership as individuals would grow spiritually and that the organization would help the members to effectively witness to their fellow students the reality of the power of Jesus Christ in their daily lives.

VARSITY RUDIMENTS

Coffee With Spirit

The campus may hold a lot of new experiences for the freshman, but above all it will hold a lot of new people. No statistics have yet been given out as to the number of university students there are per square mile on university grounds, but someone may write a thesis on this soon. Or a feature for The Varsity.

As the freshman has, and will discover at classes, at football games, and at dances Varsity students come in all shapes, sizes, and personality ratings. Round, square, angular; willowy, stocky, skinny. All kinds of psychoses, neuroses, and phobias are here waiting only for a first year psychology student to probe them. There are sad, happy, ecstatic and inteiligent types. Most overbearing are those who smack of savoir faire a hundred feet away. Then some students are too shy, while others are too bold.

What has the freshman in common with this conglomeration of people besides an ATL card? He may find out the Common Denominator on the campus in a week's time. Or he may graduate — still clueless. But if he's a good type, an All-Varsity spirit will seep into him at any football, hockey, baseball, or soccer game. This is a zippy Blue and White spirit which yells 'Toronto, Toronto Varsity' along with expressions like 'Kill the referee' or 'Throw the shmoe off the field'.

A handshake is usually a cordial way of saying "Hello", but on the campus there are few handshakes between students. It's usually "Hi, how about coffee". Statistics are again vague here on the number of gallons of coffee consumed in a year by an average student, but anyone can get the facts by experimenting on himself.

Lectures, books, essays, are all held in common, and of course provide immediate food for talk whenever two types get together. The freshman will also become either pro or con Skule, depending upon what faculty he is registered in. But most of all he'll find himself singing "Old Toronto Mother Ever Dear" every time the band strikes up the music.

SAC Meet

The first Students' Administrative Council meeting will be held Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the board room of the Mining Building.

The recent NFCUS conference will be the main topic of discussion which will include the whole field of international relations. The financial report will also be high on the evening's agenda.

Although only students who are members of the council have a vote, all undergraduates are welcome to attend the meeting.

B&W Cries SOS

The Blue and White Society needs people. They don't have to have exceptional ability or talent, just interest.

This term, the Society is backing such activities as the Stadium Show, dances, the Float Parade, Carol singing, and the Christmas Party. There are plenty of spots for those interested in getting acquainted and lending the B & W a helpful hand at the same time.

John Armour, chairman of the Society, says, "We are no longer merely a rah rah group, but are interested in helping to organize student activities for and through the student himself."

Those interested may apply at the S.A.C. office at Hart House.

Financial Security, like academic training, is planned step by step, and can best be accomplished through life insurance.

In this modern age, nickel helps a lad to grow up strong and healthy. Cod liver oil, tooth paste, medicines and toilet preparations are all processed in equipment made of pure nickel or nickel alloys.

Today bicycles are being made stronger, more durable — but lighter in weight — with the help of alloys made strong and tough by the addition of nickel.

In the dairy, the purity of milk is protected by the use of nickel-alloy materials in the pasteurizers, coolers, bottling machines and other equipment.

Nickel is on the job most everywhere

Hundreds of everyday uses for Nickel have been developed by the Nickel industry through a planned program of research. Today a large share of Canada's Nickel production is being diverted from peacetime uses into channels for preparedness. So the Nickel mine facilities, greatly expanded over the past decade, are again being operated at peak capacity. There is actually more Nickel now being delivered by Canada to the free world than in any peacetime year.

Meter Misery

Professor W. A. Wallace, of the Faculty of Engineering, engaged in some rather unorthodox activities during the summer. Refining street sweepings, bashing parking meters, and putting slugs into coin slots are only a few of the things he did, and yet, at no time was he in danger of arrest for stealing public property, fraud, or assault and battery. The victims in this case were a dozen sample parking meters.

1,300 of these meters are to be installed in Toronto at a cost of $92,000 to $146,000. And before this can be approved by the City Council, they want to know just how well these various models can endure conditions of cold, heat, dust, rain, and the many types of rough treatment doled out by Toronto motorists.

Professor Wallace made a commentable effort to simulate these conditions in the laboratory, where he tested six different models. They were subjected to temperatures ranging from twenty-five degrees below zero to one hundred and fifty degrees above (Fahrenheit), the upper limit not as a possible air temperature for this vicinity, but rather as a radiant effect. Professor Wallace explained that there is difficulty in operation of traffic light mechanisms due to the fact that the control box temperatures often go that high.

How will these meters be affected by heavy rain? To determine this, they were placed in a bath-tub-shower contraption, and deluged with water for four hours. Immediately afterwards, they were cooled down to minus twenty-five degrees. The mechanisms froze in every case. Surprisingly enough, this was not due to water entering the meters directly, but rather, to moisture suspended in the air. Entering the meters, the water was deposited as hoar frost, and as the temperature dropped, it hardened.

Later, the meters were tested for corrosion. Subjecting them to an air-borne salt solution, Professor Wallace duplicated conditions brought about by cars kicking up the spray on winter roads, when salt has been deposited to melt the ice. Most of the meters were adversely affected, and showed obvious signs of corrosion.

In sleet and freezing rain, if the coin could not be inserted in sixty seconds, the machine was considered as adversely affected. Since the maximum time an average person waits before crossing the street against the light is little more than thirty-nine seconds, a full minute is considered the ultimate of patience for Toronto motorists.

Four hundred pounds of street sweepings, gathered in the vicinity of the University of Toronto, were carefully screened and refined for the dust test. This was one of the most difficult tests to perform due to the difficulty of creating and controlling standard dust clouds. The result was the fact that the meters were covered with dust, not only on the outer surface, but on the inside of the meter, too, so that the reading was completely obscured.

For the impact test, to determine how much battering the meter cases can take, a lead ball was suspended like a pendulum, and swung through arcs of one foot to five. As the arc increased above two feet, serious damage occurred.

And then, as if these poor parking meters had not suffered enough, Professor Wallace did some unofficial testing—passing bent coins and slugs into the coin slots and applying various burgling techniques to break into the coin boxes. He found that bent coins will be returned if they cannot pass through the mechanism, but on the subject of slugs and burgling, he remained completely silent. In any case, the professor had the advantages of machine-shop tools, and uninterrupted privacy to carry out this mission. It would be more difficult under standard conditions.

LEPROSY

Science Notes

There are five thousand cases of leprosy in the world today. Over two thousand of these live in North America.

Leprosy, one of the last remaining outposts to be conquered by medical science, is one of the earliest diseases to be described in history. Probably originating in the Far East or North Africa, it reached Mediterranean Europe about 500 B.C. The Roman Legions spread the disease throughout the remaining parts of the empire. From Europe it was brought to the New World by early Spanish and Portuguese colonists.

Its persistence and relentless course caused it to be generally considered a hereditary disease. However, in the nineteenth century, Hansen discovered the causative organism, Bacillus leprae, a long rod-shaped bacteria closely resembling the tuberculosis bacillus.

The method of spread of Leprosy is still rather uncertain. It reaches dangerous proportions in moist climates where overcrowding, dirt, and promiscuousness become widespread. The germs shed in large numbers from leprous lesions probably penetrate the skin through scratches, insect bites, and abrasions. One theory suggests that leprosy is spread by insects, because the living bacillus has been found inside flies, lice, mosquitoes, and cockroaches. There is some evidence that the disease may be droplets spread from the respiratory tract of certain patients.

Once established in the subject, the organisms begin their rapid multiplication and the disease becomes evidenced in one of two forms: the severe lepromatous type which is characterized by low resistance, and the milder tuberculoid type which the resistance of the patient is often able to control. Early diagnosis is naturally important in the fight against Leprosy. Clinical examination of suspicious lesions is made to detect changes in nervous sensation and tissue structure. Small areas from the site are examined microscopically to detect the bacillus.

When the diagnosis has been thus made, the sentence of Leprosy which is passed strikes the victim with the dread, hopelessness and disgrace of centuries. To his mind comes the picture of the typical mask face, mutilated extremities, painful blind eyes, and ulcerated skin of a leper. A life of death stretches before him. It is as though the words of the Old Testament are restated for him:

"And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry 'Unclean, unclean.'

"And the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be."

However, the future is no longer without hope, for modern drugs such as the sulphones and streptomycin are showing encouraging results against this scourge. It is hoped that within our time the final battle will be fought against Leprosy, a social as well as a physical disease.

—Jim Anderson.

Guilt and Rejection

High Bright Buggy Wheels b Luella Creighton, pub. by McClelland Stewart, Toronto 1951.

Rural Ontario at the turn of the century provides the setting for Luella Creighton's first novel, "High Bright Buggy Wheels."

At a fall camp-meeting of Mennonites in the opening pages of the book we are introduced to Levi and Betsey Shantz and their children Lambert, Ben and Tillie. For the most part the novel is centered around seventeen-year-old Tillie and her realization that her own happiness lies in a way of life outside the narrow confines of the Mennonite faith.

Tillie's family expect her to marry Simon Goudie, a farm boy she has known all her life and go with him to the mission field. Although Simon goes to Bible College in a large city at the same time that Tillie leaves home to go to a nearby town to take sewing and music lessons, he experiences none of Tillie's reactions to urban values. Simon only becomes more firmly entrenched in the faith of his fathers.

"The love of God ran through him like a devouring flame. It had nothing to do with church histories, or creeds, or sets of rules, but with living and being in the Lord . . . he too could call down fire from Heaven, and not because of the books and the notes and the studying, but because the grace of God was working in his heart, and with Him all things are possible."

On the other hand Tillie finds herself hungry and thirsty, for a knowledge of what the Mennonites consider worldly and material values such as pretty clothes, perfumes, books and horse racing. The high, bright buggy wheels on the cart of George Bingham, an up-and-coming druggist in Kinsail, symbolize to Tillie that whole new and exciting world which has been withheld from her up until now.

"High Bright Buggy Wheels" is no world-shaker, but it presents a setting and a situation which most of us are familiar with in our own backgrounds. Rural Bible-belt districts are still preaching the same fundamentalist religion which Simon thought as good as, if not better than, anything that the scholars and rationalists had to offer, and there are many young Tillies who carry with them a sense of guilt and rejection because they have been unable to stay within the pale of their religious upbringing.

Mrs. Creighton's style is simple and consistent, and although some readers may feel that she lacks zip and ability to make the most of a dramatic situation, none will deny that here is a Canadian novel at least two cuts above the average.

Love Letters And Poems

James Thomson by Douglas Grant Crescent Press, London, 1951.

Professor Grant has written an accurate and readable account of the life of the early Romantic poet James Thomson. A Scotsman by birth of humble origin, Thomson attended the College of Edinburgh and planned to enter the Church. However, he received some slight encouragement from his friends and a notice in London concerning his efforts at writing poetry, and decided to try his fortune in London as a writer.

He arrived in London in 1725 and in April, 1726 the first section of his long poem "The Seasons" entitled "Winter" was published.

Thomson's ability to describe landscape and nature coupled with his gift for expressing simple sentiments achieved for him an immediate popularity which lasted for over fifty years. After completing a Grand Tour of France and Italy, Thomson settled down in London and later in Richmond and produced during his lifetime five plays as well as a long poem on Liberty and a poem to the memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

Professor Grant has been able to make use of some love letters and poems hitherto unpublished from Thomson to one Elizabeth Young with whom he fell in love in his early forties. These, along with Professor Grant's description of the country in which Thomson was born, provide by far the most entertaining part of the book and of which a sample is produced: — "Madam, As I have not an Opportunity of speaking, I can no longer forbear writing to you. And now that I am sit (sic) down to to write, my Heart is so full and Words so weak to express it, I am at a loss where to begin and what to say. What shall I say but that I love you, love you with the utmost Ardor, the most perfect Esteem and inexpressible Tenderness. Imagination, Reason and the Heart, all conspire to love you. I may venture to say, without Extravagance, I love you better than my own Soul. My Happiness is only a secondary Consideration to yours, can alone consist in making you happy; there is no Happiness for me but in passing my life with you, in devoting it to please you. Never had one Being a stronger Propensity to seek the Good of another than I to seek yours; to gain the dearest Purpose all Fortune if in my Power would seem Dross, Toil Ease, and Pain Pleasure. I shall be thought romantic, and yet the most passionate Expressions upon this Occasion are poor to what I feel. My Heart labours, is oppressed, with unutterable fondness . . . ."

Miss Young rejected her earnest suitor and Thomson continued a bachelor until he died in 1748 at the age of fifty-three.

Ave Atque Vale

By ANN CARNWATH

Perhaps you could blame that Fortune Teller at the Ex who predicted that I would marry some small town big-shot and have eight kids. Anybody who has devoted at least three of the best years of their life to the pursuit of higher learning and culture is obviously going to pull up short when they see such a fate in the offing. Not that I would mind the big-shot angle, because I think money is great stuff, but frankly I don't like kids.

My objections to such a future leave me in a peculiar position and I spent two soul-searching weeks trying to find a vocation that would justify my funny little life without demanding anything to show for it along the biological side. I guess I haven't got much on the ball, as they say down at this new place where I work, because at the end of two weeks I couldn't think of any way out of my predicament. I was just taking a long last look at the man who plays the cello in those murals in the KCR and thinking how distressing it was that I felt obliged to leave this life soon and would never find out how he worked that funny-shaped bow, when who should appear but The Great Red Father. If you don't move in literary circles you probably don't know who I mean but if I tell you that he edits a very, very local tabloid, you will get the picture. Now that I look back on it, I guess he saved my life when he gave me this really creative job to do and I can't be too grateful can I? Yet somehow or other I can't get out of my mind the way he stared at my blue stockings. You'd think that anyone who understood About Art and my predicament as well as he did, would expect nothing less.

Anyway, the world is wide and there are all kinds of people, but at present I have only one interest at heart. My hard, gem-like flame is supposed to throb for exactly one page on exactly the second day of every week. Believe me, nobody will ever be either blinded or burned but any one of you at any time could unobtrusively soften the glow or extinguish the flame completely, if you please, by making a really staggering contribution to this page. Screams of protest are heard from loyal Varsity subscribers — Has the paper gone Arty and what are College magazines for? — to which we can only reply by saying that this page is primarily for reviewing current books which the College Magazines have never gone in for to any great extent, but also we wish to emphasize the fact that it will not be devoted entirely to reviewing, and that any criticism or short essays which we feel would be of interest to he students at large, will be considered and published.

Reviewing merely brings to the notice of the public books which have recently come off the press, and the job of reviewing tends to become very stereotyped. Anyone can do it (pause for reflection on my part). But it takes a big mind with a background of reading and experience that has been accumulating through the year to be able to dive into the realm of literary criticism and relate what it is reading to what has gone before. If we can uncover every now and then the casual efforts of such a mind then this page will be justified.

Victorians

Paradoxes

The Victorian Temper by Jerome Hamilton Buckley, Harvard University Press, 1951.

Mr. Buckley has added his contribution to the recent spate of books on the subject of the Victorian Period. In the first chapter we are given a stimulating account of the paradoxes that beset a critic of this particular period. "The Victorians," Mr. Buckley tells us, "were 'a poor, blind, complacent people'; yet they were torn by doubt, spiritually bewildered, lost in a troubled universe. They were crass materialists, wholly absorbed in the present, quite unconcerned with abstract verities and eternal values; but they were also excessively religious, lamentably idealistic, nostalgic for the past, and ready to forego present delights for the vision of a world beyond. Despite their slavish 'conformity', their purblind respect for convention, they were, we learn, 'rugged individualists', given to 'doing as one likes'."

Mr. Buckley is most interested in the paradox at the core of the creative writing of the Period and readers will find more than interesting his presentation of Tennyson's struggle to leave a land of dreams and the world of 'art for art's sake' for a position where his poetry could embody and preach the sociological realism.

The Victorian poets all felt this impulse to preach a message under the impact of the growing social consciousness of the times. We can better understand the didacticism of these poets if we see them as primarily trying to shake the exalted personal perspective of the Romantics and assume some responsibility for the world and the way it is run. "The Victorian Temper" carries us right through to a return to an extremely personal aesthetic in the last twenty years of the century, ground which has been well covered by other writers, and the reader will find that the best of Mr. Buckley's contribution lies in the first half of the book.

Barbados, Quakers, And Maps

Liberty and Property by R. V. Coleman, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, 1951.

R. V. Coleman has followed up his first book on the colonization of the United States, The First Frontier with the story of the expansion that followed during the years 1664-1765.

All the different groups and nationalities that participated in the early development of the United States are treated in great detail from the Barbados who settled in Carolina to the "Holy Experiment" of the Quakers in Pennsylvania in Liberty and Property and the steps along the road to revolution are carefully traced.

Liberty and Property is an immense labor of love which should prove of great interest to any student of American History. It is complete with 28 full-page maps and 62 illustrations.

The First In a Weekly Series

Ducks and Bull

The Catcher in the Rye by J. D. Salinger; published by Little Brown and C., 1951.

If you really want to hear about it, the first thing you'll probably want to know is who is Holden Caulfield and what kind of a guy is he anyway. You can obtain this information easily enough by reading J. D. Salinger's book "The Catcher in the Rye" but let me put you straight right from the start. Where he was born and what his childhood was like and all that David Copperfield kind of stuff is strictly out, I really mean it.

However he says he's six feet two and a half inches and has a smattering of grey hair on the side of his head. He's only seventeen but confidentially, he's been bounced from four private schools and is at present spending his time in a sanatorium out west taking it easy. I don't know how much you can tell about him from this and maybe you think he's a kind of a creep already but I'd sort of hate to stop now.

Anyway when Holden's teacher discusses his academic failures with him and tries to discover why he can't make a go of things, Holden assures him he's a moron. "And the funny thing is," he tells us, "I was sort of thinking of something else while I shot the bull. I live in New York, and I was thinking about the lagoon in Central Park, down near Central Park South. I was wondering if it would be frozen over when I got home, and if it was, where did the ducks go. I way wondering where the ducks went when the lagoon got all icy and frozen over. I wondered if some guy came in a truck and took them away to a zoo or something. Or if they just flew away."

Believe me, if you can see past the countless "goddams", "fer Chrissakes", and "where the hell-jas" of Holden's narrative and you can understand his concern over the large number of phonies he discovers in this world, then it's quite possible that you won't find him in the long run half as screwloose or half-baked as he appears at first. Get this — "The best thing, though, in the museum was that everything always stayed right where it was. Nobody'd move. You could go there a hundred thousand times, and Eskimo would still be just finished catching those two fish, the birds would still be on their way south, the deers would still be drinking out of that water hole, with their pretty antlers and their pretty skinny legs, and that squaw with the naked bosom would still be weaving that same blanket. Nobody'd be diferent. The only thing that would be different would be you . . ."

When Holden watches three office girls from Seattle who have come to New York for their holidays, leave a cheap hotel bar, he muses, "They were so ignorant, and they had those sad, fancy hats on and all. And that business about getting up early to see the first show at Radio City Music Hall . . . if somebody, some girl in an awful-looking hat, for instance, comes all the way to New York from Seattle, Washington, for God's sake — and ends up getting up early in the morning to see the goddam first show at Radio City Music Hall, it makes me so depressed I can't stand it." Yeah, Holden, we know, but that's the way things are.

Sex is something Holden says he doesn't 'understand too hot' but his reaction to the atomic bomb is clear and definite. He's glad it's been invented and if there's ever another war he plans to go and "sit right the hell on top of it."

Enough of Holden for the present, but a word about his kid sister Phoebe, a bright roller-skating skinny ten-year-old who never misses a trick. She writes books about a girl detective, loves to ride the carrousel and takes belching lessons from her friend Phyllis Margullies.

In the end Phoebe stands for one of the few things that Holden cherishes — kids. "I keep picturing all these little kids playing some game in this big field of rye and all. Thousands of little kids, and nobody's around — nobody big, I mean — except me. And I'm standing on the edge of some crazy cliff — I mean if they're running and they don't look where the're going I have to come out from somewhere and catch them. That's all I'd do all day. I'd just be the catcher in the rye and all. I know it's crazy, but that's the only thing I'd really like to be." Sure, Holden, the only thing that nobody can be.

WHAT THE BLUES WILL FACE IN 1951

Pictured above is the play that caused a lot of comment and controversy when the Blues paid a visit to the University of Western Ontario Mustangs last season and suffered a 21-1 defeat.

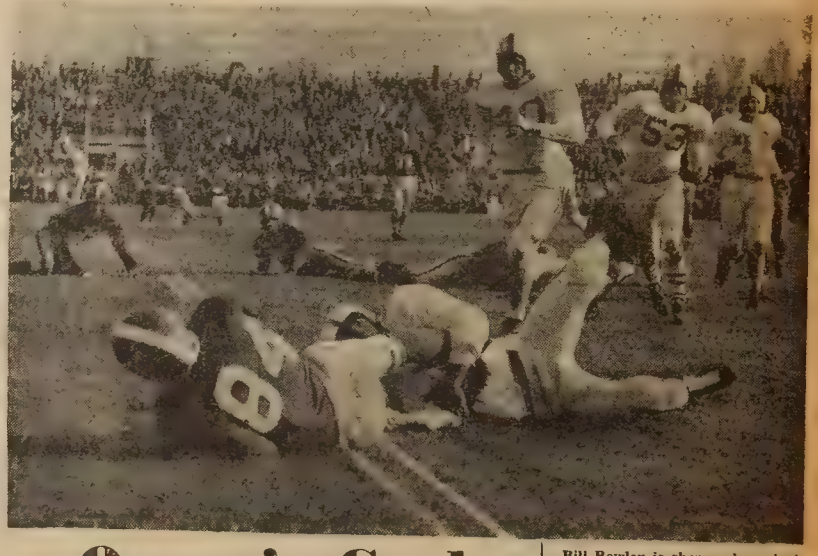
Bill Bewley reaches for a pass in the end zone of the Mustangs, but doesn't get near it. Bob McFarlane, the guy the City of London honored with a tea set before the game, makes a tackle before Bewley can get his hands on the ball. This is strictly illegal, but the referee did not see it that way even though he appears to be looking straight at the play. This was the Blues' third down, so the Mustangs took over on their own 25-yard line and went on to win decisively.

Western

At first glance, the picture presented by this year's Mustangs is one of a team shot to pieces by graduation. The whole first-string backfield of Bob and Don MacFarlane, Doug Gray, Blake Taylor, and George Arnott has graduated, along with the right side of the line—Elmer Quintyn, Bill Ford, and Charlie Allan.

However, Metras isn't crying, in fact he is fairly optimistic, and a closer look will show why. What Metras' job this year amounts to is fitting the backfield of last year's Colts (which were very strong in the backfield but weak on the line) to a line composed of returning Mustangs.

Truant and Vincent return from the big team last year to the quarterback position, but the boy to watch in this position is Bob McMurdo. McMurdo passed the Intermediates silly in the Colts' game in Toronto last year. There hasn't been a top-notch passer in the Intercollegiate League since Al Lenard graduated from Queen's two years ago. McMurdo might fill the bill.



Gerry Fitzgerald (185) and Jacques Belec (180) are pretty well set at the fullback positions according to reports early in the practice season. Fitzgerald played Mustang last year, and Belec was a freshman with the Colts. He went 30 yards through the centre of the Intermediate line last year for a major, deking Bill MacFarlane (one of the best defensive backs in either league) on his pants before going over.

The team is loaded with halfbacks; returning from bench duty with the Mustangs last year are Murray Henderson and Bob Pierce (who are also star trackmen) and Jim Carrol and Jim Black. Carrol will probably do the kicking. Another good kicker and a good bet for left half spot is Stu Jerome. Syl O'Hara, another 10-second man, may make it at right half.

Reg Ort and Miller Gallow, both 200 pounds, return at centre. Milt Cork, Jack Wyatt, and Jack Thompson make up a tough if somewhat light set of guards. Bob McMonagle returns at left tackle and Gerry Fewster will probably be the other. Both weigh 200. Burgess etc., etc. Definitely the team to (210) a freshman last year, and Burns (190) will back them up.

Stronger still will be the ends, with huge (6'4", 205) Doug McNichol at one end and Bob Turner (6'2", 190) at the other. Reserves are Don Beatty, Ross Beck, beat.

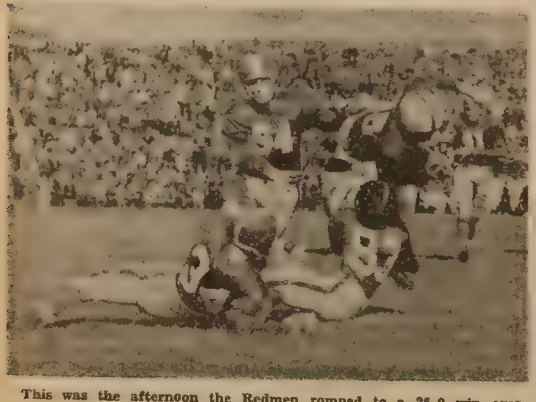
McGill Redmen

McGill has been hit fairly hard by graduation, but unlike Western, they do not appear to have the reserves and intermediates to take their places. Obeck was banking everything on '49 and '50, and is prepared for the worst this year. We cetainly do not expect the team that beat Toronto 25-0 in the home opener here to repeat the performance.



Harry Irving has graduated and left the quarterback slot open. Geoff Crain is being groomed for the quarterback position, and will likely do the kicking. Gene Robillard, who was originally supposed to sit the season out because he missed a sup for the second time, may be moved from half to quarter.

The backfield situation, originally the grimmest in the league, has been brightened more than somewhat by the reinstatement of 6'2", 200-pound left halfback Ken Wagner, who was in the same boat as Robillard. A sup cannot ordinarily be carried two years at Varsity, but there is no league rule about it, so McGill will get away with it. With right halfback Pete Robinson and left half George Valois graduated, fullback Roy Deshields in the army, and wingback and place kicker Fred Wilmot flunked out, the ball carrying brigade would be pretty well reduced to zero without Wagner.

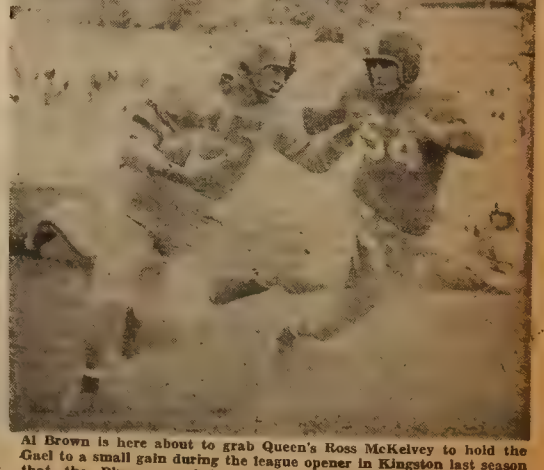
As it is, Dawson Tilley will run from fullback and Haskell Blauer will play right half. Jim Mitchener wil be moved from end to wingback to take Wilmot's place.

This move will weaken the ends quite a lot. Dave Caldwell (185) and George Bossy (180) are the probable starters at end. From tackle to tackle is where the Redmen are really powerful. Dave Tomlinson and Clyde Whitman both scale 215 and can use their weight well. Bill Pullar, another ex-Calgary Stamp (along with Tomlinson and Mitchener) has been moved over from guard.

Wally Kowal (215) and Vince Capogreco (205) return at guard. Bob McLellan plays his third season at centre. Intermediates will make up the reserves in these spots.

This was the afternoon the Redmen romped to a 25-0 win over Toronto, perhaps in revenge for four years of defeats at the hands of the Blues from 1939 to 1948.

Gerry Washington (83) is shown dragging down one of the Redmen, with Al Brown (54) bringing up the rear. The game was the beginning of the end for the Blues last year, the first of a three-game losing string. They did not really get untracked until the return game at McGill when they tied them 6-6.



Queen's Gaels

We hate to consign a great coupe of ex-griders like Frank Tyndall and Al Lenard to the cellar for a second straight year, but we can't see that their changes can go any higher. With every regular tackle, guard, and centre gone, and a liberal assortment of graduations elsewhere, Queen's is in about the same position Varsity was in this time last year. But Varsity surprised everyone and came third last year, so maybe Tyndall had better let the arsenic alone after all.

Moe Richardson's graduation has left the quarterback post open, and Don Griffin, who was put in his place, broke his arm in the game with McMaster. That just leaves a couple of ex-intermediates, but veteran Don Bahner will likely be moved up from the half line to solve this worry.

Ross McKelvey returns at left half along with his young brother Greg from Weston CI. Jack Roberts will be the big man of the half line at 164 pounds. Eric McIlvee (180), though, will be one of the best fullbacks in the league. A bulldozer type of runner, he was the one Gael that Varsity couldn't stop here last year.

Two good ends will be back to fill the spots vacated by Tip Logan and Doug Woolley. Harry Lampman (6' 3", 200) and Dick Harrison (6" 2", 195) will be two of the best first string ends in the loop. Tackles McCarney, Burgess and Cole and guards Salari, Sheriday, and Sirola are all gone. Lewis, Charters' sub at centre, failed, and Charters wasn't going to play, (being in final year Meds) but may have changed his mind by now.

Al Brown is here about to grab Queen's Ross McKelvey to hold the Gael to a small gain during the league opener in Kingston last season that the Blues won 7-1 by playing strictly defensive football. Masterson had drilled the Blues in defensive ball for the week preceding the game and it paid off with a win. Garside scored the only touchdown of the game.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

"It's the first time I've seen gum-chewing look sexy."

"Not much of a picture, but if you want it (sic), there's gobs and gobs of the stuff."

These comments, plus more detailed if rather unoriginal descriptions of the anatomical facade of Miss Silvano Mangano, were my preface to BITTER RICE. The buildup was not off-base, BITTER RICE is not a well-made film. It is corny melodrama, but it is a great deal of fun. And Sex abounds in lusty profusion, always evident and often vulgar.

Apparently BITTER RICE was made by director Guiseppe De Santis with serious intention. That's what it says in the handout from the International Cinema where the film has had a healthy stay. But I would suggest the purpose was not so much to cast a discerning eye on the bitter hardships of the rice workers in Northern Italy. Rather, like many Hollywood entrepreneurs, De Santis has successfully fulfilled his purpose to make money.

The parallel to draw with BITTER RICE is not with other Italian imports like THE BICYCLE THIEF, SHOESHINE, or OPEN CITY. They were concerned with serious themes and said them effectively. The parallel is with the products of Hollywood's Howard Hughes, who made Jane Russell what she is, picture-wise, and is concentrating on Faith Domergue, another anatomical specimen of smouldering dead-pan intensity.

But the frank outright sensationalism of BITTER RICE makes the haystack heavings of Miss Russell seem pretty tame indeed. Silvana Mangano does not act. Although we suspect she might be more able than the Misses Russell or Domergue. But Silvana reeks sex. In a picture in which the mud, the rain and the bedbugs are overwhelmed by extravagant display of bosoms and thighs, Miss Mangano cavorts and lingers to titillate a sometimes pulsating and sometimes embarrassed audience.

Her two jitterbug sequences (not very good dancing is an expert's comment) are the earthiest exhibitions seen on recent screen. Miss Mangano is not in the Puritan tradition.

But one thing lifted BITTER RICE from the criticism that it was just an Italian film gone Hollywood in the worst way. This was Doris Dowling's performance. Miss Dowling, who is the second feminine lead in BITTER RICE, had some Hollywood moments of which UP IN ARMS comes to mind. In that exuberant musicomedy which introduced Danny Kaye to movies, Miss Dowling was an American assembly-line blonde for whom Kaye aspired but didn't get. In a pallid role, Miss Dowling was a typical vacuous Goldwyn blonde.

In BITTER RICE, however, Miss Dowling has dark hair, speaks fluent Italian, and shows some semblance of personality and character.

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency.
All appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: For Men, MI. 9644; for Women, MI. 2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

New Executive Of NFCUS-ISS Meets Tonight

The External Affairs Commission of the Students' Administrative Council, formerly the local branches of the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the International Students Service, will hold its first open meeting at 7:30 tonight in Alumni Hall at Victoria College.

There will be reports on the All Varsity Aid campaign of last year, and the ISS Seminar and the NFCUS Conference this summer, and plans will be made for the activities of this year. Committees in charge of various programs will be formed, and Graeme Ferguson (IV Vic), the chairman of the commission, asked that anyone interested in working on one of these committees come to the meeting tonight, as the Commission is anxious to have volunteers instead of electing committees.

Local branches of NFCUS and ISS were united last spring under two sub-committees of the External Affairs Commission of the SAC, in an attempt to simplify and coordinate their work. The main duties and functions of the Commission include supervision of inter-university visits, the promotion of student exchanges, organization of student relief to European and Asian universities, and the study of student economic problems.

Purchase Cards

Detroit (Exchange)—Purchase cards, on sale to Wayne University students for one dollar, will mean a substantial reduction on many articles and services. This plan is organized by the United States National Student Association (USNSA), the American counterpart of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

Fifty stores in the Detroit area have agreed to honour the cards. They will allow the students a ten to twenty percent reduction on such items as appliances, flowers, clothing and shoe repairs.

The USNSA has arranged with firms and stores in university areas all over the country for reductions on presentation of these cards. It is one of the services of the organization to the students and is described as a step toward a general economic co-operation program for students throughout the United States.

In a report to the NFCUS conference on the possibility of organizing a similar system for university students in Canada, Fred Scott (Alberta) former western vice-president of NFCUS, said that efforts had been stymied because of fair trade acts in many provinces.

He recommended that local university committees should undertake to organize a purchase card system in their own communities. If successful, the plan might later be extended to a national level, he said.

The Dirty Word

One of the best comments we have seen on Peace was carried in an editorial cartoon in Maclean's Magazine about this time last year.

A young man was seen writing the word "peace" on the sidewalk, while his younger sister was bawling up at a window: "Mommy. Cyril's wrote a dirty word!"

Peace, as a subject, and as a movement, has become increasingly suspect in the past few years because of the highly organized campaign for peace which the communist forces of the world have been carrying on. And at one point it almost seemed that they had indeed succeeded in making of peace a dirty word, a trap for the unwary and a reason for increasing one's RCMP file.

Two events, unrelated in time and purpose, which have occurred in the Canadian student world in the past six months, indicate that the Canadian student is not quite so afraid of peace as some have maintained.

The first incident occurred at the University of Toronto last spring, when a well-organized spring cleaning of the University of Toronto Peace Council was carried out by a group of Toronto engineering students (and others). Sweeping in on a Peace Council that had by and large followed the party line, the "reformers" carried with them their own brand of democracy: a knowledge of the Council's role in the University, and of its rules and regulations.

When the smoke finally cleared the reform group had carried the battle. Under the presidency of Denis Bishop, IV SPS, they plan this year to carry on the activities of the Council in accordance with the principles of the democratic nations of the world.

They have yet to be heard from this year.

The second event involved more students. It is a resolution passed at the recent annual conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students held in London, Ont. The text:

The students of Canada realize that the path of future progress on the international scene is only possible within the framework of international peace.

We therefore join with students across the world in a sincere desire for peace. We deplore, however, all forms of peace offers based on propaganda to further political aims.

The students of Canada can best contribute to world peace by a program of action which brings students of the world into closer relationships and understanding and further by a program of concrete aid to raise the standards of living and study of our fellow students in all parts of the world without regard to race, color or creed.

Canadian students, by making their opinions known on a subject so confused as peace have taken a firm first step. What is needed now is action. The University of Toronto Peace Council should get to work. And the National Federation of Canadian Students will do well to back up its resolution with its proposed program of action and concrete aid.

Socialism's Bane

By WILLIAM GLENESK

Fresh from a summer's social work in a Dockland Settlement, in the first of three articles, the writer looks at the case from an east-end London, England, slum.

When arch-socialist Nye Bevan stomped out of the British Cabinet this year of bare majorities, and almost split the party, the east end Cockney muttered a low "Gor' Blimey," and breathed a little easier. The mad snowball-roll down socialism hill had come to a crucial end.

By nature the east Londoner thinks poles apart from the party he elected to power. Once past the Tower and Petticoat Lane, by tube or up top on the big bus, I found the people milling about in a pocket apart from life at large. Here roamed Dick Turpin and Elizabeth Fry, in the midst of a sprawling mass of industries packed into the lines of slums. Few years have passed since health, the trains and the mines were socialized, and the British mind has verily capsized in the rush of responsibility thrust upon it since the war.

Gone with the Dole are poverty, insecurity, and the trough of despair from which so many millions ate before 1939. Now fed by the hand of the new Welfare State, the fears and inhibitions of past years have disappeared. But new ones have stepped into the breach. Bevan led to a dead end in his One Way Only, and labour has lost the way. Too much has been forced upon too many in too short a time. As T. S. Eliot adroitly saw: "A thousand policemen directing the traffic, cannot tell you why you come or where you go." The Britisher looked for leaders and he got controls.

As a body he rejected Winston Churchill in the post war task, in spite of his great record in war, because he firmly believed that Winnie's aims did not coincide with his. Churchill was too deeply committed by his past. That capacity for ruthlessness which made him a Caesar in war, removed him as a candidate for an era of reconstruction in which imperialism and dictatorship had no place. In which persons and homes and freedom with responsibility had come into their own. Now in the octopus socialist state the tentacles of the bureaucrat are slowly winding their grip in and around the English way of life.

Down by the London docks just east of the Isle of Dogs, I talked with many a docker after his day's work as he paused in the corner pub. "We never 'ad so much to eat before," said one, and piecing together the jig-saw puzzle of comments, I saw the Londoner very much aware that never in the history of England had he so much of the goods of life for so little work. Years of bitter struggle lifted him out of serf-like conditions, and at long last in his new role of respectability and independence, where the "boss" no longer calls the tune, he has hedged himself with a network of defense which bristles with anomalies. Restrictive practices, the tale of bricks, the length of the stint, all are written in blood and tears.

For an outsider it may be simple to say "Let every man give of his best, let the bricklayer lay as many bricks as he can, and let the miner who is fit set the pace for the rest. We need houses, we need coal, we need men in unlimited numbers to produce to their utmost capacity." For the socialist state to cast aside the props that have been the laborer's mainstay for a decade is to take to great a risk. Yet if the "laborer is worthy of his hire" in terms of pay, in the vast majority of cases he is not in terms of work. Solid before the state directive is the wall of lost incentive. The question facing the worker in the grasp of the welfare state is just "Why work?"

In the crucible of war the Cockney was lost in the swim for survival when London sat on the front line. Now he has drawn into his shell again, and insulated against the winds of capricious odds by subsidies, planning, rationing and rearmament, the man on the labour front has run head-on into problems he has never faced before. Decisions are on his shoulders that were made elsewhere before. A new age of responsibility corrals old England, and faced with a newfound freedom, the city dweller is caught between two fires, on the one side his person, and on the other the state. On his ability to balance and fuse the two his future life depends. The means are at his disposal. But the question remmains: "What will the incentive be?"

CHAMPUS CAT

Agatha's Chant

"La Farcity needs rebels," cried Editor J. Poppinjay at a mass meeting held in the boiler room of UC yesterday. "Yes rebels.—Hot-headed, red-headed, bull-headed, empty-headed, two-headed, bloody-headed rebels."

"In short," he went on, "we need heads. Last year's have fallen. There are no more."

"They were all taken away from us at last year's annual staff banquet," he explained. "Due to a regrettable oversight, which of course I assure you will not happen again, Tossed Toadstool Salad was included in the menu."

Poppinjay pointed out that as a result of this there were numerous vacancies on and in the staff.

"Freshmen are welcome," he waxed and waned, "because they are so fresh, so firm in their aim, so fully-packed with that rebel spirit. I should not be surprised at all if some fresh young th g that will walk into our office in the next few days will not walk out again in 1955 as Editor-in-Chief."

At this moment he was interrupted by Rebel O'Hara, an exchange student from Crumbling Valley College, deep in the South.

"Ah heard you all giving that rebel yell. And here ah am all. But ah have to warn you all, ah have nuthin' to offer you—no experience, no ability, no nuthin'. Jist mahself."

"No experience is necessary," Poppinjay replied to this unexpected interruption. "We will train you."

"To get on with what I was saying, we need rebels. Full-blooded, red-blooded rebels."

At this point, some third year Modern History students in the audience began to chant "We want Riel."

The climax of the meeting came when Agatha Pipewater jumped up and proclaimed in a tense, terse, trembling voice—

"I have written a poem for the occasion:

"Rebels, rebels,
Be not pebbles,
If we can't FIGHT
Then — WRITE!"

The meeting was ended by the N.W.M.P.

Wahnupted.

Ludicrous!

Editor, The Varsity:

With regard to Harold B. Atlin's verbose and totally uncalled for epistle to the Editor of The Varsity, we, of the People's College wish to disagree with his extremely snobbish attitude. We are proud to state that at the University of Toronto the mind, not the attire is foremost.

We find his arguments ludicrous! Is it to be expected that all students, many of them in not too stable financial circumstances should wear their "Sunday Suits" to classes?

No one possessing such unfounded arguments could possibly have composed such a letter in any spirit other than one of merriment. Such narrow-minded views distressed us deeply however, whether expressed in mirth or otherwise. With all due respect, we remain,

Anne Innis, I.U.C.
Carolyn Schmidt, I.U.C.
Charlotte Holmes, I.U.C.

P.S. Is he by any chance drumming up business for Syd Silver? Or perhaps he is a salesman on a commission basis?

Comment . . .

It is encouraging to see that some action has finally been taken to slow down the traffic on Hoskin Ave.

Motorists racing to work and to supper along the speedway that cuts through the northern part of the university campus are now confronted with large pavement warnings which read: "SLOW SCHOOL."

We are given to understand that the Toronto Police Department had no malicious intent in choosing the wording of the road sign.

Those who are sensitive about having the University termed a school, on the level of the grade school or secondary institution, will probably keep their objections to their diaries. If "SCHOOL" is what's needed to slow down the Hoskin Ave. traffic, then "SCHOOL" it is.

Plan New Relief Campaign Similar to All-Varsity Aid

Helen, Cheerettes Will Rouse Spirit

Judges who have been choosing the cheerleader squad for this season handed in the final list of chosen leaders to the S.A.C. office yesterday.

The results are as follows: Head Cheerleader, Jim Dooley; Drum Majorette, Helen Mackie; Cheerleaders, Jean Broyer, Sheila Catto, Deanne Conacher, Nancy Elliot, Bev Secord, Shirley Sherbourne, Gwen Yeates, Barb Westman, and males Hugh Alexander, Jim Dooley, and Art Cringan. Intermediate Cheerleaders are: Shirley Bates, Nina Lancaster, and Daphne Walker.

It is hoped that with a bevy of spirited beauties such as this that home game enthusiasm will be bolstered considerably from that of last Saturday.

The judges were John Armour, Director of the Blue and White Society; Pete Turner, III S.P.S.; Hugh Niblock, II U.C.; Jim Dooley, III S.P.S., and Jack Gray, Occasional Student.

HELEN

The External Affairs Commission of the Students Administrative Council recommended last night that there be a campaign on the campus for overseas student relief, to be administered through the facilities of the International Student Service. This campaign will follow the general outlines of last year's All Varsity Aid campaign, but the details will be handled by a sub-committee of the E.A.C., subject to ratification by the Commission.

The two main principles of the campaign will be to collect a minimum of $10,000, and to give the contributors a clear and reliable report on how their money will be used. For this last purpose it was suggested that all money collected go through the SAC office, and that, if all the funds are given to ISS, at least 50% be designated by the campaign committee to a certain specified area or purpose, and advertised as such. Of the rest, not more than 8% would probably be needed by ISS for administration expenses, and the rest would be put into their reserve fund to be used for such emergencies as members of ISS decide.

A volunteer sub-committee of EAC formed tonight to elect a chairman and investigate and discuss details of the campaign. Their report will be presented to the Commission for discussion and amendment. Still to be decided are the nature of the campaign organization, the new name of the campaign, and fund raising methods.

Local branches of the National Federation of Canadian University Students and of the International Student Service have merged together in E.A.C. This NFCUS-ISS co-operation will mean that the Commission will have many sub-committees working on matters of common concern to both groups, as well as those secifically related to ISS or NFCUS.

These sub-committees will be handling such matters as providing information on bursaries, admission scholarships, living expenses, costs of texts, and job possibilities to students from other countries planning to enter the University of Toronto. A committee will be working on the improvement of student-faculty relations; another, on the preparation and distribution of information about all sides of the university's activities and character to interested student bodies all over the world.

Joint ISS-NFCUS Committees will be in charge of plans for exchange weekends, both here and in the USA; they will be looking after the problems of Displaced Person and exchange students; they will prepare information for student exchanges at the world university level, and they will be handling the publicity of the EAC group.

Sid Wax, IV Meds, was acclaimed as chairman of the International Activities Commission, the external affairs branch of NFCUS, which is also working with EAC. The job of the IAC will be, to a great extent, to arouse interest in the Edinburgh Conference to be held January 3rd to 8th as a follow up to the Stockholm Conference (a meeting of the national student unions of the west held last December). Wax feels that well informed student opinion is essential to provide mature student leadership in developing an independent Canadian point of view in International affairs.

The delegation to the Edinburgh Conference is prepared to break with the International Union of Students, a communist dominated body, unless they accept certain Canadian proposals, said Wax. However, he said that, while this is the time to break with IUS, if necessary, Canada must produce the necessary strong leadership.

But Wax said that in the recent NFCUS Conference at Western, two immature points of view appeared, both indicating that some Canadian

U.C. Lit Soc Plan Agenda

The first open meeting of the University College Literary and Athletic Society will take place on October 9. This was made known yesterday by UC Lit President David Rose (IV UC).

Topics for discussion include the new budget, and nominations for the first year executive.

The Literary Director, Albert Strauss (IV UC) outlined the year's aims for the society, "We hope to teach the students the workings of democratic parliamentary government in practice," he said, "and wish to co-operate as much as possible with the SAC, and other faculty governments."

Rose revealed that preparations for the UC Follies are nearly finished, that there will be two editions of "The Undergrad", and that Hydro Chairman, Robert Saunders may attend the first debate.

Saturday morning 32 girls tried out in the cold for the cheerleader elimination contest. By Monday afternoon the final winners had been chosen. The girls' morals rank high in the race for marks. Other points were enthusiasm, personality and cartwheels. Here are four of the girls showing off their stuff before the judges. Now they are having early morning practices for the first game in Montreal.

If...

. . . we had a Student Union building, the Faculty of Meds and others would not have to rent space at considerable expense for the painting of sets for college shows.

Film Soc Plans Varied Features

What would YOU thing if you saw a youth lying on a snowy sidewalk pointing a camera up at a parking signs? No matter how crazy it sounds, this and other such peculiar antics on the part of University of Toronto students last year resulted in an Honourable Mention at the Canadian Film Awards. The name of the film in question: "Parking on This Side." Its producers: the members of the U. of T. Film Society. "Parking", a short experimental film directed by Michael Sanouillet, was the Society's major production last year and is bringing wide recognition to the U.T.F.S. among other universities and film makers across the continent.

Every year the Society produces one or more films, on which any interested member may gain experience in whatever phase of production most interests him. Occasionally workshops are held with the sole intention of providing practical experience for aspiring film-makers.

Among the Society's other activities is the presentation of a series of rarely-shown films of fame or excellence. And for those film enthusiasts who like to know more about other opinions of the films in general, and the makers of the films in particular, discussion groups are held in conjunction with the Toronto Branch of the National Film Society.

This year the Society will present a series of twelve programs (two more than usual) on alternate Sunday afternoons during the two terms at 2.00 p.m. in the Museum Theatre. Owing to an increase in expenses this year, the membership fee has been raised from $3.00 to $4.00, but tickets, which were sold out last year, are going faster than ever.

The first program (Oct. 7) will commence with a color cartoon, "Inki and the Minah Bird", which has charmed even Surrealists. This was followed by a Chaplin two-reeler, "The Adventurer", and the original German version of "M". Features on following Sundays will include, Rene Clair's satiric comedy, "A Nous La Liberte", a fore-runner of Chaplin's "Modern Times"; the 1935 Academy Award Winner, "Mutiny on the Bounty", with Laughton and Gable; "The Childhood of Maxim Gorki," a Russian film, made in 1938, of exceptional warmth and charm; the famous German silent film, "The Last Laugh", with Emil (The Blue Angel) Jennings.

The Christmas feature, "Million Dollar Legs" is a W. C. Field comedy.

Starting off the New Year are three silent features of extreme variety but consistently high quality. "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" is a fantastic horror film produced by a group of German Expressionist artists and starring Conrad Veidt as the madman in whose mind the action takes place. "The Passion of Joan of Arc", a French silent film directed by Carl (Day of Wrath) Dreyer is famous for the intensity of its close-up technique and the superlative performance of its star, Falconetti. A complete switch in mood is provided by the riotous struggles of deadpan Buster Keaton against a mechanistic Fate in "The Navigator."

"The Eternal Return", a modern French film on the Tristan and Isolde theme, directed by Delannoy (God Needs Men) and scripted by Jean Cocteau, the Czech "Extase" an experimental film by Gustaf Machaty, and the 1936 "Camille" with Greta Garbo, will wind up the series.

Pacifists Meet

The first meeting of the University of Toronto Peace Council for 1951 has been called for tomorrow noon, in Room 21, Electrical Building.

Council President Dennis Bishop has asked all surviving members of the Peace Council to attend the meeting.

Last spring a large number of Engineers, with the help of some other persons, joined the Peace Council and elected their own executive.

Bishop also announced, "If the persons who were Secretary and Treasurer prior to March 13, 1951, would care to attend with Minute Book and Accounts, they would be welcomed."

Two Mice Left At Vic, Result: Summer Increase

Tiny pink noses, peering from the empty vastness of garbage cans and scurrying up the lengths of the dim corridors, were a common sight in the dark confines of Victoria College's basement this summer.

The red-tinged noses belonged to a score of small white mice.

Slyly tracking the white beasts among paper boxes, garbage cans, heating pipes and similar equipment, were the never-say-die Vic janitors, armed with sturdy gloves, patrolling the cavernous basement hunting their cagey prey, resembling a safari of Clyde Beatty's best.

The victorious captors, not disposed to cruel brutality, would snatch up the victims and allow them to roam at leisure on the Vic front lawn.

"We aren't certain where these little monsters came from," Vic Building Superintendent said yesterday. He thought perhaps some keen student had left two of the beasties in a locker at the closing of last session.

"The mice must have multiplied rapidly. We found them almost everywhere — many trapped hopelessly in garbage cans, unable to complete the steep ascent up the sides of the containers," he stated.

It was once thought that the mice, usually retained as pets or for laboratory experiment purposes, had fled from the Medical Building on the main campus through the vast system of heat tunnels. These originate from the heating plant adjacent to the Meds Building.

However, the janitor described the tunnel path the mighty mouse would be forced to follow — through Queen's Park, across Queen's Park Cresc., then to Vic Library, Burwash Hall, Vic men's residences and then to Vic itself.

"Brown mice have managed to complete the lengthy trek in the past," he said. He doubted, however, that the white would have remained white after a tunnel journey.

Decreased Sale of Books Brings End Of Discount

A combination of decreased sales and rising costs of operation forced the bookstore to discontinue its cash discount to students, said Alex Rankin, General Manager of the University of Toronto Press, in an interview yesterday.

The vast purchases of the post far years, due largely to the heavy enrolment of veterans had made it seem possible to institute a discount system. However, "the war babies have passed on" explained Rankin, and the decreased enrolment of the university has been reflected in the decline of book sales.

Last year's deficit on the net operations had amounted to almost $6,000 and according to the general policy of the university—no service department of the University should be operated at a loss—steps had to be taken to avoid a rcurrence of such a large deficit. Thus disappeared the 5 per cent discount on student sales.

"Students are given a special price on certain publications of the University of Toronto Press," explained Rankin. For example, R. MacGregor Dawson's Government of Canada is sold by the University Bookstore for $5.00. The price in an ordinary bookstore would be $5.50.

However, there was no discount given to students on University of Toronto Press publications and the "special student price was limited to a few books. The staff received a discount of 2 per cent.

The small production of University of Toronto Press books and their relatively limited sales made it impossible for them to extend their staff discount to students, explained Rankin. The net loss on publications last year amounted to $37,000 (including $17,000 deficit on the journals printed by the Press), he said.

The only possibility of reducing the price of the University of Toronto Press books to students would be to secure a wider circulation. This could be done, said Rankin, by encouraging other universities to adopt our texts and vice versa—in short, encourage some sort of standardization of texts used by Canadian universities. In this way larger volumes of texts could be produced at one time, thus reducing the costs of production.

At present, there was little possibility of securing any degree of circulation beyond our own univirsity, save in the case of exceptionally popular books, Rankin concluded.

Peace Treaty Discussed By Mayhew

The Toronto Branch of the United Nations Association was told last night by Fisheries Minister Robert W. Mayhew that the public needs to get the truth about the Japanese Peace Treaty and that he was not afraid to tell the audience what went on in San Francisco. He told an audience in the Economics Building that too often the public gets, either half truths or slogans. Mr. Mayhew accompanied External Affairs Minister Lester Pearson to the signing of the treaty last month and is going to Tokyo this year for further discussions with the Japanese Government.

Throughout his resume of the conference, Mr. Mayhew stressed that the treaty was one of reconciliation, not revenge. He said that while there was no guarantee that a treaty of reconciliation would work, punitive treaties have the seeds of their own destruction within them. He hoped that the long occupation had given the allies sufficient perspective for a successful treaty with the Japanese.

Mr. Mayhew particularly stressed the attitudes taken towards the treaty by the Asiatic countries. He said that while the 48 nations who signed the treaty were disappointed in the absence of India and Burma, the two countries had given opposite reasons for staying away. India felt that the treaty was too restrictive, while Burma considered that it was too liberal.

Mr. Mayhew told a member of the audience that while it was impossible for a Chinese representative to attend the conference, China was not excluded from signing a peace treaty with Japan. Mr. Mayhew said that it was left to the Japanese people to decide which government represented China.

Hart House Fall Dance Not Cancelled

In spite of problems posed by the Royal visit the following day, the All-Varsity Fall Dance will definitely be held on Oct. 12, Hart House officials announced yesterday.

At one time it was feared that the dance would have to be cancelled because of the difficulty of cleaning up after it in time for the visit of the Princess and the Duke.

There will be no restrictions on the lighting at the dance; the university electricians will work all night if necessary in order to clean up, said Hart House Publicity Director Gerry Hart.

Tickets for the dance go on sale tomorrow in the Debates Room, at $1.75 per couple. Only 900 tickets will be sold.

Four bands will be playing at the All-Varsity Fall Dance. They will be Art Hallman, Bob Cringan, Jim MacDonald, and (in the downstairs cabaret) Cy MacLean.

Hart also promised what may be the only pep rally of the year. He hopes to have the Blue and White Society, complete with cheerleaders, look in on the dance, which is the night before the first home football game.

"This will be the only Big All-Varsity dance of the fall," warns Hart. He pointed out that there would be no Meds Panacea this year, and fewer Blue and White Roamarounds.

Frosh Initiations

By Harold Buchwald

From The Manitoban, U of Manitoba

To this correspondent it has always been a source of pride that Manitoba has chosen to welcome her frosh regally, with pomp, extravaganza, and festivity. We believe that such freshman welcomes as the one which gets underway next Monday, and lasts throughout the duration of the entire week, are a greater tax on the ingenuity of their arrangers than hazing stunts designed to physically discomfort the initiated.

"Canada's Greatest Freshie Week", is no idle boast. It is a fact, plain and simple. Hazing celebrations at other Canadian universities have not always been good clean fun, as witness the following incident which took place in September of 1932 at the University of Alberta.

Upon registration, a certain freshman (whom we shall call "Paul") was assigned to his room in the university residence. The first night he and other freshmen were forced to leave their beds and were taken to another residence building. Their conductors were an initiation committee of four sophomores, and a senior student (in an advisory capacity) appointed by the students' union council.

At the second residence building, the frosh were stripped entirely nude, and while one sat on the floor another freshman pulled the first the entire length of the corridor, holding him by the ankles. After the sophmores were sufficiently amused, they ordered the frosh to take cold showers, and then sent them to bed.

The next morning Paul and the rest of his class were taken to one of the gyms and all were asked a standard question "What is the highest form of animal life?" The required answer was "A sophomore", but Paul, for reasons best known to himself, persisted in answering "R. B. Bennett." For some time he was harassed with this question but persisted in giving the same answer. All frosh were given numbers (Paul's was 213) and were compelled to have their clothing disarranged and their hair cut in a grotesque manner. Because of Paul's persistant refusal to answer "correctly" the above question, he was singled out for special punishment. His hair was cut a second time, and the letters "R. B. Bennett" were painted on his forehead with India ink, he being forbiddent to wash these letters off without permission. Thus he took his noon meal in the students' dining room.

After lunch he was returned to the gym and re-asked the all-important question. His answer remaining the same, he was thrown into a cold shower (stripped), and when the letters on his forehead washed off, the sophomores repainted them.

Next, Paul was taken to the upper corridor, and, in the words of the law report, was "skin-assed" five times and "hot handed." The former consisted of dragging him down the hall nude on his backside (as on the first night) several times. Then a cold shower. After this Paul was required to stand facing the wall, still nude, while several members of the initiation committee "harangued" him. His next ordeal was to crawl through an archway of committee members' legs on his hands and knees, being slapped on the bare bottom as he proceeded. After this "hot handing", Paul was sent to yet another cold shower and then returned to his room.

That evening he was taken to a mock trial and forced to submit to a "recantation", where, with appropriate ridicule, he was made to apologize for his admiration of R. B. Bennett. It was at this time that one of the committee members first noted a certain incoherence in Paul's answers to questions, and he was taken to bed.

The following day his confused and abnormal conduct caused his classmates considerable anxiety, and after a doctor was called in that evening, Paul was taken to the university infirmirary. Two days later he was taken to the psychopathic ward and pronounced definitely insane. By the end of the week he was taken to a mental hospital at Guelph, Ontario.

About ten months later Paul was discharged from the Guelph institution. He sued the University of Alberta, who were found liable, as the provost of the university had condoned the initiation proceedings by not requiring the committee to show him their plans beforehand (his excuse was that he was afraid he might have to prohibit some of the activities, and this was "against his policy of discipline").

Evidence at the trial, including that of Leonard W. Brockington, K.C.—perhaps Canada's most distinguished orator—revealed that Paul had been a better than average student who showed excellent promise, prior to the initiation. After his discharge from the asylum, Paul was never able to stay with university education.

At the first trial, Paul was awarded damages of $50,000, which Mr. Justice Ives of the Supreme Court of Alberta felt might be some kind of compensation for a shattered life. On appeal, this figure was reduced to $15,000, the learned justices of the appeal court feeling Paul was, by 1934, "fully recovered . . . (and) as well equipped to face the world so far as his mental condition is concerned as he ever was."

Fifteen thousand dollars is a lot of money in anyone's books. But whatever became of "Paul"? You can see him any day of the week, right here in Winnipeg. Day-in, day-out you'll find him huddled in his tattered, grey, double-breasted overcoat, the lone remaining button fastened through the wrong buttonhole. He sells newspapers in front of one of Portage avenue's biggest business blocks.

VARSITY SPORTS

By BRUCE MACDONALD

For the past week this department has concerned itself with little else than trying to predict the outcome of the present Intercollegiate football season, a task that any sensible being would avoid on the slightest provocation.

Our remarks, as in the case of all predictions in the unpredictable world of sports, have been punctuated with an innumerable number of "if's" and "but's". If the last few senior Intercollegiate football schedules can be relied upon as any sort of an example, then it is only too obvious that the prediction business is in for some lean years.

Last season, 99% of the gilt-edged sportswriting clan in this part of the country would have bet their shirts that McGill was going to walk away with the Yates Cup and would have to flex only a few of their mighty muscles to do the trick. Perhaps their positive stand on the question was aided to some extent by the claim of mentor Vic Obeck of the Redmen who felt that his "Four Year Plan" was coming to completion right on schedule.

The mighty Red team kept the sportswriters happy for most of the season. As a matter of fact, it was not till the Blues held them to a tie in the game in Montreal that will go down in Intercollegiate history as the Ice Water Bowl game that there was any hint as to what the real outcome of the season would be.

Then the Mustangs, a team with as much talent as any in the league, finally got its feet on the ground and proceeded to prove to the Redmen in no uncertain terms that the Yates Cup was not to be theirs.

With a background like that, a guy is treading on dangerous ground if he tries to award the championship to one team or another before the shouting even starts. And yet there are a few things that we can say without holding our tongues in our cheek.

For one thing, we fail to see how Western will be as strong a team as it was last fall. This does not mean that they may not be the team to beat this season, but any club that loses a backfield like the one the Mustangs were graced with is going to feel it to some extent.

McGill as well has lost several key players and will probably feel the loss more keenly than does Western due to a lack of depth in several positions. As for Queen's, it is out considered opinion that a large crying towel is in order. We hasten to add that we could be as wrong in this as we have in the past, but from all indications the Gaels have barely weathered a pretty tough summer.

That brings us to the Blues, and we will try to be rational about this. The Varsity line is a good one this year. That fact is more obvious defensively to date, but there is no reason why it will not be an effective two-way force before many more days of practice have passed.

Blue backfielders possess a lot more speed on the whole than last year's crew did, and on top of that the veterans from last year seem to have improved a great deal, due most probably to the keen competition for almost every position.

Where will the Blues stand at the end of the season? If they play the kind of ball they did against the Beaches they will give any club in the league a run for their money. If they turn in the kind of performances that were on display when they met McMaster last Saturday they are going to run into a lot of trouble.

What did I tell you about those "if's"?

Staff Meeting

There will be an important meeting of The Varsity Sports Staff today at 1:00 p.m. in The Varsity office Room 78 UC. All members of the sports staff must attend. Anyone, male or female, interested in writing sports, who would like to write in this page should attend this meeting. No previous experience in sportswriting is required but a willingness to work is.

Women Swimmers Practice Oct. 10 At O.C.E. Pool

Practices for women's Intercollegiate and Interfaculty swimming will get under way next Wednesday, October 10th at the Ontario College of Education pool in the University of Toronto Schools building on Bloor Street.

A special invitation is tendered to first year women and to all others interested in participating in competition this year. Practices will begin at 5:30 p.m. for speed swimming. Diving practices will get under way at 6:30 p.m. and try-outs for synchronized swimming will be at 7:30 p.m.

It is important for all those interested to put in an appearance at the first practice to give the coaches a better idea of what they will have to work with this season. Remember to be at the O.C.E. pool next Wednesday afternoon.

Varsity Soccerites Sign New Mentor

By TOM BROADHURST

At the close of the soccer season last fall, when Varsity's Senior Soccer Blues won the Blackwood Trophy for the ninth consecutive time, the team lost its very popular playing coach, and ex-Cambridge Blue, Brian Barton. Brian, who obtained his Ph.D. in economics at Victoria College, switched his affections to the University of Zurich in Switzerland, by joining the lecturing staff there.

The problem then arose of finding someone to fill Barton's very capable boots and to guide Varsity's Soccer Blues to what is hoped to be their tenth consecutive triumph.

The man that will replace Brian is Canada's Mr. Soccer, Ted Slade. Ted is now the Secretary of the Dominion Soccer Association, a job which he has held for the last two years. He, and Bill Entwistle of the Toronto Daily Star have been working hard at promoting soccer across the Dominion, and directing a lot of their attention to the development of soccer know how in the public schools.

TED SLADE

Prior to this Ted was perennial coach of Ontario All-Star teams, and also of All-Canadian teams competing in international tournaments. His coaching experience is wide and varied, having guided Canadian teams against such clubs as Newcastle and Liverpool from England, and European teams such as the Swiss Djgarden club in 1949.

This is not the first time that Ted has handled Varsity's soccer teams. Way back in 1937, and 1938 when Warren Stevens began his present job, and coached the football team, and Joe Krol was playing for Western, Ted coached the Soccer Blues to two championships in a row, and started them off on their long road to success that has yet to be ended. So Ted will be in the unusual position of carrying on where he left off in 1939 as he assumes his coaching duties this fall.

As a leading exponent of the game in Canada, Ted's name is a household word in Canadian soccer circles, and his wide experience with professional teams in the Old Country make him one of the best coaches in Canada today. The Soccer Blues are lucky to have a coach of his reputation, and should produce a winning team under his direction.

Half Squad Is Back For Hockey Season

Although the first pond hasn't frozen over yet, it's time to take a quick glance at the hockey situation. In less than a month from now an estimated fifty or sixty hopefuls will don skates and try out for the 1951-52 edition of the hockey Blues.

This year will see quite a few new faces on the senior team due to graduation and a few academic mishaps. It is expected that coach Wally Halder will have about half of his intercollegiate champions back for another season.

Among those not returning this year, will be Rich Howson who last season captained the Blues to their first championship in four years. His clever playmaking will certainly be missed. Porky MacDougall along with Rich received his degree last June and won't be taking up his usual portside defence position.

A major catastrophe befell the Blues when Ev Leuty, last year's stellar netminder missed the boat in the spring exams. Also falling under the examiners' axe were John Addison, Ray Ball, Bucky Walters, and Dave Kent. The latter who came like a house on fire towards the windup of last season, will leave a gaping hole in the Blue's strength down the middle.

However there is a bright side to the picture also. Gerry Fitzhenry and giant killer Joe Kane will return to form the nucleus of a strong rearguard division. Up front such perennial stalwarts as Ernie (no longer a bachelor) Frey, Pete Vernon, and Norm Fox are expected back. Returning for sophomore hockey roles will be Jerry Henderson, Bill Yeo, and Al Conboy. Conboy who came up from the intermediates towards the end of last season and showed very well will likely tie down a regular position come November.

Joe Kane

This year the schedule has been doubled which means that the Blues will have six home games instead of three. For Varsity rooters this comes as a welcome announcemount. With only three home encounters, it was difficult to whip up the usual enthusiasm given to the team in past years. Also every game will not have to be considered as crucial.

Interfaculty Football Gets Underway Soon

While football interest right now is centered on the Intercollegiate scene, the University of Toronto Intramural football league will get underway in another ten days. This loop, which is actually three leagues is composed of teams from the larger colleges and faculties on the campus.

All ten teams are already practicing in preparation for this year's Mulock Cup chase. The Cup, emblematic of Intramural football supremacy was donated by the late Sir William Mulock back in 1894 and has been awarded annually ever since.

The interfaculty loop last year was divided into three groups. Group one was composed of Victoria, SPS Firsts, UC, and Meds. The Vicsters got off to a slow start last season winning three close ones and tying Skule in their first four tilts. But the Scarlet and Gold got rolling in their last two games and trounced both Meds and the Engineers. SPS came second in group one, and this put them into the playoffs against Forestry. UC, the perennial late starters lost their first four games by close scores, and then when they had no chance to make the playoffs, turned around and beat Meds 17-6 and Skule 22-0. The Medsmen finished fourth, winning only one game.

Group two last year produced some of the best football seen around here for many years. The St. Mike's squad got off to a slow start, losing their first three games. But, in the last half of the schedule, they decisively beat the Junior Engineers and fought to two thrilling ties with the group champion Foresters.

Group three was very one-sided last year. Trinity's Red and Black squad dropped the opener to Dents by a 1-0 count on a rain-soaked field and then came back to win five straight. In their six games the Buttery Boys racked up 107 points, high for the year, while the opposition managed only twelve.

As group three winners the Trinity squad came up against Vic in the semi-finals and upset the favoured Scarlet and Gold squad by a 20-15 count. Forestry also scored an upset in the semis, downing SPS 18-6. The two winners met in the final, played on the back campus as the Stadium was ruined by another football final the previous Saturday. Forestry won the contest by a 24-14 score and took the Mulock Cup home for the first time in history.

Mikemen Prepare For Grid Season Have New Coach

This year's edition of St. Mike's Interfaculty Rugby entry promises to be quite an improvement over that of last year. With the exceptions of Jim McKenna and Jerry Hollyer who have gone up to the Intermediates, and star back Bill O'Heany, the team is practically intact, and, with the addition of some good-looking newcomers, should do well.

It will be remembered that last year the Double Blue squad finished up the season in high gear after a slow start and almost gained an upset over Forestry, the ultimate Mulock Cup winners. This season they hope to hit their stride early and if they do, will be nobody's pushover.

The line appears to be in good shape with such star holdovers as husky Danny Driscoll, John (Moose) Ryan, rotund Jack Lesage, and several others. The former was at the Blues training camp but because of an injury decided to play for the Irish. Sure-tracking end Ollie (Bud) Wood who nearly always gets his man is back for another season. In addition to this array of talent is a freshman guard, Hal Beaudry, who is expected to be another strong link in the line. He came to St. Mike's from a Sudbury team that went to the Red Feather tournament last year.

A good combination of power and speed characterizes the backfield. A good deal of the power will be centered in big Mark Wiant, one of the best line plungers in the league.

Flashy D'Arcy McDonald, John Miller, newcomer Jack McDonald, and John Burns at the quarterback position, are other backfielders from whom much is expected. Another man worthy of mention is Jim Coglin, a half on the Double Blue team of 1948 which took the Mulock Cup, who is back after being out of school for the past two years. He'll fill the same position this year.

Last but not least the Mikemen have a new coach this semester in the person of Bill Burgess who has had his boys working hard for a week now. He's changed the plays somewhat and introduced some new ones, all of which seems to add up to a top-notch Double Blue entry for the coming season.

Glen Speaks

Donald Glen, a former student at the University of Toronto and now a member of the Canadian Repertory Theatre, will address an open meeting of the University College Players Guild this evening at 8 p.m. in the Women's Union Theatre.

Glen's speech will give the freshies and freshmen an insight into Canadian professional theatre, according to Players Guild Publicity Director Jan Webster, IV UC.

While he was at Trinity College, Glen starred in several Hart House productions, notably "The Guardsman". He also spent a summer with the Niagara Falls Summer Theatre.

Remedial Exam In Pass English For UC Classes

University College is adopting, this year, an idea which has been practised for three years in Trinity, to improve the writing ability of its students. All pass English students of the first three years will try an examination on October 13 and 15. Their papers will be marked either satisfactory or unsatisfactory. Those who do not pass will be required to take a short "remedial course", in practical English Composition.

As yet, details of the course are not complete.

Tower Of Babel?

University College Principal Jeanneret's call for greater recognition of the classics in arts courses indicates a realization of the need for some unifying force in the present fragmented course of study to which undergraduates are subjected.

Honour courses currently offer the undergraduate the opportunity to specialize before he has a chance to know what he is excluding. On the other hand, the general course, lacking the narrow coherence of an honour course, rather resembles a musician who is able to sound several successive notes without producing a tune.

The sin of specialism and of professionalism is the most besetting one of the twentieth century. Together they have, according to the Spanish thinker Ortega y Gassett, "smashed the European man in pieces; and he consequently missing at all the points where he claims to be and is badly needed." Yet specialization remains our ideal.

Indeed, even at the university we allow large numbers of students to escape, with diplomas in hand, who have not even a rudimentary notion of the ideas of modern science and who have never been required to examine the philosophies which have so deeply influenced the development of our western civilization — we could go on indefinitely. The university is filled with large groups of people who have no notion as to what other equally large groups are studying. This is true not only of groups such as Engineering, Arts and Medicine, but also of smaller groups within the Arts colleges themselves. The Physiology and Biochemistry student knows little about the field which occupies the attention of the Sociology student, and the reverse is equally true.

We have marked off the field of knowledge which interests us so carefully, that we hesitate to extend it even a foot. We have forgotten that knowledge cannot be divided into given areas, than any division is an abstraction and meaningless unless taken in reference to the whole. We have assumed too easily that life in the twentieth century is much too complicated for any one person to comprehend, and have thereby justified our abstractions.

Now, specialism based on a broad background of culture is no sin, indeed, it is necessary for the progress of man. At present, however, the university makes no attempt to transmit the essential ideas of our time to the students as a whole. There is no common denominator within the university—it is simply a hive of unrelated activity.

Perhaps this what Principal Jeanneret would intend to do — provide a common denominator within the Arts colleges at least — by instituting a study of the classics in translation. In the past, the classics have played such a part in our western civilization, but the arrogance and self-confidence of the present day has pushed them aside as being useless.

The current judgment on the classics may be a true one. Possibly not. At any rate, there is an urgent need for some study or group of studies which would take the place of the classics in providing a basic foundation for our pursuit of knowledge.

Many people might be more sympathetic to Ortega's suggestion that each student be required to know at least the essentials of Physics, Biology, History, Sociology and Philosophy — subjects which he feels would at least acquaint the student with the bases of our modern culture. On the other hand, we might argue that any study which hinged so closely on modern times would tend to make the student lose a sense of proportion.

If we continue in the university to build on such narrow foundations as we are doing now, we may find that we have built not a mix of knowledge, but a Tower of Babel.

The Onion Skin

Country Parson

By MAX PARSONS

I am feeling rural. It's a feeling I like. I am not feeling rural in the bovine way, but almost in an anti-urban fashion.

It goes back to last weekend when I slipped up to Caledon Hills Farm (Hart House's country cousin) for a day or so. They were having a meeting on the Purpose of The University. That being far too intellectual we will not mention it again. That was the reason I went up however, and the reason for this rural feeling I have.

It's a couple of years now since Hart House persuaded the Board of Governors to spend some money and buy a farm. At first crack it seems like a screwy idea: the farm is forty odd miles away, it is relatively difficult to get at, and anyway, what does the kind of institution that Hart House is (a superior undergraduate men's club) need with a farm?

No doubt those questions have been asked by people who don't like farms. Or this rural feeling. Being nosey I have asked some questions and there is a philosophy behind Caledon Hill Farm.

To put it as simple as possible it's this: The men of this university tend from time to time to root themselves too deeply in the city. They lose touch with the intense quiet of a cool fall night where the stars, and not the Toronto Hydro, provide the lighting. They keep their hands too clean, and allow too much factory smoke to coat their lungs. Some of them even forget what it's like to scrub a floor, or chop wood. And there's nothing like indoor plumbing to make a man complacent.

City people start taking too much of life for granted. They get fussy, and neurotic. Some even start nursing ulcers.

This is a big country. It has more honest space than most countries. Space that isn't empty by any means. Space that only needs imagination (and people) to make it a vital and integral part of Canadian life. Hundreds of thousands of square miles of it—all without indoor plumbing, the Hydro, smoke, or the dubious benefits of insitutions like the TTC.

The Farm (devotees apparently soon refer to it reverently thus) is there for men whose minds and systems become too cluttered with the city. There is room to move around, pools in which to swim, some caves you can climb down into (small caves admittedly, but caves), and plenty of work if you are inclined that way.

Last weekend it was beautiful in Caledon. The sun didn't come out too often while we were there, and a lot of the time was spent in the intellectual way.

But there were some hours when I walked out into the fall and had it out with this tendency towards the rural feeling. The rural feeling won.

You can almost see Toronto through the smoke that hangs over it like a great cloud if you stand outside the main house at The Farm and look down over the ridge. You can definitely feel it, clutching at you in its own inimitable way. But in Caledon you become your own master, and there is time to think a little more clearly on things dear to your heart.

And then the rural feeling sets in, and you begin to wonder whether you have paid your membership in the Hart House Outing Club (the group that runs The Farm).

And when you realize you have you can sit back and relax, for beyond that there are no problems. There is space to be alone, and a warm fire for the late evening, and good talk for the wee small hours.

Like I say—I'm feeling rural. And it's a feeling I like.

OUR READERS WRITE

And Armchairs

Editor, The Varsity:

Let me take this early opportunity of raising a glad hossanna and a hearty back-slap for J. Arthur Rankin and his new super-colossal '51 version of the Bookstore. Rankin, boy, you've done us pround and we're grateful to you! Let me make this clear from the start so that there will be no ill-feeling when I close this letter with two humble requests and suggestions.

We're glad to see that Vogue comes readily to hand on entering the bookstore. Also World Sports, and (for the real culture-vulture) Time and Life, and (for the frat man) Fortune. How well you know, Oh Rankin, that many of the freshmen and sophs in our midst have a tough time reading; and searching out magazines by their picture covers alone can be quite some chore. So thanks a million for making life rosy and easy by putting the magazines right near the door where they surely catch the eye in the great big stand.

And we're glad that last year's discount policy allowed you to clear out so many of those dull old books. And the way you have invested the profits has really been something to crow about. After all the College Outline Series are books so they should keep the local highbrows quiet.

But now for my humble complaints: First, now that you have gained our regular business by the old cut-rate reduction, you can afford to sit back and take advantage of your official university backing and central location. Now you have our business, by all means cut out the discount. In fact, by all means cut out the whole tiresome business of selling books at all. BUT, why not sell (along with the penants) second-hand armchairs for men in residence? With a discount, etc., you might even be able to angle the Yonge St. merchants out of this business and then in future years you could really make hay.

Secondly, I'm just a simple college Joe — the sort of moron the politaker picks on the street — the type you're obviously catering to. I like the new carefree week-end atmosphere you achieved by investing in turnstiles (money well spent). I like those expensive, convenient chrome dispensers of mix for my liquor. But please, be kind to us STUDENTS — go the whole hog, cut out the last remaining books and cash-registers and bring in popcorn vendors and programs too (along with those turnstiles which are of such obvious usefulness) AND BRING IN CHEERLEADERS.

Very sincerely indeed,
Miles Kennedy,

A Good Bet?

Editor, The Varsity:

Your article on the NFCUS in the September 28th edition of The Varsity aroused my attention in regard to one section of the programme — the establishment of a travel service for students travelling abroad.

To do this would be a mistake for several reasons. First, and most important, travel, and particularly European travel, is a complicated and specialized field involving a myriad of problems to be mastered only by experience. The sole person able to cope capably with these problems is the recognized travel agent whose only business is the proper arranging of travel. Perhaps a good example of the inefficiency resulting from lack of experience was the stranding of some 100 American students in Luxembourg last season. Their "tour" was sponsored by Youth, Argosy Inc., an American company closely allied with many US university groups.

Second, most student travel organizations are "non-profit" in name only. The NFCUS is admittedly in the business for the promotion of its other activities and, unwittingly also, for the promotion of its officials' payrolls.

There is, it is true, a parallel between a student travel service and the 12-month-a-year, standard travel bureau — both are in existence for profit. But there's a difference in how this is garnered. In the case of the travel bureau, it comes from commission figured on the established rates, paid to the agent by the line of which he is an appointed representative. Since student travel services are NOT agencies of trans-Atlantic lines their profit on regular business can only come from a surcharge on established rates. The only instance in which the student stands to gain is when passage is on a chartered ship or plane basis which can always be arranged by a standard travel bureau at even lower rates.

A plea to fellow students — don't place yourself in line for a lot of inexperienced bungling. Stick to the regular travel bureau. In the end you won't regret it.

Sincerely
James D. Calladine,
I UC.

EDITOR GRAY RESIGNS

City Council Cheers

Here are seen three of the eager types that have finally turned nonsense into sense. Vic sophs June Chandler (riding tandem) and June Frazer (be-aproned blonde) make use of Dick Chamandy's ladder qualities to help paint one of the GECO developments in lieu of getting arrested while pulling some screwball initiation stunt.

Last night the SAC accepted the resignation of Jack Gray as Editor of The Varsity.

Gray tendered his letter of resignation last month when he learned that he had not passed the supplemental exams which would allow him entrance in the third year of his honor Arts course. This was the first Council meeting following his letter. The resignation was accepted 16-1, with Vic men the only opposing vote.

At the last meeting of the 1950-51 session, the Council rejected a constitutional amendment that all Council appointees must make their year. The members defeated the motion partly because of a speech by last year's Editor of The Varsity, Frank Moritsugu, in which he remarked, "Any editor of The Varsity who missed his year would feel a moral obligation to resign." Although Gray was under no legal compunction to resign, he tendered his notice on the basis of this speech. However, he stated that he wanted to remain as Editor of The Varsity.

Gray is enrolled as an occasional student so that he can write his pass supps at the end of the year and proceed to his degree.

The discussion on Gray's resignation split into two parts. On the one hand were those who felt that the SAC should accept it in order to maintain its "intellectual integrity"; on the other hand were those who felt that Gray was necessary to put out the best possible Varsity.

Strongest proponents of the first viewpoint were Chuck Hanley, UC, and Bud Trivett, Law. They felt that Gray could not be editor of The Varsity while he was an Occasional student.

"We want a good paper," said Trivett. "We also want a good football team. But we can't have football players who aren't enrolled in a course. For the same reason we shouldn't have an Editor who isn't enrolled in a course."

Chuck Hanley felt that the Council must remember the university exists primarily for the pursuit of knowledge, and that schoolwork must come before extra-curricular activities.

"If we are to maintain intellectual integrity at the University of Toronto, we must uphold that principle of academic work coming first," he said, "or the intellectual standards of the university will suffer."

The opposition viewpoint was set forth by Graeme Ferguson, Vic; Barb Browne, Managing Editor of The Varsity, and Frank Moritsugu, last year's Varsity Editor.

Ferguson said that more important than the principle of the editorship was the question of putting out the best Varsity possible. "The Varsity is not a one-man paper," he said, "and it can get along without Gray. The question is whether or not it will be such a better paper with him that we can afford to ignore the principle.

"I would prefer to have as editor Jack Gray, with whom I disagree on many points," he continued, "than someone with whom I agree but don't have as much confidence in.

"Gray brings experience, firm opinions and reasonable maturity to the paper," he concluded.

Moritsugu asked the Council who they thought could serve as an alternative editor, and commented "whoever he or she is, he cannot face the problem with the experience Gray brings."

Miss Browne said that no member of The Varsity staff felt prepared to take over the duties of editor.

She also pointed out that in previous years

SAC OK's NFCUS IAC Wax Appointed Head

A strong independent programme based on informed student opinion and the needs and wants of Canadian students. This is what Syd Wax, president of the student council, envisions for the International Activities Commission.

To facilitate this plan, Wax has organized a local IAC commission to assist him.

The student council approved Wax as chairman of the International Activities Commission, a subcommission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, last night. Duties of the IAC are to maintain a relation between NFCUS and other national student unions as well as to act as Canada's voice in international student affairs.

"We will, of course, try and make this programme an association of the best points of other student unions on international student policy," Wax said. However, he emphasized that it is time for Canada to go to meetings abroad and take a leading role in policy.

"By developing a Canadian point of view on the campi across the country and a mature, well-informed body of student leaders on international affairs," Wax said, "such leadership is possible."

Similarly he felt that if such a plan were achieved, the next NFCUS conference would not reflect the fear, prevalent at the recent meeting, of involving the Canadian university student body in international student affairs.

"We are mature enough now to use our weight and to step boldly into the international student picture," he said.

The group who will assist him in his plans, Wax said, will become experts in the field of international student affairs. In effect they will act as technicians, smoothly and quickly carrying out the work of the commission.

One thing I want to prevent, which has handicapped IAC in the past, he said, is to have the work of the commission restricted to one person, the chairman. For this reason Wax has established this committee of assistants. He also saw his proposal to have two vice chairmen of IAC representing other university regions, adopted by the recent NFCUS conference in London. It was at this meeting that Toronto was given the mandate to take over the IAC.

Main feaure of the IAC commission on this campus will be the preparation and mailing of a regular news bulletin on the activities of the IAC. Wax also plans to organize a secretariat which will handle all the correspondence in Canada and with other national student unions about IAC affairs. Finally a committee will seek to establish contact with some South-East Asian universities to make arrangements for a visit of a representative group of students to this country.

New Outlook Vic Freshmen Paint House

Victoria sophomores have decided to convert the excess energy of freshmen initiations into constructive channels.

About two hundred Vic frosh, accompanied by 75 upperclassmen, painted an Emergency Housing development in the north-east section of Toronto yesterday.

The freshmen were warned to assemble at Vic at noon yesterday with old clothes, and a paint brush, but weren't told what was happening. Five buses carried them to the GECO development, near the corner of Dawes Road and O'Connor.

There they spread themselves out along corridors, each person painting his own small section of the wall. By five o'clock they had used up 111 gallons of paint and had painted the corridors and washrooms of five apartment blocks.

It took ten gallons of turpentine to clean the paint-smeared freshmen up. Afterwards they had a wiener roast.

"This job would never have been done without the students," said City Emergency Housing Administrator, Harold Locke. "The City Council could never have afforded it. When things really looked bad, we would just have given the tenants the paint and let them do the job themselves."

Organizer of the painting project was Audrey McKim, II Vic.

Red Tape Delays Aid For Jamaican College

A brand new Students' Administrative Council last night made G. K. Searle, applicant for the Council's aid in rehabilitating University College in Jamaica, wait from 7:30 till 10:00 p.m. before giving him an answer.

After discussing their regular business and six committee reports, they passed a motion referring the question to a session of the External Affairs Committee, to report to the Council in two weeks. Mr. Searle will leave Toronto in a week and a half.

Mr. Searle described the birth struggles of University College, Jamaica, founded in 1948. Before then, students from the British West Indies had gone abroad to study, but the coming of war made this infeasible. A government grant of 700 acres of land gave them a start, and by last June four residences had been completed, with several others under way, including a 500-bed hospital.

Then came the storm. Searle quoted a report from one students who has seen the wreckage. "The storm wasn't really bad—it left most of the floors standing." The University was right back where it had started.

"As a representative of University College, Jamaica, I am asking you to do your best to help us out in this crisis."

Replying to a query in the discussion following the report of the External Affairs Committee two and a half hours after his address, Searle reported that an appeal to ISS revealed the following information. ISS could only act through international headquarters in Geneva, and this would have to wait until students reassembled in the fall. Nothing has been done by ISS as yet.

Searle said, "Right now the biggest problem we have is getting the building program going." They were lacking funds for this, he said, and were also suffering from a shortage of equipment. "We still need a great deal to put us on our feet."

Although Searle has lived most of his life in the British West Indies, he has spent several years at U of T, and last year moved to University College, Jamaica.

Located in Jamaica, it is a residential college, so as not to give Jamaicans an unfair advantage over the other islanders. The college pays passage for students to and from the college.

SAC at a Glance

The SAC at its meeting last night decided besides what is reported in other parts of today's The Varsity that:

—A gavel should be presented to Dr. J. McBirnie, last year's chairman of the council, and that Dr. McBirnie should be asked to preside as chairman of the council during the coming year.

—to approve the masthead of The Varsity as presented by editor Jack Gray.

—to hear a report following the expenditure of funds collected by All Varsity Aid. All Varsity Aid chairman Wax regretted that he did not have the exact facts and figures with him, but in six minutes managed to give a rough sketch of the expenditures.

—to appoint at a future meeting a chairman for the Radio Commission following the resignation of the representative from Emmanuel College, Newton Reid, who had been acting as radio committee chairman.

—to give the songbook committee $200 to use at its own discretion.

—to appoint the director of the Blue and White Society at the next meeting.

—to question the undergrad status of every appointment made during the meeting.

Tension Too High Shut McGill Union

Montreal (CUP)—For one whole week no student activities will take place at McGill University. In a plan to cut down on the number of failures, the student council approved a recommendation to close the student union for all activities and cancel publication of the McGill Daily, the undergraduate newspaper, during the week of November 19 to 25.

A concerted effort is being made by the university authorities to impress upon the students the need for budgetting their time and paying adequate attention to their studies, the McGill Daily reported. The student council is collaborating in this effort to "alleviate the tension built up in students during participation in extra curricular activities and allowing more time to study," the paper continued editorially. Several other changes are planned.

"The important factors to remember," the ditorial continued, "is that these steps have originated with the leaders of student government here. Too many students are still unaware that the fundamental purpose of student council is twofold. One is to regulate and guide extra-curricular activities and secondly, to keep in the mind of the students, participating in these activities, or not, the ultimate goal for the university student."

Turn Back Store Profits To Students

Montreal (CUP)—After its first year of operation the McGill University Bookstore will turn back its profits to the students by way of the Women's Union and the Student Executive Council according to the proportion of men and women.

Last year the bookstore sold over 50,000 books. It employed a full-time staff of nine and 27 part time.

Tons of Tradition Disappear Two Vic Shows Are Now One

The Vic Bob, which is 79 years old this year, got its name from the janitor of the men's residence, Bob Beare, who held annual get-together for the Soph Frosh. Included in these were songs, skits, etc, and out of it grew the traditional all-male Bob show. Usually put on in Massey Hall, in 1949 it was cut to skit size, due to the introduction of the Scarlet and Gold Revue, a co-ed effort.

In order to unify the talent of the college, this year only one show will be produced; one which will incorporate the two under the title of the Bob Revue. This co-ed production will be presented Nov. 5, 6, 7; containing more college tradition than the Scarlet and Gold, yet retaining the traditional title of the Bob.

Preparations for the new show began last March with discussions in the dean's office, when the merger was decided. A bare format was made during the summer and work was begun on skits and songs.

The leading figures in the organization of the revue are: producer, Terry Lawson, and co-directors Phelps Bell, and George McCowan. Due to their combined efforts there is much enthusiasm over at Vic, concerning the show. As for the Bob itself, it will be a strictly volunteer effort, but does not claim to be an entirely original college production.

Requests for scripts and songs have gone out to grads in such far-flung spots as England and Korea.

This year a full orchestra will not be used; two pianos, a rhythm section and a full chorus will replace it.

"The aim of the Vic Bob Revue is a fast moving show with plenty of spirit and enthusiasm," said Phelps Bell, and judging from the reception the new production has received at Vic, it will be everything they hope for and more.

HH Carillon Has Famous Ringing Story

The Carillon, the set of bells in the Memorial Tower of Hart House, was dedicated on Oct. 7, 1927, as part of the Centennial Celebration of the University. The chimes were for the most part bought from the War Memorial Fund, with the rest being donated by individuals. As yet they are not a full set, but there has lately been some talk of completing them. They are now played only for Convocation and other special events.

There was a time, however, when one bell was rung to signal the hour; but as this rang every hour, night as well as morning, and was said to disturb lectures as well as sleep, there were few pleas for restoration when the electrical system governing the bell's action broke down. Although no one seems to know the exact date when this occurred, Mr. Richardson, the carilloneur for the last sixteen years, places it at eight months before the outbreak of the last World War. He also mentioned a rumour of the time that the bell's silence was a sign of University disapproval of the world condition, but this latter he denied emphatically. He agreed with other sources that there was little need of, or chance for, the restoration of the hourly chime.

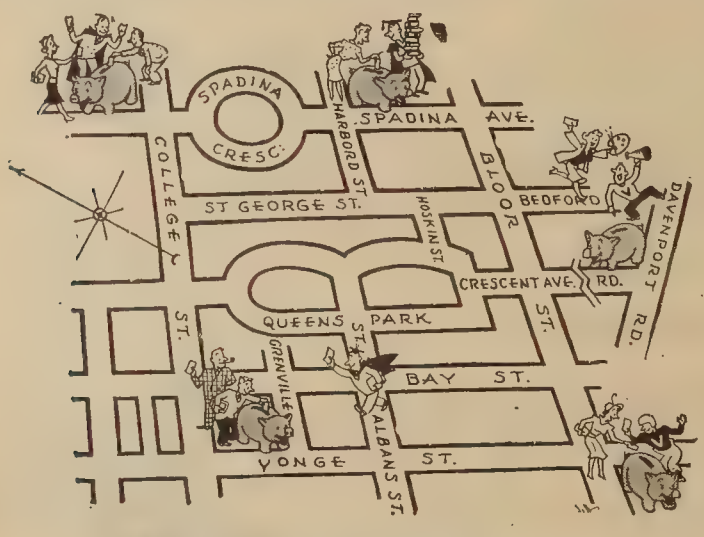
Gets Oxford Scholarship

Alex G. MacInyre, II Pre-Meds last session, has been awarded the Oxford Medical scholarship, University President Sidney Smith announced recently.

The scholarship, won by the 21-year-old Lucknow (Ont.) undergrad, is valued at more than $1,000 a year.

Dent Girls Get Course In Hygiene

The Faculty of Dentistry of the University of Toronto has introduced a new course this year in Dental Hygiene.



The course will be given to a maximum of ten women students this year. The necessary qualifications are that the applicants be between the ages of 18 and 30 and have completed their senior matriculation. There is a limitation at present as a result of lack of accommodation in the faculty. However, it is hoped that in the near future the accommodation will be increased to allow for a larger course.

A diploma in Dental Hygiene will be given to the graduates and they will be allowed to practice under the supervision of a dentist. They will be specializing in x-rays, cleaning and polishing teeth and promoting oral education, both in dental offices and in public health clinics.

The subjects on the course of study are similar to the regular course in dentistry with the addition of courses in hygeology, good chemistry, social work and psychology.

It is the immediate result of a request made in 1948 by the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario to the effect that the Faculty of Dentistry give consideration to the establishment of a course along this line. Again, in 1949, the Canadian Dental Association urged that the same thing be carried out to the same effect.

"It has been long recognized that there has been a shortage of dentists to take care of dental needs of the public, and I feel that this course will provide the services that will relieve dentists of tedious procedure and provide service to more people," said Dean R. G.

Women Match Male Molar Manipulation

Beware all you men! We have advance notice that the year 1956 will see five special dentists graduate from the Faculty of Dents; 1954 will see six dental hygienists proudly receive their diplomas, 1952 will see 23 dental nurses march by Convocation Hall.

And, stalwart males, these graduates will all be women. The field of Dentistry, long regarded as an almost strictly masculine domain, has been invaded.

As a student dental nurse, I'm inclined to think this an excellent turn of events. Imagine yourself quaking in the dentist's chair while horrible visions full of blood and excruciating pain fill your mind! Then, suddenly, a gentle hand smooths your forehead and an atomic dish in white, the nurse, soothingly assures you that the dentist will not use ice-tongs and a sledge-hammer, but merely forceps.

Or better still, if the dentist herself is a woman! Instead of the heavy, lumbering hand of so many male dentists, we have a gentle pressure and — ptff! — the extraction has been made.

While we (a dental hygienist, female dental student and dental nurse) stood on the steps of Dental Colege, a lone dental student (male) passed. A bitter smile twisted his face. Determined to discover the cause of his malady I managed to extract the folowing comment from him.

"Women!" he muttered between clenched teeth. "They spoil everything. Now the profssors only tell polite, unfunny jokes in class. What's more, the only reason that they make better grades is because they distract us, making strict attention to lectures impossible!"

This young man's gloomy outlook intrigued me, and I determined to seek out the opinions of other "men in the know". The results were these. Ninety-nine per cent of the males share the progressive outlook of the women. If there are women who genuinely have a liking for the field plus a certain technical ability, they say, they should be given an equal opportunity, both in college and in the practising fields. They also felt, contrary to our first young man, that women in a class made it more stimulating.

One student, however, strongly assured me that a female dentist's practice would be limited to a few unmarried elderly women.

One of the gals in the course admitted that at first she had been looked upon as nothing less than the outstanding box-office attraction at a freak show. "But now", she sighed, "they regard me as anybody's kid sister." Couldn't decide from her attitude which she preferred.

Winnipeg (CUP) — The new athletic wing, part of a $268,000 addition to the student union will be completed and will be ready for use in two weeks, University of Manitoba officials reported this week. To be ready next term is the student union wing. It will contain all student council offices, a lounge, locker room and cafeteria with the latest soda fountain equipment.

Bolton Camp For SCMers On Weekend

Rev. Ted Nichols, chaplain to Hart House, will lead a Student Christian Movement fall camp at Bolton over the Thanksgiving weekend in a series of group discussions on the question, "Has Life Purpose?" The camp will be held at Humber Glen, near Bolton, from Friday evening to Monday noon.

Other speakers at the camp will be Miss Corrie Ten Boom, who spent some time in a European concentration camp, and students who have returned from summers in Europe and at international summer conferences.

Dr. John Coleman, of the U of T Maths Department, will speak on what is wrong with the Church, and the student's role in it.

Rev. Robert Miller will also be at the camp. Recently returned from Germany, where he studied methods by which the Church may be of relevance to industrial society, he is now doing factory work in Toronto.

'Cherchez la Dame' Follies Inspiration

All that remains for the production of the UC Follies of 1951 is the casting and the practice, Victor Beube, social director of the UC Literary Society, said yesterday.

He added that the attendance for the Follies' try-outs has been promising with a good deal of talent showing up for the annual University College's big show of the year.

The choreography for the 1951 edition of the Follies will be under the direction of well-known dancing instructor Cynthia Barret. Miss Barret will be remembered by many University College students for her direction of the "Siren" dance in the UC Follies of 1950.

Joe Goldenberg, Publicity Director of the 'Lit', said the emphasis in this year's Follies will be on wit and mild satire with the artistic aspects of the show concentrating on the "cherchez-la-femme" theme.

Among the skits already skedded for the UC Follies of '51 is former 'Lit' president Jack Robson's burlesque of the All-American Bargain Sale.

Tickets for the '51 edition of the UC Follies go on sale the last week of October with the presentation scheduled for Hart House Theatre on November 9 and 10.

Masthead Meeting

There will be a full masthead meeting at The Varsity today at 1 p.m. This is an important meeting and all members are asked to be present.

Peace Council Meeting Not Open Meeting

The meeting of the University Peace Council announced in yesterday's Varsity is only an Executive meeting, not an open meeting as was reported.

However, Council President Dennis Bishop has repeated his invitation to the persons who were secretary and treasurer prior to March 13, 1951, to come along with their Minute Book and Accounts.

Registration Dropping Survey Shows

A drop in first year enrollment was prophesied in a recent survey of Canadian universities. Reasons for this have been the increase in fees in most of the universities and the end of the post-war rush of ex-servicemen on D.V.A. benefits. New Brunswick has an additional reason — its high school courses have been lengthened from four years to five.

McGill expects that the decrease will be very slight, although late registration has not yet been completed. Sir George Williams College, the University of Montreal, and Loyola College also expect to have about the same number of students as last year. All four have raised fees ten per cent this year.

The biggest decrease is expected at the University of Toronto, where about 1,500 fewer students are anticipated. Its enrollment will still be higher than any other in Canada—about 11,000.

Universities throughout western Canada expect a slight decrease in enrollment. University of British Columbia will probably be down about a thousand students, U. of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and University of Manitoba slightly less than that. The drop in DVA students will likely have its greatest effect upon the University of Manitoba and on Acadia University, in Wolfville, N.S.

Most Maritime universities expect a drop also. Specially affected will be Mount Allison and the University of New Brunswick, both of which lose many students who are now obliged to take an extra year of high school. Memorial University in Newfoundland, contrary to the general trend, expects an increase in registration. It may be able to confer the degree of bachelor of science this year. Formerly it has only been able to give an arts degree.

Western University enrollment will not vary much from last year, reports indicate. At Queen's however, it is believed that the number of freshmen will be considerably below that of last year.

graduates, who are not members of the undergraduate body, were editors of The Varsity.

Hanley said that it would be a shocking situation if no one could be found to take over the job. "There should be lots of intellectual students who have paid a great deal of attention to their studies up til now who would make good editors of The Varsity," he said.

Hanley also criticized The Varsity for its failure to bring intellectual problems before the student body.

Gray's resignation will be effective in two weeks. SAC Secretary-Treasurer E. A. Macdonald said that the machinery would be put in motion to obtain a new editor by the end of that time.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

My review of the combustible BITTER RICE has in two short days met many reactions, both complimentary and otherwise. Needless to say, reaction of any kind is gratifying to a columnist, who often feels his pearls are being cast into the yawning black maws of indifferent sows.

One of the more detailed and opposing reactions occupies this space today. Written by Doug Davidson, last year's Cine-matters columnist, it is a different interpretation of the Silvana Managano romp. I said BITTER RICE was a bad film but fun seeing. Davidson says it is a good film despite some excesses.

His point about the sisters Dowling is well-taken. But for the rest, Doug Davidson speaks for himself:

I note with satisfaction that motion pictures in The Varsity at last reached the status of Art, Music and Drama and have been granted accordingly a more spacious and regular coverage by one enthusiastic but intelligent reviewer (yourself).

In respect to de Santis' film BITTER RICE, however, I conclude that the view from the balcony differed radically from that from downstairs centre. I disagree with your statement that RICE is not a well-made movie and that its parallels are the Hollywood products of Howard Hughes. Technically the photography is superior to that in most of the Italian films we have seen in Toronto and de Santis' dynamic direction can hardly be compared with Hughes' stultified job in, say, THE OUTLAW. His sequence of the workers going into the rice fields and beginning work is one of the high points of recent cinema and the whole film has a vividness and vitality which left me feeling as though I had really been there. True, the script (the real weakness of the film) involved unnecessary plot machinations and melodramatic excesses (especially towards the end) which dragged the film at times down to the level of corn and hysteria. But there was consolation in the poetry of de Santis' unifying style.

Silvana's rather overwhelming physical make-up was necessary to the character she played: a young girl who attracted men so easily that she could afford to be bored with those who could not give her the glamour of the "real" life she thought existed beyond the confines of her environment. The tragic naivete of this character was well brought out by her vicarious delight in the recounted experiences of the older woman, who looked upon the same experiences with complete disillusionment. But perhaps the best representation of the girl and her empty dream was in the primitive and infectious rhythm and the superficial and meaningless riffs of the jazz records she loved to dance to. (The Americans have seldom used their own jazz so effectively.) And I think, since this is not a musical, the faults in her terpsichorean style not only do not detract from the picture but rather add a further touch of pathos.

The rest of the score I found unusual and effective also. In fact, on the whole, I thought it a good film with some bad faults, rather than a bad film with some interesting highlights.

Incidentally, I agree that Dowling's acting deserves credit but I am not surprised to hear that you noticed a marked change in her since Up in Arms, as the vacuous blonde in this Kaye musical was not Doris but her sister Constance. Doris played small roles in The Lost Weekend and The Blue Dahlia before leaving Hollywood to find better roles in Italy.

Good luck with the column.

PRELIM VICTORS

Rule Women Out Of Sailing Race

The female winners of the preliminary sailing race at the Queen City Yacht Club have been barred from competing in the finals, Sailing Club officials announced on Tuesday. This action came as a result of a decision by the Men's Athletic Association at Hart House.

The two winners, Ruth Gooderham II Trinity, and Barbara Munro, II Trinity, both members of the University of Toronto Sailing Club, were not immediately available for comment.

"The Sailing Club is sponsored by the Men's Athletic Association at Hart House," said Mike Winlow IV SPS, vice-commodore of the club. "Women are allowed to take part in sailing club activities but are not allowed to be members of the executive, nor can they sail in the coming inter-collegiate competition. If a boat should be damaged, the Men's Athletic Association wouldn't pay for the damage."

"The Women's Athletic Association should help to sponsor the sailing club," said Winlow.

The decision to bar women from the intercollegiate competition has been made known as a result of Tuesday's preliminaries at the Queen City Yacht Club at Toronto Island.

Twenty students, both men and women, turned out for the race. The contestants were divided into two groups, and two separate races were run off. Two top winners of each race were then to race in a semi-final to pick two winners to represent the U. of T. at the Intercollegiate competition.

It was at this point that Miss Gooderham and Miss Munro were forced to withdraw from the race. Having won top position in the preliminaries, they were to have sailed in the semi-finals. Knowing however, that even if they won they would not be allowed to compete, they declined to race.

The Intercollegiate competition will be held Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 6-7 at the QCYC. Entries from Queen's, RMC, and McGill are expected. Students interested in watching the races are welcome.

Engineers Plan For Big Events

Big engineering plans are in order this year. Despite a one-quarter drop in the S.P.S.'s revenue due to decreased enrollment, the usual gala events are being scheduled.

Skule Nite, produced by Paul Hutchison, IV Mechanical Engineering, and directed by Mike Harrison, IV Engineering and Physics, promises unusual entertainment in the six performances on Nov. 16 and 17. The Skule-At-Home is being held on Jan. 31 at the Royal York and the Grad Ball early in March.

On a more informal scale, the Freshman Reception, Oct. 1 started off the fall term. On Oct. 12 the by-elections for vacant offices will be held. The Skule Dinner—strictly engineers, the chariot race and Open House for the Alumni will follow.

Alterations may be found, however, in the Toike Oike. This quarterly magazine replaces the former year book and the newspeper. Besides containing humor and news, it is advancing the professional engineering outlook and university spirit around the Skule House.

Second Fire Guts College

Antigonish, N.S. (CUP — Fire razed the recently opened Xavier House, residence for the faculty of the St. Francis Xavier Junior College near Sydney last week. The roof of the building was almost completely destroyed, while the recently-decorated second floor was gutted.

This is the second time that the Xavier College project has suffered from fire. Last spring fire swept the Lyceum building.

CURLED TOES

Pulse and Rhythm

By PEARL PARNES

An amazing woman with a crown of auburn hair, bell-bottom slacks with shirt sleeves to match, and a Moslem pendant featuring a half-moon and star, settled down on a bear rug. Curling her bare feet under her, like one of the cats she loves, she took a long draw on her cigarette and began to talk about films.

Maya Deren, writer, producer, director, actress, dancer, light man, editor and distributor of her own avant-garde films, used to be a poet. Then she found a camera, capitalized on her feeling for dance and the poetic image, and began to experiment. The results have been sought after by leading universities all over the world.

Miss Deren is in Toronto as director of a production workshop sponsored by the University of Toronto Film Society. "Film makes organic use of the very physical nature and quality of the environment. Begin seeing light," is her advice, "and what happens to a form when light comes from in front, or in back or whatever. Become aware of pulse, without which rhythm could not exist, and of not the way things are, but their constant becomingness."

Most people have dead eyes, Miss Deren claims. They see a thing as thing and not as the beginning of a consequence or a radiance or of itself as an idea. "There should be a living contact between subject and object, a marriage of memories to create a new fruit."

And this intense contact and collaboration lies at the bottom of the film the workshop has just completed. Entitled "Ensemble for Somnambulists," the film explores the quality and nature of sleep-walking. Limitless use of space is made. The dancers are in collaboration with the camera itself, which travels with them through free space. The somnambulist is drawn into night life through a force other than his own will as a waking person. The film draws a parallel between this movement from within and the stellar constellations drawn from laws of motion.

The film, to be given a premiere performance Friday night at 9.00 p.m. in Cartwright Hall, was shot at Queensway Studios, where use of the studio, dressing room, lights, etc., was donated free of charge. Made as most of Miss Deren's films, with amateur equipment and a "shoestring" budget, it was begun with the germination of an idea, and under the principle that the best way to teach film is to do it.

At this point, Patsy, an Irish Terrier, belonging to Miss Deren's hostess, gingerly wound her way through the various cameras and tripods scattered around the room. Looking quite confused about the whole business, she curled up at Miss Deren's feet beside the wood figure of a "black girl in search of God," and licked the big toe, the only one with nail-polish, of the fascinating little woman. Miss Deren lit another cigarette, settled back, and began to talk about Haitiian mythology, Voodooism, and the screen life of cats.

SAC Meet OK's Plan For Radio

The SAC ratified last night the formation of a Radio Committee to be formed of an SAC member as Chairman, Rocky Martino (Grad Stud.), Harry Giles, IV U.C., and an executive of ex-officio members.

The election of a Chairman for this committee has been postponed until a future meeting of the SAC, when it is hoped that a more representative council will be present. The resignation of Newton Reed of Emmanuel College from the SAC and hence from Chairmanship of this committee made this election necessary.

Martino and Giles had previously made arrangements for this year's programs. These were approved by the Council.

The plans of the Committee provide for dramatic programs and a continuation of the Round Table Discussions broadcast over station CKEY last year. Giles will look after the former; Martino has offered to take the responsibility for the latter.

The committee, consisting of Giles, Martino and E. A. MacDonald, Secretary of the SAC, recommended that casting be done through various college dramatic societies. Arrangements have been made to use station CJRT-FM at Ryerson Institute to broadcast the dramatic productions commencing on October 15th. Providing the material is of sufficiently high standard and able people take part in the broadcasts, radio station CKFH has arranged time on Sunday afternoons for the University radio program.

The report submitted to and accepted by the SAC said — "Mr. Martino was particularly critical of Mr. Rasky of station CKEY, who acted as moderator of the Round Table Discussions last year. He said that he had been able to convince the station that Mr. Raskey was not suitable for this type of work. Mr. Martino said that he would be prepared to act as moderator in the discussions. Letters inviting staff paricipation in the Round Table Discussions will be sent out."

Martino said that station CHUM had offered to broadcast dramatic programs on the same basis as CKFH, but that he favoured the latter because of a higher listening audience.

Painters Again

Portrait

The water spilled off the end of the black mop with a slow sloshing sound, filled up the cracks in the broken tile floor and flowed darkly around the thick brown soles of a pair of wet work boots which shuffled behind the mop and seemed governed by its various spiralling movements as it described figure eights along its path. The boots led up a short expanse of grey wool work socks to meet the ragged cuff of a pair of brown tweed trousers, broken half-way up by the bony knees of the old man whose pipe-stem legs partially filled them. The crippled, work-worn hands which gripped convulsively at the upper portion of the mop handle in a sporadic effort to control its gyrations led along equally pipestem arms through the sweat-creased folds of a blue denim shirt and from there were lost in its cavernous folds.

Beads of sweat collected along a fringe of matted grey hair, trickled in tiny rivulets over various portions of his face and body, joined a main stream which poured off drop by drop to splash on the floor with a queer hollow sound to join the filthy grey puddle at his feet.

As he worked he thought: "How much longer can I work here in this stinking kitchen, with a drunken Chef and swearing busboys and waiters . . . swearing if they slip, slip on the dirty red tile floor wet with the water, foul with dirt from other floors, wet with my sweat, wet with my labor, as it pours from my tired body. Is that what my labor means? is that what my life is worth? . . . a hot-mouthed curse as a waiter slips on my life that lies squeezed across the floor, melted with the heat from a hell-hot kitchen, flowing from my flesh incarnated into red tile, cricified into a white sticky fluid (cleansing powders unknown) . . . . . is that what it all means?"

Stress Quality For H'coming Float Parade

This year's float parade during the home-coming weekend will stress quality not quantity acording to High Niblock publicity director for teh Blue and White Society. Niblock says that there will be no limit set on faculties, colleges or other organizations covering their entry(ies) for the parade on Oct. 27th (the Queen's weekend), but they will be asked to use discretion.

The Blue and White Society has arranged for a stadium show on Friday, October 26, a float parade on Saturday, and a Hart House football dance. However Niblock said that there will be no roam-around dances this year and no pep rallies are so far planned, although there will be audience participation in the stadium show.

Many students thought that the home-coming weekend would be when the Blues play Western as was the case for the last two years. However the date was set for the weekend last year and comes near the end of October regardless of whom the Blues are playing against.

ART REVIEW

Quite Canadian

An exhibition of paintings from beyond the hill and the Group of Seven is to be seen in Hart House Art Gallery. The work of eight Quebec painters is now on view and it will remain on the walls until October 27.

The best paintings were submitted by Goodrich Roberts. They are three landscapes and a still life. The three landscapes are more than Quebecian — they are quite Canadian. Their colors are dark and very vital, their composition simple and virile. Goodrich Roberts seems to have found another very Canadian approach to the country's landscape. He does not depend on the spectacular qualities of the scenery, but rather on his thorough knowledge of it. The strength of his paintings is not in surface simplification of shapes, but rather in simplification as achieved by definite and deliberate wide brush strokes.

Louis Muhlstock's paintings show great indebtedness to progressive French painters of the Nineteen Century. Their color is unexciting and mellow, their execution a bit effeminate. Only "The Home of Grovbert Lane" achieves both character and impact.

Marion Scott is the experimenterress in the group. Not only did she submit canvases in a wide range of techniques but also of subject. In "Figures" and "Fields" she used human form and nearly realistic textures. In the two "Stone and Protoplasm" canvases, she limited herself to organic free shapes. The monochromatic canvas seems more sensitive, more disciplined and has a strong impact. It also provides more interest than the polychromatic spatial pattern of the other painting.

The Portraits and nudes by Ernst Newman are not too inspiring. More vitality and more originality in vision and execution is to be desired. On the other hand, the colors of all the paintings are rather pleasant and harmonious.

Frederick Taylor's paintings remind the spectator of Norman Rockwell's Saturday Evening Post covers. Only perspective and a very static point of view seem to be the instruments of achieving a three - dimensional effect. The brushwork is rather dead, and also quite static. Though the scenes are presented in their full realistic attire, they lack fundamental understanding. The Nova Scotian fishing village looks like a newly-constructed antique, painted silvery-grey to appear older.

Probably the most powerful paintings in the show as far as conception is concerned are those by Ghitta Caiserman. Her paintings have a slight touch of symbolism in both the subject and colors. Almost Picassoesque in their cubist elements and colors in a clashing harmony, they give us two depressing views into human habitations. The "Staircase", on the south wall of the Gallery, seems the most powerful and dynamic of her canvases, until one notices the little needles and buttons which change the main theme of the painting into a mere backdrop for these little objects.

Pierre Petel's canvases are large. Two of them show the dramatic scenery of Miregau Island, populated by small people. This strikes me as the simplest and a not too successful solution of showing the giant scale of the rocks. In the "Old Montagnais Indian" Mr. Petel succeeded in transplanting the strength, beauty and organic qualities of the rocks into a human being, even though the background color is a little kitchen-like.

Fritz Brandtner works strictly in abstract terms. Two of his paintings have exciting textures, although these seem to be an afterthought. The other two — "Industrial World" and "Composition 32" — appear more integral and spontaneous. The first is not very pleasant to look at, because of its very strong color. The other is rather like later paintings of Fernand Leger.

The exhibtion is quite pleasantly arranged. It has the advantages and disadvantages of a small group show. It presents a cross-section of a group working under a common set of stimulants and influences. It illustrates well the freedom of expression under these conditions. Being a small show of a medium-size group, the show fails in its comprehensiveness. It presents a large number of different conceptions on two small a wall space.

It is logical to expect a strong influence of Gallic sensitiveness in a show of Quebec painters. It is present. And so is the directness and masculinity of Canadian painting at its best. It is evident that there is a sensitive open-eyed group of painters working in and around Montreal. Unfortunately it seems rather difficult to negotiate individually with the painters outside the province. Otherwise it would be very pleasant to have a one-man show of painters like Goodrich Roberts, Ghitta Caisserman and Marion Scott.

UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES

MEDICAL EXAMINATION.

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency.

All appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: For Men, MI. 9644; for Women, MI. 2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

CHEST X-RAY.

The Health Service provides chest X-rays. These are compulsory for the following students: All new students, all final year students, all medical and nursing students, dental students in their first and last two years, and all students who do not live in Canada. Appointments for all male students not in Arts are made through their class presidents during the week of October 1st. Arts students and all women students make their appointments during the same week at the Health Service unless they have already done so previously. All other students and staff members may have a chest X-ray if they wish. They are urged by the Health Service to do so.

Bewley Misses Opener, Obeck Has Troubles

Up till now, Vic Obeck's troubles have originated in his backfield, what with three starters graduating, one flunking, and one joining the army. Now he is getting the business up front too. Centre Bob McLellan was hurt in the game with Sarnia, and was expected to be out for a goodly portion of the season.

Tuesday he was given clearance to play in the league opener against Varsity this Saturday, but the same day the medicos put the nix on star guard Vince Capogreco. He is obliged to give up football because of an asthmatic condition. His replacement has not been named, but it will probably be Garnett Bertrand, a 190-pounder from Los Angeles, California, unless Obeck moves Bill Pullar over from tackle.

As for Varsity, Bill Bewley, right half, is definitely out for this Saturday. Bob Rumball will probably play in his stead. The way Rumball has been playing this year, we should be safe in predicting that Bewley won't be missed too much. Either Greg McFadden or Geoff White will share Rumball's position, unless Masterson decides to move McFarlane over from left half.

The only other serious injury in the Blue camp this week, end Jim Bell, figures the cracked metacarpel in his hand will be all right for the big game.

Quarterback Ollie Mandryk and Peter Hynbida did not dress for last night's practice, but they are not serious casualties. Ollie hurt his knee a couple of nights ago, and Hynbida has been getting headaches for the past few days.

The Blues scrimmaged with the Intermediates last night, as the Int's prepared for their first extramural test which comes next Monday. The little Blues take on the Cobourg Galloping Ghosts, last year's Intermediate ORFU champions. They have been strengthened in nearly every position by nine men cut from the Blues. Put these together with a handful that came down right after training camp broke up last month, and the Int line-up begins to look pretty solid.

By JACK STURMAN

The land-office business that pawn shops are doing along Queen St. these days seems to be sufficient evidence that a goodly crowd of Varsity guys and dolls are planning to head east this big McGill football week-end.

As the season opener looms on the horizon, the ozone is a-tingle with much speculation. The 1951 Intercollegiate grid schedule could and probably will be packed with more drama and surprises than any other six fall semesters you might happen to name.

A survey (if we are to believe pre-season press reports) among other coaches in the Intercollegiate seems to establish the unanimous awe of Varsity. But playing possum is a favorite pastime with football coaches so Mr. Masterson and team — BEWARE!

While Vic Obeck's squad is no longer the inexorable scourge of a year ago, no opponent would do well to underestimate the Redmen clan and its potential.

For Obeck it may be too early for tears. Bolstered by the reinstatement of pile-driving half-back Gene Robillard and the fleet-footed Ken Wagner, Vic may have the key to a smart, elusive backfield. And don't forget this Haskell Blauer chappie whose fancy-Dan ground gaining was largely responsible for Varsity's ignominious 25-0 defeat last year at the Stadium.

Up front too, the McGill villains have some proven behemoths to toil for the cause. Top linemen like Dave Tomlinson and Bill Pullar, who along with converted back-fielder Jim Mitchener are erstwhile Calgary Stamps, coupled with home-brews Clyde Whitman, Wally Kowal make for a nucleus front wall of rib-crunching prototypes who all scale well over 200.

No wonder then, that a guy could rub noses with a crystal ball from now until next St. Goofus Day and still be in doubt about Saturday's outcome.

Bill Bewley's shoulder ailment which figures to keep him out of Saturday's scuffle is a tough blow to Mr. Masterson and the team. Mr. M. hasn't seen the Yates hardware since 1948 when Walden, Toogood and Cummings were the bolts of lightning in the Blues' backfield; consequently losing Bewley for an indefinite period could be no less fatal than a knife in the back insofar as a Varsity championship is concerned.

In the oracular role that this preview entails, we must no longer quibble nor quail, straddle nor stall. McGill is dangerous. However, pulling a Drew Pearson, we predict that despite injuries the Blues' boiling spirit carried over from last season by Haig, Roberts, Hynbida, Garside, Rumball, Bell, Sutherland, Dancy, Hames, Brown, Evans and Harris will dispose of the Red shirts — but it'll be close.

Gambling all, we like QUEEN'S over the Mustangs in London, and in case anyone is interested — Brooklyn will "moider 'em" next year.

VARSITY SPORTS

Skule Hopes Poor Claims SPS Coach

Dave Munro, coach of the S.P.S. football teams is anything but optimistic about the fate of his charges this semester. So far there have been three practices and the turnout has been deplorably small, a fact which Munro attributes to declining enrolment in engineering.

But what is worse, all Skule teams have been virtually tripped by graduation and other things. Gone are stars like quarterbacks Mollehauer and Paul Valenti, linemen Rod McLenlan and John Rickaby and end Bill McCaggerty. Harry Hotchkiss has moved up to the Intermediate Blues. The coach is heartened by the addition of veteran half John Prendergast who is down from the Senior Blues. The coaching staff has been bolstered by the acquisition of two Johns, Platt and Riddel, who will add cohesion to team strategy and balance.

However with only about a half-dozen carryovers with interfaculty experience and the disappointing number of aspirants, every position right down the line is very much open at the present. And so, Dave Munro feels that while the team will be vastly weaker than that which went to the semi-finals against Forestry last season, he can field a team that is rich in desire, which is half the battle, and that will play a brand of football that will be worthwhile watching whatever the outcome.

UWO Query Where To Put Women

Oh the problems that a gal takes on when she gets hitched to a Western undergrad. The humdrum household chores of sewing, baking and making beds she can endure while hubby is out procuring an education, but when the old man tells her she can't go to the football game with him because Little Stadium is just what the name implies—too small, the missus naturally is ready to blow her top.

Used to be that wifey could cheer the Mustangs on to victory with hubby right at her side by presenting the regular student ticket plus an extra four bits. But increased undergraduate enrolment these past few years has crowded the Western Mrs. right out of the stadium and she's ready to string up Metras and Co. if they don't solve said problem pronto.

This the whole sordid mess is further complicated by the distressing fact that seating at Little Stadium is divided into faculty sections. According to Western Gazette, half of the undergrads in Meds are married which means that the embryo doctors plus wives would total 320 souls. But the Meds section have only 170 seats allotted to them. The only place to which they could overflow is the Arts section. But 40 Artsmen have trodden down the middle aisle, meaning a further swelling of their sacred pews. Last year Civil War almost ensued the ejecting of a non-medical from the hallowed confines of the sawbones.

As the Gazette sagely surveys surveys the matter " . . . given a large turnout, some student may stand while another student's wife occupies a seat . . . wives who suffer through the years of college as 'study widows' are excluded from a needed sharing of their husband's campus life. It means also that some married students themselves will be forced to remain at home rather than go without their wives."

The Varsity Sports Dept. does not attempt to unravel this grave sociological problem at Western, however its feelings on the matter are in accord with Shirley Cull, a Western Co-ed. When asked the question, "Should students' wives be admitted to athletic events free of charge?" by a Gazette reporter, Miss Cull said. "I couldn't care less, but it would seem to ease frustration if they could sit together."

Track Meet

Applicants are now being accepted in the intramural office for the Junior interfaculty track meet which takes place Oct. 9 (next Tuesday). Anyone who has not been on an intercollegiate tea mor won an interfaculty track event is eligible. Entrants can earn Reed Trophy points for their faculty as well as get a chance to make the Intercollegiate team.

Queen's Columnist Says Outlook Dim

John Horne, sports columnist for the Queen's Journal did not paint any too bright a picture of his team's chances in Intercollegiate circles in his comments printed in the Journal.

Horne remarks on a situation that has caused the odd raised eyebrow in Intercollegiate circles. Speaking of the McGill lineup, he states, "Gene Robillard and Ken Wagner, both fine football players, didn't do so well in their spring exams. They also missed their sups, but some person on the McGill faculty found a ruling that could be scrapped for their benefit so both are eligible once again. Every little bit helps."

There is no official ruling in the Intercollegiate league concerning this business of carrying sups for two years. It is difficult to say whether or not the practice is a common one as far as McGill is concerned. In any case, Obeck is bound to welcome the eligibility of these two backfield stalwarts.

UC, Trinity Win Women's Baseball

In Wednesday's softball game U.C. defeated PHE I 6-4. UC scored all their runs in the first inning. PHE rallied in the last inning but fell two runs short.

In the other game St. Hilda's downed St. Mike's 12-10, on the strength of scoring five runs in the last inning. Joan Stirling pitched for the winning team.

SCIENCE NOTES

Brewer's Yeast

By JIM ANDERSON

The Editor-in-Chief and the Science Editor have said words. "Leprosy!" he shrieked. "What a subject to start off a series!" By this time a rather large number of the staff had assembled to witness the massacre. Gathering up my various belongings in confusion and shame, I retreated to the door. His parting words inferred that if more dynamic material were not forthcoming, a better name than mine would grace the masthead.

Seeking consolation, I instinctively found myself seated in the inspirational department of a neighbouring hotel. While pondering the cruelties of literary tyrants, a wee small voice recalled me to reality.

"Pardon me, but your gloom is showing." This, I swear, came from a diminutive one-celled organism perched on the edge of my fourth glass. In answer to my obvious question, it identified itself as Saccharomyces cerevisiae, known to its intimates as Brewer's Yeast.

"What are you doing there?" I asked.

"That," he said, "is a long story."

Removing my stethoscope from my hip pocket where it was producing soul-shaking anguish to my person, I settled down to hear what the boy had to offer.

"Well, you see," he began, "it all goes back about six thousand years. Even in those days, misunderstood souls like yours sought solace from brewed beverages." After drawing my attention to his mastery of alliteration, he continued.

"You start off with barley which is allowed to germinate in order to produce an enzyme Diastase. When the barley has sprouted about two-thirds the length of the grain, the growth is stopped by drying in a dry kiln.

"The brown crisp grains (I thought of my breakfast cereal with revulsion) are then bruised between metal rollers and mixed with water to form a mash. This is about the consistency of porridge. (I will never eat breakfast again.) The Diastase which we formed a while ago is now allowed to act upon the starch in the barley and convert it into the sugars, maltose and dextrin. The resulting mess — I mean mix — is now boiled for a few hours with hops. These are clusters of the blossoms from the female (I grew interested) hop plant."

"Why do you add hops to it?" I mumbled.

"For flavor, for aroma, to stimulate digestion, to preserve the freshness, to retain the foam, to . . ." In his enthusiasm he lost his footing and fell violently into the glass. The account was resumed after I rescued him with my forefinger and placed him, dripping, on my handkerchief.

"Now this," he said modestly, "is where I come into the story. A pure strain of brewer's yeast is added to the mixture and fermentation takes place, splitting the sugars present into alcohol (whee!) and carbon diozide. You have to be careful at this stage about getting the stuff contaminated with wild or foreign yeasts."

I suggested that these were something similar to Skulemen, and he agreed.

"It is then," he continued, "a simple matter. The brew is allowed to age in tanks, after which it is filtered, bottled and pasteurized."

"Just a minute," I shouted. "If it gets pasteurized, you yourself must have been exterminated."

"Good heavens," he gasped, "so I must!" With these words he expired gracefully on my best lace-hemmed pocket handkerchief.

I didn't have the heart to blow my nose.

Rugby Ticket Sales Lower Individual Tickets Available

Graduates and occasional students will not be able to obtain student rugby tickets, according to the Athletic Association spokesman. However, students at the Ontario College of Education can buy them, along with all undergraduates of the university. Approximately 10,500 students are eligible.

It was reported that sales on the tickets are down roughly 20% from last year, when 8,300 bought them. The falling off in enrollment is blamed for this decline in sales.

Students who have not already purchased their season tickets and wish to obtain individual tickets can get them at the Athletic Association Office in Hart House on the Tuesday preceding each game.

UC Lit And Blue And White Compromise On Hart House

A compromise solution for the use of Hart House has been worked out by the Blue and White Society and the U.C. Lit for the night of Saturday, Oct. 10. A report of the meeting, on Sept. 26, of the co-ordinating committee of the SAC was passed at the council's meeting in which the Blue and White Society agreed to advertise the U.C. Follies with their dance on the Saturday night and to sell Follies theatre tickets with the dance tickets.

The compromise was necessary because the Follies needed the night at Hart House or the Lit would stand to lose $500 and the Blue and White needed the dance on Nov. 10 in order to obtain revenue without which it could not function.

The engineering representative, President Doug Sherk of the Engineering Society, said that Skule felt that the Blue and White should not hold a dance in connection with any faculty or college as students would tend to think that there was a connection between the two groups.

Charles Hanley, IV U.C., recommended a motion which would allow the chairman of the co-ordinating committee to call together the different faculties and colleges producing shows to discuss closer co-operation for the pooling of talents with special attention being paid to the needs of the All-Varsity Revue.

In connection with the solution to the dance in Hart House on Oct. 10, Hanly said that all the magnaminity wa snot on the part of the U.C. Lit, represented by Lit president Dave Rose. Hanly felt that some share of the credit should go to President Sid Wax of the council and the Blue and White Society in helping to guarantee a sell-out for the Follies.

UN Club

This afternoon a meeting will be held to form a new club on the campus. In most instances this would be a cause for alarm. There are already too many clubs competing with each other for time and space and people.

Yet in this case it seems like a sound idea. The proposal: A United Nations Club.

Perhaps more than any other political institution that man has devised, and certainly in the framework of the world of 1951, the United Nations is something that thinking persons should know about.

They should not only know of it, they should participate in it. The organizers of the Campus United Nations have set down as their reasons for adding another club to the throng the following:

—To inform student opinion.

—To take that opinion and mobilize it behind the principles and methods of the United Nations.

And to do these things they envisage a group able and willing to express itself on world issues. They see as some of its activities study groups to prepare briefs on public affair, a possible model General Assembly drawn from the undergraduate body to debate current world topics, organization for the celebration of United Nations Week, which this year comes between Oct. 21 and Oct. 27.

The sponsors of the campus UN feel that to make sure that the collective strength of the member nations of the UN is felt, an informed and voluntary association of people of all political faiths, convinced of the necessity of building the defenses of peace on strong foundations is needed. On this campus this involves a group who would study and support, or reject, the work of the UN.

Those who agree with such a view should attend the organizational meeting this afternoon at 4.10 in Room 1, Trinity College.

Aw Fella's

A married man, besides the purely economic and family problems he faces today, also finds odd little things to worry him.

One of these annoying small things is the business of football tickets for the wife. He can't get them, unless he wants to pay the regular shot. And if he does that, then he will probably have to send her with Old George, who forgot to get married and has been doing well in insurance. Most students couldn't afford two tickets in the public stands.

With more and more people being married, and larger numbers of them going to university, perhaps it is time for the Athletic Association to remove its ban on wives. Following the war, veterans' wives were allowed special books of tickets.

Students' wives are probably as interested in following hubby to the game as were veterans' wives. It may seem like a small problem. But if the Athletic Association knew how many unhappy situations could be avoided in student families by such a small concession, we are sure they would gladly make it.

It would also make for good public relations. Think of the value of the publicity shot of our young man, happy at last, with wife and junior, cheering on the Blues. It is something, gentlemen, to consider.

ISS SEMINAR

East and West

By FAYE SIMKIN

The primary purpose of an International Student Service seminar is to develop and broaden personal contacts among students from various countries. This article will attempt to illustrate how the organization of this year's session at Limbour, Que., with its system of lectures and group discussions, reinforced this aim.

The lecture-discussion system was adopted not as an end in itself, but as a means to promoting a free interchange of ideas among the students present. By this method, the lectures established a basis of fact, while the discussion group gave the individual student an opportunity to present his own viewpoint and to learn about the opinion of others.

Lectures were delivered by an able staff that resided at the seminar for the four-weeks course. Prof. L. E. M. Lynch, of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Toronto, was director of this year's seminar, as he has been for the past two summers.

Along with the lectures, a series of group discussions was initiated. In this way, small groups of students would meet to interchange ideas about the topics discussed in the lecture.

These "splinter groups" were one of the most admirable features of the seminar. Composed of about eight or ten students, the intimate atmosphere encouraged students to speak with freedom and frankness.

Also, by hearing the points of view of others, most students learned to appreciate and understand the difference in national backgrounds of the participants.

"Contributions and needs of east and west" was the general theme of the seminar. The topic was designed to introduce the Asiatic picture and its problems to the Canadian, American and European students. Similarly, western thought and tradition was presented to the Indian and Pakistani delegation.

During the first week of the seminar, a general survey of recent Asian history was made to acquaint westerners with the background of differences that exist among Asia, Europe and North America.

The following week was devoted to an examination of foreign policies, chiefly Canadian, British and American, towards southeast Asia. Most attention was focused on the thorny problem of China and the clash between British and American policy in this area.

The major topic discussed in the third week was the economic difficulties facing the countries of southeast Asia. Emphasis was laid on the inadequacy of the Asia systems of subsistence farming and land tenure.

Students also learned that in some countries there is a great need for machinery, the lack of which has completely hindered industrial development. Pakistan is a case in point. There, raw materials have to be exported to India to be processed into finished goods, which in turn are imported back to Pakistan at a great cost.

An excellent lecture on the prospects for the emergence of communism in southeast Asia brought the third week's lectures to a close.

Philosophy, religion and metaphysics were the subjects delved into in the final week. Dean Lachance, of the department of Philosophy at the University of Montreal, was lecturer. In many ways, this series of lectures turned out to be the most stimulating, as each student was made aware of the different sets of values that govern east and west.

Interspersed with the regular resident staff were a number of guest speakers. Blair Fraser, editor of McLean's magazine, delivered a talk on Canadian far eastern policy, in which he stressed the difficulty of Canada's position as a middleman between the two great powers of the U.S. and Great Britain.

A stimulating lecture on the Canadian parliamentary system was given by M. J. Coldwell, national leader of the C.C.F. Mr. Coldwell described the workings of responsible government in Canada, drawing interesting parallels with the American system of government.

Two other visiting speakers of unusual interest were the high commissioner for Pakistan, Mohammed Ali, and the acting high commissioner for India, P. K. Banerjee. Both discussed the histories of their respective countries and the problems that their newly-won independence has brought them.

In addition to these talks, there were several student-led lectures and panel discussions, all of them valuable because of the opportunity given to hear all sides of a major problem.

To round out the seminar program, a number of trips were arranged to points of interest in or near Ottawa. The parliament buildings, the national gallery, the dominion experimental farm, the International Pulp and Paper company were all hosts to curious seminarians.

THIS PAGE

I'm strolling down the avenue, nonchalantly mindin' me own business and I might add there's nothin' on my mind except a pair of girl's legs, when wham, bam, alacazam, who should I meet but me old uncle T.T.C. He looks at me; I looks at him, and then we heads for the gutter.

Dangling our feet over the curb, me uncle begins to tell me about his new projection. It seems he's digging a hole in the ground because his family's been yapping that they can't get across town fast enough. I listens with intent as he collaborates and I decides that I'll have to see this thing for meself. So we sets out for the centre of attraction. (And I don't mean the girl's legs.)

It's a battle ground. We hasta sidestep hundreds of plutocrats, smoking cigars and wearing steel helmets. Making our way through a wall of foremen, we proceeded to examine the craftsmanship of the workmen. Their work was as the busy labor of the bees amid the flowering countryside and under the sunshine. Suddenly, someone yells, "Hit the deck," and a huge pile-driver peruses above our heads. On the ground, mud splatters our kissers and oozes refreshingly between our toes. In this same position, I says to me uncle, "Hey unc; shall we go below?" He says to me, "You'll have to one day anyhow." So we proceeds to crawl to a cement-shoot, and down we go.

Lookin' about, we sees quite a jernt. In fact, I stands back in amazement. There, in front of me, digging into the sand with their bare hands, were hordes of women. I says to me oncle, "Why are you using women on this projection?" He says to me, "Well, we found that a woman's claws were a lot more efficient than a shovel."

We wanders about till I sees a sign which reads, 'Mudslinger's Paradise'. Looking in, I sees two old acquaintances of mine, Winston Churchill and Clement Atlee.

Then the chief engineer comes running up to me uncle T.T.C. "Hey T.T. Some of the boys made a slight error. They dug along until they came out of the ground somewhere on the outskirts of Buffalo."

With a rather chagrined look on his face, and rolling his eyes perfusely, me uncle exclaimed. "Watch the tax-payers' money." I knew what he meant. "Watch it disappear."

Me stomach begins to roll with hunger. Grabbing meself a knife and a piece of bread, that I just happened to have in me back pocket, I prepared to leave and head for the outside wolld. As I'm goin', me uncle calls out, "Where are you going' with that knife, in one hand, and a piece of bread in the other?" I quickly repulsiates, "I'm heading for the corner of Yonge and Bloor to wait for the traffic jam."

And so I takes 30, mefriendly.

John Schlumpf.

A Reminder

Readers are reminded that The Varsity welcomes letters — as long as they are signed. Signed means with your full legal name (the one they put on your birth certificate), your name, year course and telephone.

Signing letters is not just a foolish piece of red tape. It is a protection to letter writers. It ensures that your name won't appear on a letter you didn't write. We believe that, except for very unusual reasons, if a man or woman has anything to say, it's good enough to carry the writer's name. Few letters are carried under pseudonyms.

We have already this year received letters from several persons ("Smith", of Trinity, for example) which we would like to print. We cannot print them until we know where they come from.

We would also remind you that contributions to the top of this page are welcome. If you have some pet topic that you feel that you are either an expert on or have some point particularly worth expounding, write it down and send it in to us.

Dr. John McBirnie is shown here as he is presented with a gavel in appreciation of his services as chairman of last year's Students' Administrative Council. New Members' Night Out Hart House Officials Rule

The New Members' Night at Hart House won't be held this year, because House officials don't think it was successful in the past. The New Members' Night has been used for the past two years to introduce freshmen to the complexities of the male sanctuary.

According to Warden Ignatieff, too few people were attracted to the quieter activities, such as the Debate, and the Music and Art clubs, to justify the trouble caused them; while the crowds at the more interesting "spectator sports", archery, and rifle and pistol shooting, gave a false impression of their normal activity and popularity to those sincerely interested. As well as these difficulties, it was found that a very disappointing percentage of the freshman class attended.

The Freshman Tours were resumed this year, but instead of being the only official means of finding one's way about Hart House, as they have been in the past, they now will be supplemented by the "Open Nights" of the various organizations in the building. These events will be publicized widely, both in The Varsity and elsewhere, and all people interested in the particular activity will be invited to come and have a look. In this way it is hoped that more freshmen will as soon as possible learn about Hart House, and its various groups and activities.

Snow Hits West, Students Shiver

Saskatoon (CUP) — Old Man Weather has thrown a dirty punch at the agricultural community of the west in recent days, as a blanket of wet snow descended on vast stretches of unharvested crops. At the campus too, the worst September weather in years put a damper on outdoor activities, forcing the cancellation of the Frosh wiener roast, and necessitating the moving of the Griffith rally to the gym Wednesday evening. The welcoming committee was last seen madly dashing about in an effort to round up enough snowshoes to hold the torch race, irregardless—but without much success.

Numerous students were caught with their optimism up, and were minus overshoes and winter apparel when the blizzard struck. Large numbers, even the natives and aborigines of these prairie parts, suffered under the delusion that Thanksgiving week-end was time (and to spare) to trundle home and haul up the red flannels, wool socks, skis, skates and scrapers. Many were mortified to find to find themselves with naught but summer footwear, and were thus forced to fall back upon what is lightly termed, at City Hall, the Saskatoon Transit service.

Student woes during the first week of classes were thus not confined solely to the shock of meeting the profs. It is indeed a bitter blow, in a week of the bursar and of textbook and supply requirements (not to mention the urgent demands of overworked landladies) to have the elements, too, turn against the harassed student, already faced with the ghastly prospect of a winter term of classes, papers, essays, tests, exams, and the hurly-burly of Varsity life, in general.

Abjuring editorializing as much as possible in this objective news report, it is not too much to say that for our own sake, and for the sake of the country in general, we ought to hope and pray, and in all seriousness prayer might not be amiss, for a miracle of weather, a fine long Indian summer to wind up the fall season.

Bob Revue, Talks Head VCU Plans

The "Bob Revue", scheduled for November 5th to 7th and combining the old "Bob" and the "Scarlet and Gold" show will lead a long list of Victoria College events scheduled for this year, VCU President John Devereux said yesterday. Other events include dances, and chapel discussions.

The VCU expects to inaugurate within the next few weeks a new Chapel Service to be held one Sunday night of each month in the Vic Chapel, Devereux said. Speakers will be Toronto and district ministers who, he said, will talk chiefly on student problems.

It is expected that the leading parts in the services will be taken by students. These services are to be followed by receptions in Wymilwood, he said. Between the monthly Chapels, meetings to be addressed by non-clergymen in Wymilwood are planned. The visitors will speak on different aspects of religion as seen from a non-clerical point of view.

The two traditional Vic dancers are already planned, Devereux said. The Vic Informal, the annual "Dance of Romance," is scheduled for November 30th. This dance will be open to all students, but Victoria students will have priority on tickets from the limited supply.

The Vic At-Home, the "Dance of Distinction," is scheduled for February 8th. No information on the plans for ticket sales is available yet.

Troubles

Saskatoon, (CUP)—The University of Saskatchewan is having student union troubles too, the Sheaf, U of S undergraduate organ, reported this week. With enough money to start construction of the union, the university is unable to obtain a priority for steel from the federal government.

At present $340,000 has been collected already, including a provincial grant amounting to $100,000. Because of the holdup due to the uncertainty of the steel and also the international situation, tenders for the building have not been let.

McGill Bans All Activities During Week

Montreal (CUP) — The Student Union has plans to observe a "No Activities Week" from Nov. 19 to 25. During this time no student activities will take place. The Union will be closed for all student functions and the Daily will not be published. This is one of a series of moves that the Student's Executive Council plans to help cut down on failures.

Broadcast Royal Visit Over CBC

Hundreds of people will be involved in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's enormous task of making on-the-spot broadcasts of the forthcoming Royal Visit. Plans call for actuality broadcasts from some 23 Canadian cities, which will be made available by the CBC to all Canadian radio stations, to the BBC and American networks, and to the rest of the world in 14 languages through the CBC International Service.

The two teams of observers who will "leap-frog" acorss the country to broadcast the tour include veterans of broadcasts made during the Royal Visit of 1939. The two travelling teams will be preceded by broadcast engineers to handle technical preparations, and will work in co-operation with local CBC personnel at the points of origin of the broadcasts.

The broadcast plans include a nightly "Royal Tour Diary". For French-speaking listeners in Quebec, the CBC French network will report events across Canada. A well-known woman's commentator will be on the look-out for fashion news and other items of special interest to women.

Mike's Femmes Decline Union Of Debaters

An attempt to unite the debating clubs of St. Joseph's and Loretto Colleges failed Wednesday, with the result that St. Joe's may try to obtain recognition as the official women's debating organization for St. Michael's.

At the present time both of the women's Colleges affiliated with St. Mike's have their own debating club, neither of which can officially represent the College on the rest of the campus.

To stop what they called a "definite decline in the women's debating clubs, St. Joseph debate officials approached their Loretto counterparts with the idea of unification. A new constitution would be drawn up for the joint organization, to be called the St. Michael's College Women's Debating Union, and new officers would be elected. The new constitution would be based on two existing ones, with some additions made to make it familiar to the men's Senate Club.

Loretto College declined the offer. Their president, Barbara Lyon, said that while she was in favor of the union, such a venture was inadvisable due to the prevailing lack on interest on the part of Loretto students in their own college clubs.

"We must first build up our own organizations," Miss Lion said, "before we can think of uniting with anyone else."

"Since Loretto has declined our offer, St. Joseph's will investigate the possibilities of having their club declared the official women's debating organization of St.

BELLS & BOTTOMS

Yachts Away!

"Coming about . . . pull up the centre-board . . . let out the sheet" . . . these are the strange nautical terms that U of T skippers will be telling their crews in the Intercollegiate Sailing Competition this weekend. The University of Toronto is again defending the Leary Grant Trophy, symbol of sailing supremacy in Canadian universities.

U of T has held the trophy ever since Colonel Leary Grant presented it back in 1937. The trophy is a bell about six inches high and may be seen displayed in the Hart House trophy case. It has become traditional when calling for order at the Athletic Banquets, to ring this bell. No doubt the Athletic Association will have to buy itself a gavel if Varsity should lose the trophy this year.

Colonel Grant was at one time a Professor of Engineering at Queen's University. He became interested in university sailing and in 1937 donated the trophy.

The Intercollegiate Competition, to be held at the Queen City Yacht Club at Toronto Island this Saturday, and Sunday, is being organized by the University of Toronto Sailing Club. The competition and preliminaries leading up to it provide the only chance for club members to do some practical sailing while at school. Soon after the race's end the boats are stored away for the winter, and members are doomed to be landlubbers for the next few months.

But this sad state of affairs has never seriously bothered the U of T Sailing Club. Every month get togethers are arranged: talks on boats, sailing tactics, and personal experiences as well as movies and slides help to keep the land-locked member interested in the coming season.

The Intercollegiate Competition however, is still the club's biggest activity. Varsity's representatives in the race this weekend will be Bill Lynn and Wally O'Hara, both of St. Mike's II, in one boat, and Mike Winlow, S.P.S. IV and Terry Seary Trinity III, in the other. Queen's, McGill, and R.M.C. will each have four men in two boats. This year the contestants will be sailing snipes due to the courtesy of the Q.C.Y.C. These are 14-foot boats carrying two sails.

Activities are expected to get under way Saturday morning at 11:00 a.m. The races will be run off Saturday and Sunday. Good facilities for viewing the races may be had from the balcony of the Q.C.Y.C. At the end of the faces there will be a banquet at the club where the trophy will be presented to the winners. Then the skippers will go home, boats will be stored for the winter, and the Grant Trophy will again rest in peace.

Press Manager Rankin To Become Comptroller

The University of Toronto is going to have a new Comptroller.

He is A. G. Rankin, General manager of the University of Toronto Press, who will succeed Ralph Spence, November 15. Mr. Spence is retiring from the post of comptroller to enter business.

Mr. Rankin, a Toronto commerce grad in 1938, has been Press Manager since 1949. He will continue to be directly responsible for the policy of the University Press.

As an undergraduate, Mr. Rankin won the Maurice Cody prize for public speaking and John R. Moss scholarship. He was President of the Students' Administrative Council and president of the UC Lit. He was also Varsity's best miler for four years straight.

After graduation, Mr. Rankin joined Clarkson, Gordon and Company and qualified as a chartered accountant. He served as captain in the R.C.O.C. during the war.

If...

. . . we had a student Union building, we would not have had to turn the University Bookstore into a cafeteria.

Exchange Business Excellent

The SAC book exchange on St. George St. did over $1,600 worth of business in one day last week, according to a spokesman for the book exchange. The exchange will likely start paying off for books already sold, this coming Wednesday and a week Friday, October 12.

The book exchange can still use text books prescribed for University courses, especially in the fields of psychology, chemistry, and philosophy. The exchange still has a good selection in most texts, according to students working there. They mentioned that Dawson's "Government of Canada", "Psychology and Life" by Reuch, "Principles of Mechanics" by Seers, and "Calculus" by Philips are in great demand.

The exchange has second-term language texts in stock now which must be bought within the next two weeks as the book exchange closes down then. Students can either collect unsold books when the exchange closes or leave any texts which might be sold next year with the exchange.

Seeks Aid

Above is G. K. Searle, speaking before the SAC on behalf of University College, Jamaica, B.W.I. He has come to this campus to seek aid for his university, built by the students in 1948 and demolished by a recent typhoon. Said he, "the storm wasn't too bad—it left the floors standing". The SAC's answer will be made in two weeks. Mr. Searle leaves in 10 days.

Give Meds Lectures To Northern Doctors

A pilot program in decentralized medical education will be launched by the University of Toronto this month, President Sidney Smith announced recently. The plan is being financed by a $4,000 grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation.

Under the direction of Dr. J. A MacFarlane, dean of medicine, and the committee on postgraduate education of the Faculty of Medicine, teams of senior medical teachers will be sent to Kirkland Lake, Port Colborne and Fort Williams-Port Arthur to conduct one-day conferences for medical men in those areas. Six sessions will be held at each of the three centres, two before Christmas and four after Christmas.

The doctors will have advance notice of the names and qualifications of the visiting teachers and in this way it is hoped that an interesting conference round can be held on cases which will be presented by the doctors themselves, and discussion will continue on the problems thus presented. This method of teaching is considered in many ways more valuable than formal lectures and papers, and is a method with which each of the doctors has become familiar during undergraduate and interne experience.

AD LIB

One For The Books

About two years ago, around this time of year, we were sitting by our radio on a Saturday afternoon, twisting the dial in search of an American college football broadcast, when we caught the dramatically golden voice of ace gridiron commentator Bill Stern. Naturally, we paused to listen.

The broadcast had already started, although the game was not yet underway. Stern was going through the pre-contest routine in his own inimicable manner, and the chatter went something like this:

"It's a great day for football this afternoon, ladies and gentlemen. The sun is shining brightly, and this 63,000-seat stadium is jammed to capacity. The bands from both of these great colleges are out on the field making a very colorful picture.

"We have only a few minutes before this game gets underway, and in that time I'd like to tell you about a young man about who we're going to hear an awful lot before this afternoon is over." With this Stern went into one of his famous behind-the-headlines stories in that dramatically descriptive style for which he has been famous over the last fifteen years.

"Our story goes back quite a few years, when this fellow was just a young boy. He was rather a sickly lad, and one day when he was crossing the street he was knocked down by a truck. An ambulance rushed him to the hospital, sirens screaming. He was on the operating table for three hours while specialists worked on him. Finally the doctors emerged and told his anxious parents that he had a fifty-fifty chance of living, but that if he did he would never walk again.

"Well, that boy lived. And after six months in bed in the hospital he made up his mind he was going to show the doctors they were wrong. The same fierce will-to-win which made him live made him get out of bed and try a few steps. Soon he was walking around his room; then around the hospital; then around the block. He began to walk six and seven miles every day.

"He started practicing running, and before long he became the fastest runner in the district. But there was still one drawback—he was still small and slight of build. When he started high school, he went out for the football team, but the coach looked at him and chuckled: 'Sorry, son, we've got enough waterboys for this year.'

"This didn't stop him, though. When finally the coach did give him a chance, he was such a brilliant performer that by the time he finished high school, six colleges were bidding for his services.

"Well, that young man . . . (at this point there was the sharp trill of a referee's whistle) . . . AND THERE'S THE OPENING KICK-OFF . . ."

And we never did find out who this young man was, for Stern went on to describe a very fast and exciting game, and didn't come back to his pre-game story. The great Bill Stern was caught by the whistle, and that was that.

We told the story to many of our friends, getting a great kick out of telling it. All agreed that it was quite interesting and quite amusing. But the full narrative is not yet complete.

Last week we received a letter from our good friend Bob Gardiner, whom many will remember as last year's president of the U. of M. stage society, erstwhile M.C. at pep rallies, and generally a very prominent and popular campus citizen. Bob is in Montreal with the C.O.T.C. (he sails for England Oct. 5), and over the Labor Day week-end he hitchhiked to New York and back with a friend. His letter, in part, reads as follows:

"We were standing on the super highway just north of the George Washington bridge watching the limousines roll by in the high 70's and slowly losing hope of ever getting a lift out of the place, when, four lanes over, a Cadillac of some dimensions honks its horn and pulls over through the aforementioned four lanes of traffic and stops for us.

"We pile in and tell him where we're going and he informs us he can take us as far as Peekskill.

"Well, friend, after introductions have been dispensed with, the conversation drifts around to football and I just happened to think of your little story of the Illinois-Notre Dame game when Bill Stern never finished his tale of the 5 foot 5 inch wonder who would never play ball but came back and starred against the opposing team that day.

"This gentleman appeared to have a head for statistics, for he informed me that the player's name was — and I know this is going to spoil one of your favorite stories — Buddy Young of Illinois.

"So, Bucky, there you are. You finally know who the dauntless little one is, and I think you can be pretty safe in assuming that it's the right name, because the driver of our car is in the sports announcing racket——fellow name of Bill Stern."

HANDBOOK

We Lose, You Lose, They Lose

If you do not patronize our advertisers. This was the rather forbidding opening which met the gaze of the reader of the University Vets Handbook of 1917-18. In those days, the Handbook was presented to the students by the Young Men's Christian Association. As such, the proportion of advertising was much higher than it is to-day. In the course of its history, the handbook was produced by the Student Christian Movement, and more recently, by the Students' Administrative Council.

The Handbook, rightly named, contains the statistics vital to the student in general, and the freshman in particular. From its pages may be learned such things as what the S.A.C. really is, the telephone number of an executive member of a campus organization, athletic programs and requirements, or even what we did the Wednesday before the McGill game, if we took advantage of the space for diary. So vital is the handbook that it has been termed the Students' Bible. This can, however, backfire: A few years ago a student stopped a fellow student one day and asked if he might borrow his bible. He was somewhat taken aback when he was handed a copy of the New Testament.

Our present edition of the handbook owes a debt to its predecessors. Features such as a calendar, time table, and space for addresses and diary are common to most issues. Of interest is the change in the size of the map of the city of Toronto. Older editions gave street car routes and a key to the car identification system, which in those days was one of coloured lights.

The 1951-52 edition of the handbook is this year distributed free of charge to each student upon presentation of his admit to lectures card. One feature of this edition is worthy of note. This year for the first time the material is arranged in alphabetical order.

The Students' Handbook contains in capsule form much of the university life and tradition. From its pages can be gleaned an insight into the history of the institution. The '06-'07 edition contained a section ruled for a cash journal—a feature which indicates time has not changed the students' lot in some regards. At the bottom of one such page, in small print, is written "Statistics show that over thirty per cent of the aged are paupers."

At one time the handbook was produced for the various faculties. If you had been taking dentistry in 1914-15, you would have received a leather bound handbook with Toronto, Dents stamped in gold on the cover.

Browsing through old issues gives one a feeling of nostalgia. We see the names of faculty members of whom we hear in Convocation addresses. We see the old yells with which our parents used to express the same feeling for Varsity which we do with our present Toronto yell.

Will Avoid War – Conant

The following are excerpts from President Conant's speech last month to the American Chemical Society's 75th anniversary meeting. Delivered September 5th in New York City, the talk was titled "A Skeptical Chemist Looks into the Crystal Ball."

Let me turn to my crystal ball and try and glimpse the outlines of the balance of the twentieth century. In so doing I wrap the mantle of Robert Boyle around me, for he was the original skeptical chemist, you will recall. He was skeptical of the claims of the alchemist, and I shall follow in his footsteps to the extent of questioning the prophecies of some of the modern alchemists,—our friends the atomic physicists. For I see in my crystal ball,—to be sure a plastic one, as befits a chemical age,—I see in this instrument of prophecy neither an atomic holocause nor the golden abundance of an atomic age.

On the contrary, I see worried humanity endeavoring by one political device after another to find a way out of the atomic age. And by the end of the century this appears to have been accomplished, but neither through the triumph of totalitarianism nor by the advent of world government.

Unless my readings are vitiated by a huge systematic error, the next fifty years prove that human nature is tough and unyielding to a high degree. Neither the forces of good nor evil prevail to the extent that has been prophesied by some writers in the last few years.

The year 1984, for example, does not glare with menace in my crystal ball. Men and women still continue to be unregimented in many portions of the world. Paris, Berlin, London, New York, Moscow still stand physically undamaged by any enemy action since World War II. They still represent focal points for diverse national outlooks, though the alignment has shifted first one way and then another since 1951.

The Marx-Lenin dogmas are still honored in vast areas, but so too are the watchwords of the 18th century French and American Revolutions: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity . . .

Science Predictions

What must be described are the slow but steady changes in the production of energy and food. The era of liquid fossil fuels is by the close of the century coming to an end . . . Atomic energy has not proved to be an expedient way of lengthening the period in which man taps the sources of energy stored in the earth's crust. Solar energy, on the other hand, is already of significance (by 1976) . . . and by the end of the century is the dominating factor in the production of industrial power.

The practical utilization of this inexhaustible source of energy, together with the great changes in the production of food, has already had enormous effects on the economic and hence political relation of nations. With cheap power the economical production of fresh water from sea water became a reality. This was about 1958, and made more than one desert adjacent to a seacoast a garden spot . . .

These alterations coupled with the discoveries about the relation of dietary factors to the birth rate and rapid rise in the standards of living in nations once overcrowded seem to provide the new century—the 21st—with an answer to Malthus. The problem of overpopulation, while not solved, promises to be in hand before 2050.

This last forecast may seem to you clear evidence that my prophetic machinery has gone wrong, that my plastic crystal ball is cracked. But let me add a microphone to my equipment and listen in to what people are saying about this subject as the 21st century dawns. They date the changed attitude when Nehru advocated the establishment of birth control clinics in India and 1961 when the biochemists made available cheap and harmless anti-fertility components to be added as one saw fit to the diet.

As the decades went by and the 20th century drew to a close, the attitude of the religious leaders of the world on this subject, so they say, completely altered without any diminution of religious feeling . . .

But how did the industrialized nations of the world avoid deindustrializing each other by atomic bombs, you may inquire? Only by the narrowest of margins, is the answer; and only because time and again, when one side or the other was about to take the plunge during the period of intensive armament that preceded the great settlement, the expert military advisers could not guarantee ultimate success.

Of course, the turning point was in 1950, the first year when collective security became a reality. For when the free world had once made up its mind to meet each type of military threat of the Soviet Union with a defense against that threat and no longer relied on the magic of atomic bombs, from that moment on hopes for an eventual disarmament revived.

By the middle of the 1950's, I see balanced forces again at the disposal of the Atlantic Treaty Nations. It is then clear in Moscow that there can be no easy march to the Channel ports. To be sure, for a decade or more the series of battles in different parts of the globe and the economic sanctions had time and again nearly precipitated World War III . . .

Unless my observations are in error, I find the 1960's a time when constructive steps away from wars are first being taken. Fifteen of twenty years after the first atomic bomb was fired, a sober appraisal of the debits and credits of the exploitation of atomic fission had led people to decide the game was not worth the candle.

Of course, experimental plants were producing somewhat more power from controlled atomic reactions than was consumed in the operation of the complex process, but the disposal of the waste products had presented gigantic problems,—problems to be lived with for generations. The capital investment was very great. But quite apart from the technical difficulties there was the overriding fact that the potential military applications of atomic energy were inherently inimical to the very nations that controlled the weapons. A self denying ordinance seemed but common sense.

Once the illusion of prospetity for all through the slitting of the atom vanished from people's mind, the air began to clear. The dividends from the great discoveries of the 40's were recognized to have been the introduction of powerful new tools of investigation in both pure and applied fields of chemistry. The success of a vast technical undertaking to make atomic weapons showed what could be done in other radical departures. The rapid progress in the utilization of solar energy is thus seen as a consequence of the atomic energy development . . .

Just enough egreement is then (15 or 20 years from now) possible in the United Nations to proceed with gradual disarmament. Just enough inspection proves to be possible to enable even the most suspicious to trust an international guarantee to the effect that there is no assemblage anywhere of vast amounts of fissionable materials and of guided missiles.

The existing stocks of fissionable materials are put beyond the immediate reach of any nation. The possibility of wholesale atomic raids by a nation which treacherously repudiates the treaty is eliminated, sufficient information at least can be guaranteed to settle men's doubts about that sort of war. (And by the 1960's I see people unconcerned about the existence of a few bombs more or less in another nation's arsenal!)

Clearly, an industrialized civilization could destroy itself and thus leave the world to those peoples not yet heavily urbanized and mechanized. But people are saying, as I listen in on the 1960's what sense is there in that? Admittedly the individual components of this civilization are distrustful of each other. Admittedly each must protest its integrity if need be by force of arms, but why continue to live on an artificial earthquake fault of one's own making?

The date of the great settlement is not clear in my reading of the future, but sometime between 1960 and 1980, the climate of opinion altars. The rearmament of the free world has done its work. Armies, navies, planes are still on hand but the trend is towards less rather than more military power. . . .

So much for prophecy. Now in conclusion, let me come down to earth. . . . The hopes for a decreasing emphasis on military force born in 1945 have proved illusory. The free world is once more threatened by totalitarian aggression. We now realize that in this century at least free men can protect themselves against disaster only by facing the possibilities of war realistically. Peace cannot be achieved through magic either physical or political.

We have invented machines to do much of the labor once performed by slaves or serfs, but there is no mechanical or scientific substitute for those personal qualities on which our liberties are based. Ideas must, if need be, be fought for. Frontiers must be protected against invasion by human beings ready to die if necessary. And those frontiers are for us in the United States the world frontiers of freedom.

When World War II ended we believed in miracles—some in the miracles of science that would protect us militarily with a minimum of inconvenience, certainly without blood or tears—others believed in international miracles which have not come to pass.

It is easy to be defeatist about the prospects for peace and freedom and to forecast the future only in terms of a global war. I have ventured to do otherwise and with all sincerity. To my mind the prospects are far more hopeful than they were two years ago.

The peoples of the free world have been awakened from their dreams of an easy peace, they have faced up to the realities of the mid-twentieth century. Before long they will be armed and ready. When that day comes the fear of communist aggression will cease to haunt Western Europe. When that day comes, one can begin to talk about a real settlement of the international situation. Ideas that must now be regarded as Utopian will once again have vitality and meaning.

All this may seem to the pessimists among you—those who believe a third world war to be inevitable—as to much wishful thinking. But because I have so much confidence in what free men can accomplish when once aroused, I believe that in spite of grim years ahead this second half of the 20th century may yet prove to be a period of gradual disarmament and peace.

Fall Plays Program

The U.C. Player's Guild announced its immediate fall programme at a meeting on Wednesday night. On October 20, Jack Robson is directing "Riders to the Sea" by Synge. "Twelve Pound Look" by J. M. Barrie and directed by Pearl Barnes is being presented on Oct. 24.

The speaker for the evening was Don Glen. Mr. Glen was a member of the University of Toronto, and has lately been with the Brae-Manor Stock Company. Mr. Glenn gave an interesting and inspiring talk on the theatre in three general aspects: the Canadian professional theatre; little theatre groups as obstacles; the position of college groups in the professional theatre scene.

Mr. Glen stated that the purpose of a strong little theatre group should be growth into a professional theatre. He stressed the importance of college groups as a training ground in all phases of theatre, especially business and stage managing.

A lively discussion followed the talk, and the evening closed on an enthusiastic note.

Book Gift

The University of Toronto Press has announced a gift from the Association of American University Presses of approximately 200 books to the University Library.

These books formed the extensive display of recent University Press publications which were on exhibit at the Royal York Hotel during the annual convention of the Association held here in Toronto last June.

The U. of T. Press, which is celebrating its 50th birthday this year, was, for the first time, host to the Association, which had not met previously in Canada. The convention was attended by 108 delegates and guests, representing 37 university presses, various foundations, and literary and trade publications.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

This is written on a warm almost "sultry" October evening, when thoughts of books and lectures are submerged by vague romantic yearnings and a heavy lethargy. It is not a good night for hard work, but it is probably serving as perfect atmosphere for enticing "eligible" frosh into the joys of fraternity life.

To the unwary "eligible," one might suggest a careful reading of Chapter Five of Max Shulman's very funny Barefoot Boy With Cheek. A less pungent if more eye-pleasing an entry in the field of fraternity comment is the 20th Century-Fox film, TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GIRL. It can be seen in the smaller neighborhood houses now.

Some criticism of TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GIRL has centered on the point that the film seems "childish," much ado about naught much. This may be so from layman eyes, but to many undergraduates the unflattering yet brisk and clever appraisel of a sorority may seem very valid indeed. The actions of the girls in the film are very silly and childish; at the same time what can be seen these afternoons and evenings on this campus suggest the actions are also too true for comfort.

TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GIRL is the story of an eager and quivering young Freshie who enters college with one purpose in her fervent heart: to make the Tri U sorority. Her palpitating mother (a Tri U herself) almost wishes this even more than her daughter.

The Freshie makes her mark on the campus by helping the reigning frat BMOC cheat successfully on a French exam. As far as the Tri U types are concerned, she is "made" on the campus. Not only that, she is a favorite for Frosh Queen.

But she is disillusioned when she gets a glimpse of the phony sense of values behind the sorority ideals. This is brought to a dramatic climax when a mousy pledge is harshly "de-pledged" and undergoes a breakdown. Turning her back on the sorority, the heroine has only one cloud in her newly-found peace of mind. How will her poor mother take all this? she worries. Delivering the punchline, hero Joe Blake, no frat man he, says "Mothers have to grow up sometime too."

TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GRL follows other 20th Century-Fox films like GENTLEMAN'S AGREEMENT, THE SNAKE PIT, NO WAY OUT, in outspoken-ness about social problems. When it was released early in the year, reports were of panic among Greek letter societies. This panic was stabilized by a decision to "be calm".

Fraternities and sororities have a reason for being disturbed about TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GIRL. It says the societies have a very wrong sense of values and are not good. But the film is much too superficial in its approach. The basic problems of fraternities in democratic society are only hinted at. But the hinting is usually clever and sometimes subtle.

Effective are the portraits of the house mother, the house leader, the fashion plate special, and the plain drudge who gets the blackall. We laugh at TAKE CARE OF MY LITTLE GIRL and find our laughter is mixed with pity.

Jeanne Crain is the heroine and she it attractive enough. Helen Westcott, Jean Peters and Mitzi Gaynor are excellent as some of the many beauteous coeds in the film. I do not know the name of the pert young lady who plays the maverick Casey, but it is regretful she wasn't given more to do.

And Dal Robertson as the true-blue all-knowing hero Joe Blake would probably capture the hearts of even the sorority girls in the audience. If there are any.

Jean Negulesco's direction is sure, the script sparkles, the production is handsome and Technicolored. There isn't a classroom in the picture. It is a good evening's worth of movie.

Thec campus film season opens with something new when the University College French Cine-club opens its season with showings of QUAI DES ORFEVRES this afternoon and evening. The U. of T. Film Society opens its sell-out season Sunday afternoon with M, the German version which brought Peter Lorre to prominence some years ago.

And downtown, a movie famine has been overcome with the openings of such stellar items as TALES OF HOFFMAN, SEVEN DAYS TO NOON, PEOPLE WILL TALK, and HOTEL SAHARA. So, like that gentleman in Vancouver, I guess I'll be seeing you at the movies. (Fanfare via CBC transcription.)

No Party People

Editor, The Varsity:

Again it is time for the campus committees to organize the year's activities. Among these activities, and one of the most unknown, is the Carabin Week-End. This exchange between French-speaking Canadians and English-speaking Canadians is an attempt by university students to eliminate the friction between these two heritages through better understanding.

Perhaps the students sitting on this committee should stand back and consider the responsibility and opportunity they hold in arranging these weekends. The ultimate purpose of the exchange aims at a very high ideal — the true spirit of brotherhood. It is easy to create a superficial, temporary feeling of friendship and union through scurrying bouts of gay social entertainment. But are these lasting, solid relationships which we can turn to in years to come? Let us have a party, (we all love them), but only one, to celebrate our new friendships—not to acquire them, to commemorate our new ideas, not to form them.

However it is not the programme of events, but the calibre of students chosen which will have the most influence in making a successful weekend. This is not a place for "party people", but for mature students who realize their responsibility to society, to Canada, and to their university. Perhaps if the various colleges themselves could select students, through personal acquaintance, we would overcome the problem of selecting from names and written applications.

Let's accept the privilege and responsibility of our position as university students, and make a sincere attempt to develop greater understanding and tolerance towards our French-speaking people.

Hart House Prejudice

Editor, The Varsity:

We saw the announcement about an All-Varsity Fall Dance, tickets to be sold in the Debates Room, Hart House. Being co-eds, we were not allowed into the Debates Room, so handing our ATL cards to the porter, we explained our mission and asked him to inquire about tickets. We were informed that only students were allowed to purchase tickets and attend the dance!

Is there something wrong with ATL cards of female students, or is thhere no such thing as a female student We would suggest to the dance committee that there are such things as female students whose fiances, husband, etc., etc., do not attend university!

We think this discrimination is entirely unwarranted, and fully out of harmony with the ideals of a modern progressive university such as ours (is supposed to be!).

Jackets, Foresters, And Rights

Editor, The Varsity:

I see that the old controversy about Hart House attire has again raised its head. In this connection, students and Hart House officials may be interested in hearing the opinions not just of two or three people, but of a whole faculty.

At a meeting of the Forester's Club in Hart House on Tuesday night, a discussion was held on whether the students should be allowed to dress exactly as they please, or whether — for the good of the University and perhaps the student — some sort of discipline should be imposed, requiring them to be smarter in their dress.

Of an attendance of 85, only 9 voted in favor of discipline, and so were out-voted by about 8 to 1. Those who were against discipline gave the following reasons for their stand:

(1) Some could afford only one suit, especially after paying the higher fees this year. They could see no reason why they should have to wear it every day and so spoil it for special occasions.

(2) Some felt much more comfortable physically and no less comfortable mentally, when wearing more casual attire.

(3) The large majority, however, voted mainly against the principle involved. While they felt that it was definitely to their advantage to be seen wearing suits or sports coats, they could see no reason why they should be forced to dress a certain way, even for their own good or that of the University.

With all due respect, I hope this will help all who read it to obtain a slightly clearer idea of student opinion. We are not a bunch of tramps, but we demand our democratic rights.

President,

Finns Are Realists

Editor, The Varsity:

I feel that I must beg leave to protest to you that I was misquoted in your edition of Monday, October 1. At no time during the interview I had with your reporter did I say that the Communist influence on Finland was very marked. The actual facts point to quite the contrary situation. Finland appears to enjoy a relatively large measure of freedom from Russian interference with her domestic affairs. If the Finns are conscious of their mighty Russian neighbour it is in a negative way. The keystone of their policy is the avoidance of any political moves that will irritate the rulers of the Soviet Union. For example we were told by a reliable person that off the record there is an agreement among the editors of the non-Communist press to eschew the raising of any controversy in their columns which would tend to deteriorate relations with the Soviets.

But lest any of my readers infer from the above that the Finns live from day to day in an atmosphere of adject fear of the Soviet Union let me hasten to dispel any such notion. The Finns are above all else realists. They want to preserve their independence and culture above all, but since no avenues of positive action to do so are open to them in the event of a general conflagration, they are not going to waste precious time worrying about the future. They cling to such national symbols of strength as the late General von Mannerheim who led their army in the successful resistance to the Russians in the Winter War of 1939-40.

Let me emphasize, Mr. Editor, that it was this very absence of Russian influence in Finland's internal affairs that led some of us who visited that country this past summer to come to the conclusion that Russia plans no aggression in Europe in the near future, for if she did then the softening up of Finland would be proceeding apace now since the potential threat of using Finnish territory for air attacks on the Russian hinterland could not be countenanced by the Politburo. In short sir, from what I saw and heard I conclude happily that Finland is no Czecho-Slovakia!

Olie Mandryk has moved up from a spot on the Intermediate Blues of last season to fill, along with lanky Alec Lawson, the important quarterback spot on the Blues. Showing great improvement over last year, Ollie is a slick ball handler. Coach Masterson has hopes of getting Ollie's pitching arm, the one that did a lot of business for the Intermediates, back into top form for senior Intercollegiate competition. Ollie will have his chance to find a few holes in the McGill pass defense tomorrow afternoon if the weatherman decides to hold off the rain in Montreal.

Starting his third season with the Big Blues at end, Al Brown rates as one of the seasoned veterans. Al has always been a tower of strength in the tackling and pass-catching depts.

Marsh Hames (left) is with the Blues for the second season as an inside. Troubled with a head injury early in the season, Marsh has seen little action this fall, but will be on deck against the Redmen tomorrow.

Johnny Evans (right) the 1950 Johnny Copp Trophy winner is back in his old spot at tackle this season. Always an outstanding lineman for Varsity, Johnny is the captain of the Blues this season. A favourite with both fans and players, Johnny really shines in the defensive department.

BLUES AT McGILL TOMORROW

Jack Roberts (left) rates as one of the best insides on the Blue squad. A fractured arm kept him out of action all last season. Running behind this type of interference, Bobby Dale, fleet Varsity back should be a top ground gainer for the Blues.

Most of Team Returns For New Grid Season

By MAL CRAWFORD

To say that the Blues will be a vastly improved outfit over the squad which edged out Queen's in the final game last year to squeeze into second place, would be to echo what this and every other paper in the province has been saying for the past month. With all but seven of last year's team back, and a good crop of high school stars, there is bound to be improvement.

Head coach Bob Masterson lost his able line coach Dick Mitchell who went west a le Horace Greeley, to coach at the University of British Columbia. Coaching the line this year is Dalt White, who led the Intermediate Basketball Team to the Intercollegiate championship last year.

The team has won three exhibition games, and has shown powerful ground offensive and much improved tackling. There are plenty of fast backs and the line, although light, will be much better. A pass attack and a tight pass defence have not shown themselves as yet, but passing in the Intercollegiate league will not likely be up to the level of Beaches or McMaster, whom Varsity defeated in exhibitions. The other teams in the loop have gone down in caliber this year, and this coupled with the Blues' improvement should make for an exciting season for the Varsity fans.

—Varsity Staff Photos by Ted Sparrow.

This Is The 1951 Blue Team

QUARTERBACK. At the pivot spot this year Masterson has chosen Olie Mandryk and Alec Lawson, a real Mutt and Jeff combination if we ever saw one. Mandryk stands 5'9" and Lawson is 6'5". Olie quarterbacked the Intermediates last year and has the edge in experience at the position over Lawson. Both throw a nice pass, and should start hitting their receivers regularly after a few games.

Olie will miss the McGill game due to a knee injury, so Lawson will doubtless play all the way offensively tomorrow. Geoff White can be moved up from halfback if necessary.

LEFT HALFBACK. Bob Dale and Bill MacFarland will be the speed-boys running from left half. MacFarlane, who was the outstanding back on the Intermediates last year, was expected to have the position all to himself until Dale showed up so well in training camp. Though only 150 pounds in weight, Dale does the 100 in ten flat and is a very elusive little runner, though Bob figures that he is a little light for defensive work. MacFarlane will handle all the defensive plays and also some of the offensive. Behind them is Greg McFadden, another ten second man, who was also with the Intermediates last year.

RIGHT HALFBACK. Bill Bewley and Bob Rumball are the rightful occupants of this position, but Bewley is out for an indefinite period with a bad shoulder, and now this week Rumball comes up with cracked ribs and is a doubtful starter for tomorrow's game.

Bewley weighs 186, all solid football player. Excels both on offence and defence; Bob Masterson said at the first of the season that he improved a little every time out last year and is even better this year. Rumball, 165, the star of the game against McMaster, was a product of Interfaculty football of two years ago and is also much improved this year.

If Rumball doesn't play tomorrow, Geoff White, who played his first football last year with Vic, will get his big chance against McGill. Murray Hadlow, 190, has been moved over from fullback to share the position.

FULLBACK. Bob will two-platoon the fullback position to some extent this year, using Steve Oneschuk to carry the ball and Bob Garside to back up the left side of the line. Oneschuk will also play a little at defensive halfback, maybe more than a little tomorrow with the halfback situation the way it is.

Oneschuk is not very big for a fullback, weighing only 170 pounds, but he packs a lot of power in them and runs like a halfback when he gets in the clear. Steve and Bobby Dale are two of five freshmen who have won positions on the team. Garside is a man of very different proportions, packing 195 pounds on his 6'2" frame.

WINGBACK. Al Haig will play this spot most of the way while the Blues have the ball, and will do the kicking. He can do everything (he was a triple threat at Jarvis and with the Intermediates two years ago) but kicking is his specialty. He averaged nearly 45 yards per from the line of scrimmage last Saturday. Bob Leeming, 185, a fine tackler, and Tom Bird, 200, another freshman, will also play wingback.

ENDS. The situation here is not so good, especially this week with Pete Hynbida out indefinitely with heartaches, Hank Tamowski doubtful, and Jim Bell recovering from a broken hand.

Al Brown, 6'3", 195, is fit and may be one of the best ends in the league both ways this year. Bruce Johnson from East York, a 6'4", 200 pounder, has been moved from tackle to end to fill in for Hynbida.

TACKLES. What looked like a weak spot has turned into a centre of real strength with the coming of Vince Colizza from Hamilton Tigers and the decision of John Evans, voted last year's most valuable player and team captain this year, to play in his final year of Meds.

Evans and Joe Harris, both 200 pounders, are expected to play most of the way at tackle, especially on defence. Colizza, 205, and either Eric Jones (a transfer from McMaster last year) or Dunc Ellis are the other tackles.

GUARDS. The fact that two of last year's Blues were sent down to the Intermediates from this position shows just how good the guards must be. Marshall Hames, 217, and Bruce Miles, 180, will handle left guard. Hames has been a little late getting in shape on account of trouble with a vein in his head, but should be able to handle most of the defensive chores there and play offensive too.

Jack Roberts, 194, who missed last season due to injuries, will play most of the way at right guard, along with Jim Butler, another rookie from East York. The fifth guard, Roy McMurtry, 190, came up from last year's Intermediates.

Russians And Excuses

Editor, The Varsity:

As a student who sat in on the goings-on at the NFCUS conference in London, I wish to heartily support the stand taken by Ralph Wintrob in his article on the "Raw Deal" given Denis Lazure. (Varsity, Sept. 28).

Only one amendment might be offered: Mr. Wintrob says that "The majority of Canadian University students do not approve of Mr. Lazure's ideas." It would be more correct to say that the majority of the delegates at the conference seemed to be afraid that Canadian students might support Mr. Lazure's ideas if they got a chance to discuss them. Only one delegate made a motion which implied direct condemnation of Lazure's stand. He had difficulty even to find a seconder, and the motion was overwhelmingly defeated. Instead, Lazure was quietly removed from his position of influence on a technicality, his suggestions were referred to subcommittee and returned similar in form but quite altered in substance. His ideas were, in short, smothered rather than opposed by the conference.

The importance of some of the suggestions thus "smothered" was pointed out in The Varsity editorial entitled "No Visitors," on last Monday. The failure of the conference to back up Lazure's invitation to Soviet students and their rejection of the reciprocal invitation to Canadian Students to visit the USSR, contrasts curiously with their resolution that "the students of Canada can best promote peace by a programme of action which brings students of the world into closer relationship." The "substitution" of South-east Asian students, (with whom no previous negotiation had been made) seems to indicate that we only want closer relationships with "people on our side." How can this promote peace?

The explanation of the Toronto NFCUS Reps at the NFCUS-ISS meeting in Victoria College Tuesday night was exceedingly feeble: "We felt that the general public would disapprove." It is nice to be assured by the editorial in Tuesday's Varsity that "Canadian students are not afraid of peace," and "have taken a firm first step." But where's the evidence?

Hugh McIntyre,
Grad Studies.

On Universities

"If I were founding a university, I would first found a smoking room. Then when I had a little more money in hand I would found a dormitory; then after that, or more probably with it, a decent reading room and a library. After that, if I still had more money that I could not use, I would hire a professor and get some textbooks.

Stephen Leacock.

Blues Team

McMurtry, 190, came up from last year's Intermediates.

CENTRES. Masterson's only problem here is to decide which two of three superlative centres to dress for each game. The best when his injured leg gets better is Al Dancy. Al is the biggest of the tough but not too bulky trio at 194. He is taking heat yesterday at the stadium and expects to be in good shape by tomorrow.

Gerry Sutherland, 190, played centre on last year's Blues after Dancy was hurt. Ray (Yak) Yakasovich, 182, is the third man in this position.

Wins First Prize

William R. McKay's thesis entitled "Concrete Construction with Moving Forms" has won first place in a contest initiated by the Canadian Construction Association for the best thesis on construction subjects by senior engineering students at Canadian Universities. Mr. McKay, of the University of Toronto, is receiving $300 of the total prize money of $600. Second and third prizes were won by senior students from McGill and Queen's.

Entries in the competition were received from the members of the class of 1951 from eight of the engineering schools across Canada. Mr Robert Drummond, president of C.C.A., has stated that the Association intends to conduct a simular contest next year.

Coles, Lukk Win Doubles Tennis Match

The semi-finals and finals in the Senior Intramural tennis tournament will be run off today at the Toronto Tennis club. The doubles tourney was completed today.

In the doubles, John Coles of Vic, teamed up with Gerhard Lukk of SPS and they walked off with all the honors. In yesterday's finale, thi team defeated Don Colen of Grad Studies and Hugh Peacock of SPS in straight sets 6-4, 6-0, and 6-1.

The singles semis will start at 10 this morning. John Coles will take on Stan Hurwitz of UC, and in the other contest, Lukk will tangle with Pete Stewart of Trinity. Both of these matches will be 2 out of 3.

The finals in the single will take place at 3:00 p.m. today between the winners of the above two games. The final will be the best of three of five sets. Anyone interested in watching these matches will be admitted free of charge to the club.

Sportswoman

The Women's Intramural Softball schedule continued Thursday with two games played on the Trinity back campus. In the first contest St. Hilda's II met P.H.E. Thirds. P.H.E. got away to an early lead but saw it disappear in the second inning when the Trinity girls unleashed a hitting barrage that netted thirteen runs. The final score was 14-8 for St. Hilda's College.

The second game saw Victoria Seconds play St. Hilda's Thirds. Marg Trotter went all the way on the mound for Vic allowing only three runs while her teammates were piling up fourteen tallies and an easy win.

Golf

The Senior Intramural golf tournament gets underway this morning. About sixty golfers will tee off today in search of this year's championship. Each faculty is limited to eight representatives in the tourney, which will be 18 holes.

The top thirty in today's round will be invited to a qualifying round for the Intercollegiate team. This will be next Tuesday and 36 holes will be played.

speaking of sport

By BRUCE MacDONALD

A quick look around the Athletic wing of Hart House and the back campus would seem to indicate that the fall athletic season is in full swing. With golf and tennis tournaments under way, track practices under way up at Varsity Stadium, various Interfaculty football practices in full swing, lacrosse teams getting out their equipment, and the girls trooping up behind Trinity at noon hours to take a swing at a baseball instead of the boyfriend, the sports picture is a pretty active one.

There is always the serious problem at a university the size of Varsity of trying to give everyone who is interested in sports a chance to participate. There is no doubt that the Intramural system at the University of Toronto is one of the best in North America as far as student participation is concerned, but the position of a first year man or woman, particularly from a small high school, is a difficult one.

Some characters are always able to get along no matter what new situation presents itself, but a guy who is used to the coach asking for recruits so that he is able to fill his roster is often not too ready to dive into the unknown Intramural office and sign himself up for some sport or other.

All this sounds pretty silly to a guy who has been at Varsity for a couple of years, but he has probably forgotten just how he felt in the first few months down here. All we can suggest is that everyone in the know give all the help possible to anyone interested in getting involved in the athletic picture at Varsity.

The season of football weekends is upon us. A season productive of fat heads and fond memories like this one is probably the only thing that keeps registration at these various seats of learning at anything like a consistent level.

The exodus toward the fair city of Montreal (we have often wondered what percentage actually made it to the football game) began yesterday afternoon and will continue until midnight tonight when the SAC train pulls out. We even heard of some foolhardy characters who figure on leaving about 2:00 o'clock Saturday morning.

Tuesday morning, some 800 to 1,000 weary fans will make a valiant attempt to stay awake in lectures and tell their friends about what a wonderful place Montreal is for a football weekend. If their friends ask them what the football game was like, they will refer them to The Varsity. It just goes to show what sacrifices a sports reporter must make (staying sober that is) in order to tell a bunch of weekenders what they saw the last Saturday afternoon.

Clothes Make the Man

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Initiations

Coming down into the campus last night about 8 p.m. the stray student was apt to wander into an odd, ill-assorted group of young men and women. Their faces were painted in weird and wonderful designs, their clothes were a conglomeration of odds and ends. They seemed, to the casual observer, to be doing some odd things.

Somebody was being initiated into something.

The total effect, and it was obviously one of design, was a completely ridiculous looking group of people. About them, or slightly behind, almost equally absurd by contrast of clothes and looking rather sheepish about the whole thing, was a group of escorts, presumably those who were putting them through the initiation routine.

Yesterday, a large and reportedly enthusiastic group of Victoria College freshmen went to the GECO Emergency Housing Unit and painted, among other things, themselves and the walls of the Housing unit. Well organized, the Vic initiation seems to have done several things, including those activities traditionally connected with initiations as well as some much needed work which could not otherwise have been done.

Taking them together, the two incidents pose some interesting questions, the most important of which is: Why have initiations at all?

Traditionally they are intended to introduce the neophyte to the university, to make him feel at home. They also serve another purpose, allowing sophomores to work out some energy thinking up schemes for freshmen to worry through.

We doubt very much that the first purpose is achieved. McGill University seems to have come to this conclusion, bringing all its freshmen up a week early to really introduce them to the university, to give them a chance to meet the people who will instruct them, and a quiet first seven days in which to begin to appreciate the atmosphere in which they will pursue their studies.

McGill has decided that the academic life of the university is the most important, and it feels that the initial shock of initiations starts the freshman off on the wrong foot.

The second purpose we have mentioned hardly seems worthy of consideration.

Last spring attempts were made here to organize a program for freshman which would give them a slightly more reasonable introduction to the University of Toronto. It met with serious opposition, mainly on narrow college lines from those who didn't feel that co-operation to this end would achieve anything positive.

Perhaps some of those who have voiced an interest in the "intellectual integrity" of this institution should look carefully into the whole initiation question. No doubt they will find that initiations on the level of that held this year by Victoria College are far preferable to the kind that was noticed wandering over the campus dressed in an absurd manner, doing absurd things.

They may even find that it would be wise to treat the freshman more as an adult than a child, and give him some soundly based program during his first days here which will enable him to look more wisely, and to greater profit, on the University.

Those who had some ideas on the subject last year would probably be more than willing to try to organize such a program for next year. They will need co-operation however, of the kind that manages to cut across college lines.

The thinking, and planning, on such a program, should be done now.

NFCUS - IUS

Impossible Demands

The Writer, Longtime Campus Politician, Peace Council Member and Present Head of the University Labour Progressive Party Club, Holds That a Recent Article by Ralph Wintrob Didn't Represent The Truth.

By SHIRLEY ENDICOTT

Is it true that Denis Lazure's ideas have not found a wide sympathy among Canadian students? I do not see how Ralph Wintrop or anyone else can claim that it is true, when the student body, as yet, has not had the opportunity to discuss the ideas. As a person who observed the proceedings of the International Union of Students' Council meeting in Warsaw, I would like to comment on the decision of the NFCUS conference.

First of all what about the IUS Council meeting? When I was in Warsaw I spoke to many students who had been at the IUS Congress in Prague the year before. What they told me confirmed my opinion that this year the IUS had been 100% more successful in achieving a friendly atmosphere — one in which there was free and relaxed discussion between students of East and West — than they had last year. All delegates were listened to quietly and applauded with courtesy. Compromises were made. For example, the South African delgate asked that the Yugoslav question be reopened. Mr. Grohman, the president of IUB, said that the suggestion was out of order because the issue had been decided constitutionally. Nevertheless he proposed that a Commission composed of most of the Western delegates and members of the Executive should meet during the conference and report back to the Council.

The Press Commission received favourably my suggestion that World Student News, the IUS magazine, should be more like a forum where controversial, academic and political issues can be debated. The Russian editor asked me to find a Canadian student to write an article on the relation of scientists to politics. He will have a Soviet student do likewise. Thus the possibility of healthy debate and criticism from all points of view exists as far as the IUS is concerned. If we provide good articles on any subject relating to student affairs the IUS will print them if at all possible. Why do we not take up this offer?

The illustrations above are only a few of the gestures which, quite naturally, were appreciated by Western delegates, including Denis Lazure.

When Mr. Lazure spoke at the Council meeting in Warsaw he brought the friendly greetings of Canadian students to the students of the world. He said he believed that the majority of Canadian students wanted peace. He told of the polls on conscription carried out in most universities. He explained that the NFCUS Executive had supported the idea of a Five Power Pac Pact, not because it supported the World Peace Council, but because it believed that the majority of Canadian students wanted peace and would support this idea. In his speech he made very serious criticisms of the IUS —some of which I did not agree with—but concluded with some practical proposals. He extended an invitation to Grohman, the president of IUS, to tour Canada. He suggested that Canadian student sportsmen who participated in the Olympics this winter might go on to participate in the International Ski Camp being held in Czechoslovakia. Lastly he extended an invitation to the Soviet students to send over a cultural team to tour Canadian universities this November. He was given a very warm applause when he sat down. I heard many favorable comments on his speech from students of both East and West. They felt that NFCUS was making a good contribution to world peace and international student friendship.

The delegates of the NFCUS conference apparently did not agree. They turned down most of Mr. Lazure's proposals. And yet they saw fit to pass a resolution on peace which says, in part, "We . . . join with students across the world in a sincere desire for peace." Now I ask you, will inviting a group of Soviet students to see our universities—to met and talk with us, to show us some of their culture—will this help to show our desire for peace to the rest of the world? Would a group of Canadian students visiting Moscow—telling Soviet students of Canadian life and seeing life in the Soviet Union with their own eyes—would such a group indicate the sincerity of Canadian students for peace?

It is true we will probably not "influence" any Soviet students in the sense that they will become adherents to "our democratic way of life." But in the sense that they will become more convinced of our desire for peace and frindship we will certainly make an impression on them. Is it not most important that the Soviet Union, of all countries, be shown our desire for peace? After all, peace today is not peace in the abstract, but, above all, peace with the Soviet Union.

Finally, what about the meeting of Western Unions at the IUS which is taking place this winter? What sort of attitude should the NFCUS delegation adopt at this conference? Syd Wax is quoted as saying that the Edinburgh conference which will follow the IUS conference, is prepared to break with the IUS unless they accept certain Canadian proposals. What are these "certain proposals"? Do they include the demand for the admission of Spain and Yugoslavia into the IUS as was stated at the NFCUS conference? It is known that the majority in the IUS will not accept such a demand. If our delegates go with such impossible demands they are not going with the sincere intention of finding common ground for cooperation, but only with the express desire of breaking entirely with the IUS. They will make impossible further contact between students behind the various Iron Curtains in the world. It boils down to this. Do you, the reader of this article, want NFCUS to try and breach the gap between East and West or to lead the break away from the IUS? In my opinion the former approach is not being attempted.

The fact that the NFCUS conference was held at the beginning of the term before most of us had a chance to see what was up, means that the decisions made at London were somewhat arbitrary. If NFCUS is democratic it will stimulate discussion on the issues I have raised here. In the meantime it is up to everyone to say whether they would like to have Soviet students visit Canada and comment on the attitude the Canadian delegates should have at the IUS and Edinburgh conferences this winter.

Core Courses Needed

Editor, The Varsity:

Permit me to endorse the suggestion in your editorial of October 3 that a "study or group of studies" be instituted as "a common denominator within the arts colleges at least."

While studying in the United States I learned that several universities there have just that, compulsory "core courses" which amount to rapid surveys of Western thought with readings in great works which are bridged by the lecturers.

I originally thought that such a course would be unnecessary here because a fifth form high school graduate in Ontario has taken substantially what an American college student takes in his first two years. I have since revised my opinion for reasons similar to those you advanced. The proof that there is too much specialization in university and the harmful effects of it are visible on all campuses.

The course which I envisage to help "unspecialize" students would retain the form of a survey of Western thought while taking care to note the genesis, development, methods and present problems of history, philosophy, and the various physical and social sciences. The survey would have to be given in simplified blocks, classical, mediaeval, scientific, rationalist, etc.

Such a course, I still think ought to be given in the first year, while the student is still close to the diverse subjects he studied in high school and before he has immersed himself in his preferred studies. It would be interesting to hear an expression of opinion on the advisability of students in the professional faculties taking such a course.

Hubby Too!

Editor, The Varsity:

Here, here! Something should be done to enable students to get rugby tickets for their wives. Surely with ticket sales down roughly 20 per cent we can find room for a few non-students in the bleachers.

But there is yet another problem which you have overlooked. How are married co-eds to get tickets for their husbands? We are fewer in number I admit, but I believe our "hubbies" are even more interested in the games than the "wives."

I would have no problem if a ban had not been placed on graduates, for my husband is a graduate and at present a student at Osgoode Hall. So you see, we cannot afford two tickets in the shade, we cannot in fact afford one and for the sake of peace on the home front I cannot run off to the game leaving hubby with that rather poor substitute, the radio.

BLUES AXE REDMEN

Yipee!

The hard-working Varsity cheerleaders turned out to practise at Molson Stadium before the opening game there Saturday. McGill students lack pretty co-eds to inspire their cheering sections; therefore the Toronto cartwheels were particularly relished. At the Western game here this week, fans may compare the aforementioned cartwheels with those of the Western gals.

Toronto Gives High Thanks After Second Half Revival

Montreal—It took the Blues until the third quarter to realize that they could win their first Intercollegiate game of the season, but when the realization did come there was little doubt in the minds of 18,000 fans as to just where they were headed. The scoreboard read 15-7 in favour of the Blues at the final whistle as Varsity fans flooded the playing field to congratulate an injury-ridden Blue team that had really turned in a performance.

For most of the first half, the Redmen looked like the powerhouse of last year, smearing quarterback Alec Lawson on a couple of pass attempts and running back Haig's kicks 20 and 25 yards nearly every try. Crain did some beautiful kicking for McGill in the first quarter that kept the Blues at a disadvantage, and although the Redmen found it tough going on the ground, they clicked on enough passes to score a major early in the second quarter and force the Blues to make a goal line stand in the first stanza.

As the second quarter rolled to a close, the Blue defence found itself and ,led by the spectacular tackling of Bob Garside and the smooth pass interceptions of Bill MacFarlane and Steve Oneschuck, forced the Red machine to grind to a halt. After the half, McGill failed to make a single first down until the middle of the fourth quarter and by that time the damage was done.

Stars Shine

Crain and Robillard were 95% of the McGill backfield and Pullar was a standout for the Redmen at tackle. Picking stars for the Blues would be an almost impossible task without going through the roster name by name. Bill MacFarlane turned in one of the best performances of his career. Bob Garside was a tower of strength defensively for the Blues, as were Al Brown, Jimmy Bell and Hank Tamowski at end.

Steve Oneschuck, Bobby Dale and Murray Hadlow were the chief ground gainers for Varsity. Al Haig's kicking was consistently good all through the game. The deciding factor in the contest, however, was the Blue line. The Red line held its own for the first quarter, but finally gave way under the onslaught and forced McGill to take to the air. Once the Blue pass defence got warmed up the McGill cause was a lost one.

Viscount Alexander kicked the ball 25 yards to open play and almost at once the Blues were in trouble when they failed to give the McGill receiver yards on Haig's first kick. A 60-yard punt by Crain put the Blues with their backs to the wall on their own 4-yard line. Wally Kowal broke into the Blue backfield on the next play to nail White of Varsity for 2 points.

Roaring right back into payoff territory, the Redmen carried the ball down to the Varsity 5-yard line before the Blue defence tightened up. Things began to look brighter for the Blues as Garside fell back from his secondary spot to intercept a McGill pass and run it 24 yards to the Blue 39, but Varsity hopes were soon dampened when Robillard recovered White's fumble on the centre field stripe.

Jeff Crain, alternating at the quarterback spot with Gene Robillard for the Redmen, put his throwing arm into gear and completed two passes, a short one to the Blue 35-yard line, and three plays later a long one to Caldwell, the McGill captain, that was good to the Varsity 4. The Blues held for 2 downs, but on the final try, Robillard knifed over off left tackle from the single wing formation to score the major. Findlay missed the extra point and the score was 7-0 for the Redmen.

Second Half Different

The Blues came out of the dressing room after the half and proceeded to demonstrate that the first half had just been a mistake. Lawson, who called an outstanding game at quarter for the Blues, set the stage for the turning point in the game when he gave the go ahead for a quick kick on second down that put the Redmen with their backs to the wall for the first time in the game. On the next play the Blues picked up a fumble on the McGill 20 and started to roll.

Hadlow picked up a first to the McGill 12, McFarlane carried over the centre twice and picked up 4 yards each time, and then the Redmen were penalized half the distance to the goal line for roughing, giving the Blues a first down on the McGill 3 yard line. Lawson called another good one on the next play, sending Steve Oneschuck around the short end for the major. Bell kicked the extra point.

Tackles and Kicks

After an exchange of kicks, the Blue offensive got under way again, Lawson heaving a beautiful pass to Oneschuck for a 25-yard gain. Bobby Dale romped for 11 yards and a first down. Haig's attempt for a point was carried out from behind the line by Jeff Crain. Bobby Dale recovered a McGill fumble on the next play, putting the Blues in possession on the McGill 6. Since the Varsity defensive team was on the field, one play was wasted, and in discussing strategy for the next play the Blues took too long in the huddle and lost the down. Jimmy Bell stepped into the breach to split the uprights with a perfect field goal attempt and put the Blues in the lead 9-7 at the end of the third quarter.

Varsity tackling, particularly on the part of Garside, Brown and MacFarlane kept the Redmen bottled up, and with the fourth quarter only a few minutes old, Dale and Hadlow carried the ball from the McGill 39 into paydirt, with Bobby going over a pile of players for the major. Bell converted.

The Redmen went pass crazy in dying minutes of the game but to no avail. It was a happy crew of Varsity fans that left Macdonald park.

DR. VAN WYCK

Babies And Books

The subject of the first Hart House debate this Wednesday evening is, "Resolved that technical training for the professions has no place in the University." The guest speaker will be Dr. H. B. Van Wyck.

When told the resolution and asked for a sneak preview of what his views would be, Dr. Van Wyck's immediate reaction was, "it depends what they mean by a profession. If it's garbage collecting—I'm opposed to it."

It would be hard to find a guest speaker more fitted to present interesting and entertaining views in this discussion. Dr. Van Wyck taught obstetrics and gynaecology to U. of T. medsmen for thirty years, and was head of the department for the past four. He has done considerable research in his field, and collected a long list of degrees, as well as written a book on obstetrics and gynaecology which is a standard text. In addition to his teaching, he carried on for many years an extensive practice of his own. In fact, it is surprising how many Variety students (including the writer) can claim the honor of having been delivered by Dr. Van Wyck.

Yet the letters after his name give a clue to only one side of his career. For one thing, they give no hint of the charm of his personality. Besides, Dr. Van Wyck is an outstanding example of a man who is tops in his own specialty, as the same time has many other interests and abilities, and is keenly alert and observant of current happenings.

He is in a position to refute supercilius Arts students claiming intellectual superiority over medsmen, because he himself took his degree in Classics before entering medicine. This is one of the thhings specially qualifying him to speak ,with authority at the debate. On top of the solid culturral grounding of the classics course, Dr. Van Wyck has other accomplishments. He paints as a hobby, is a particularly fine pianist, and sings in the Mendelssohn Choir.

Having given up active practice and most of his teaching, Dr. Van Wyck is now professor emeritus of the department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, and honorary consultant to the General Hospital. Students in the second medical year have him for a special lecture series on the subject which shows the trend of his interests; "Humanistic and Scientific Values in Medicine."

Dr. Van Wyck has more leisure time now than ever before in his extraordinarily busy life. His way of using it has been to fill it up by the active continuation of all his hobbies, and to launch into projects which have long appealed to him, but which have had to be postponed for lack of spare time.

As well as enjoying his fine library, and making his own music, he is working on a book of his own—a History of Medicine, in which he is trying to trace the development of medicine through the centuries along with that of the various other historical trands.

Meds' Panacea Cancelled For '51

Following the suggestions of Gord Cameron, last year's president of the Medical Society, Meds functions will be integrated with those of the University to eliminate clashes. Publicity Director John MacDonald said yesterday. Thus Panacea, the all-Varsity Dance, sponsored by the Meds, will not be held this year because it would conflict with the S.A.C.-sponsored -all-Varsity Dance on October 12.

Last year plans were laid and a constitution was set up for the Osler Society which will go into operation year with its first meeting planned for organization having already been held. Special speakers will talk on the history of Medicine.

"Daffydil", the big Medical Show, will run for five nights in Hart House, from December 17 to 21. In the opinion of Mr. MacDonald, "it was the best on the campus last year. This year we hope it will be equal to or surpass last year's."

The Arts and Letters Club will have bi-monthly meetings featuring music appreciation and debates. It will have special speakers from time to time.

The Medical Journal, published monthly by the Medical Society, was voted the best of its kind in Canada last year. It is composed of articles contributed mostly by students.

The Meds-at-Home", to be held on Wednesday, February 20, at the Royal York, is the dance which climaxes the social season. The theme of this dance will be "Doctors' Dilemma" by G. B. Shaw.

By way of comment for the paper, Mr. MacDonald said, "Medical students in the past have displayed their superiority over 'Skule' and the other faculties in such events as the chariot race and publicity stunts, and this year will be no exception."

If...

. . . . We had a student Union Building, the Radio Committee last year would not have and to ruin its tapes by recording in unsound-proofed room in the University College basement.

THE SNAKE AND I

Bewildered Boa

MARGARET WELCH

Sulking in The Varsity office 'cause couldn't do story on Princess. News editor dashed in. Had terrific scoop on visitors to museum. Same difference. Snakes instead of royalty. Just trying to bribe me into working.

Went to museum to prove no story there. Told they really have two new snakes. Would I like to see them? Certainly not. Journalist's insatiable curiosity wasn't hungry. But gritted manners between teeth. Bravely nodded "yes". Relaxed a little when told visitors were dead. Pickled too. Saw moulds being made. To be painted and put in new exhibit. Takes great skill. Courage too. Tropical moccasin was first specimen. Extremely poisonous. Strikes with great rapidity. Retreated tripping over some old plaster. Jumped on chair when discovered plaster was good sized boa constrictor. "Enormous muscular power which renders them terrible" quotes Webster. Can swallow pigs, mules and things whole. I'm not very big.

Came down from chair when told this too was only a mould. Still holding instructor's hand. Said he'd show me moccasin's skin. Opened eyes for peek at it. Beautiful black with white markings like ocelot. Rather have ocelot.

Gathered courage. Decided to feel next skin. Constrictor's. Reached out hand boldly. Eyes closed. And grasp cold mass. Cold mass twined self around arm. Wasn't skin. Was whole boa. Prayed boa was on diet. Demonstrator didn't worry. Only three foot baby. I'm pretty young too.

No cause for alarm though. Seems boa doesn't know he's a boa. Was given mouse which he attacked in traditional manner. But mouse counter-attacked and nearly killed snake. Boa still has scars. Also inferiority complex. Someday complex will get the better of him. Then horrible constrictor in midst. Decided to graduate this year.

Cause of menace is shortage of foreign snakes in Museum. And no way of getting them with restricted budget. So decided to raise own.

New snakes were in show business. Died from malnutrition. prison bars got in way. Not enough public to feed pair. Guess everyon eoff to see Princess. She doesn't eat public.

Told editor won't play Frank Buck again. Said not to worry. Next assignment spiders. Dictionary—genus Aramida that spins web to ensnare its prey. Going home to family. Family like meek, modest children.

Planning Meeting

There will be a planning meeting today at 1 p.m. today in the editorial office of The Varsity. Barbara Browne, Ian Montagnes, Elinor Strangways, Pearl Parnes, Bruce MacDonald and Ralph Wintrob are requested to attend.

Spooks Speak

From The Varsity, Jan. 17, 1919—Dr. Abbott of the philosophy department claimed in an interview recently that scientific investigations had proved that communications with the spirit world were possible. Prof. Abbott described a conversation he had had with Coleridge, Spinoza, and Plato.

Many Bursaries; More Applicants

Applications for Dominion-Provincial Student-Aid Bursaries must be handed in to college Registrars today. Reports indicate that a greater number of University of Toronto students are applying for this financial aid this year. Three of the colleges have had to order more application forms because of the increased number of applicants.

Under the Dominion-Provincial Students-Aid programme, Bursaries ranging from $150 to $400 are awarded to students in financial need who are resident in Ontario and are attending U. of T. including the affiliated schools of art, pharmacy, teaching, etc.

To be eligible for the Bursary, a student must have obtained at least second class honors in the exams of the preceding year, must not be receiving financial aid from any other scholarship or Bursary, and should be assisting with the financing of his own education, i.e. with summer employment, etc.

Although most of the applicants will probably meet these overall standards, members of the Committee of Award at Queen's Park suggest that many of the applications will be weeded out because the number of applications already exceed the number of available Bursaries.

Priority will be given to students who were awarded Dominion-Provincial Student-Aid Bursaries for the first year of their university course, and whose financial status has not since improved.

The Committee of Award is composed of the representatives appointed by the Minister of Education for Ontario and a representative appointed by the Minister of Labor for the Dominion Government.

UC Debates To Support, Chide Frats

The topic of the coming University College Parliament club will be "resolved—that fraternities are detrimental to higher education on the University of Toronto campus," according to literary director Albert Strauss, IV U.C. Strauss said that the topic of the debate scheduled for Tuesday, Oct. 16 was in accord with the policy of the club to bring forth without prejudice topical issues.

Opposition speaker Marion Hogarth, III U.C., says that the debate on fraternities is essential after the discussion aroused by The Varsity recently. Miss Hogarth says that the U.C. parliamentary club should be thanked for giving the fraternities a chance to present their case. She thinks that fraternities have a worthy function to fulfill.

Vern Turner, IV U.C., told The Varsity: "We, of the affirmative, intend to show that the fraternity system is based on wobbly foundations." It glorifies a hollow kind of prestige that lends itself to the production of a sheep-like mental attitude among many members. Certainly a system which makes the common cause of all Varsity students secondary to the advancement of a narrow group can hardly justify its existence on any rational grounds."

The position of fraternities on the campus, according to the Student Handbook is, roughly, that while they are not accorded official recognition, they play an important role in the undergraduate life of the university.

Scared Patches

London, Ont. — (CUP)—Purple Patches, the University of Western Ontario's renowned revue, has had its existence threatened this year by students in the medical faculty. The Revue's use of the Meds gymnasium for building Patches' props prompted the dean of the faculty to refuse the use of the gym this year. A spokesman for the Medsmen explained that the props tied up the gym for a month.

Patches' performers will still be able to use the gym for rehearsals, but unless a new spot for prop construction is found within the week, there could be no revue this year, one of the co-producers of the PP's told the student council.

Elimination of the Patches from the boards this year could mean a loss of $2,000 to the council.

VIC'S CORNER

Well, Victorians, here is the first showing of this year's VIC'S Corner. For all you new people at VIC this is the spot you look for every Tuesday to catch up on all the latest news and gossip as picked up by our roving reporters from Alumni Hall, Murray's, K.C.R. and the tennis courts behind Annesley.

As far as social life is concerned, Alex Gigeroff and Lois White tell us that everything is under control and that the social committees are laying plans for their respective class parties. The VIC Informal, the "Dance of Romance", is coming up Nov. 30, and the wise money says the queens go fast so start operating boys.

According to PHELPS BELL the BOB REVIEW is shaping up. Castings for skits will start next week. We are still looking for aspiring Mario Lanzas—also material and stage hands. So keep your eyes on the bulletin boards in the main rotunda for times and places for rehearsals.

Bumped into DUGGAN MELHUISH the other day and he says that he expects everybody to turn out to vote in the by-elections this Friday.

Something different!! The VCU Executive is organizing a series of bi-monthly get-togethers which should have a terrific student appeal. With all the conflicting ideologies that swarm around, we feel the student should be given the chance to hear the viewpoint of various proponents of different beliefs and ideas. In addition to a regular monthly meeting in the chapel with outstanding Christian speakers, there will be mid-monthly gatherings in Wymilwood at which the student will have a chance to hear the other side of the question. The speakers planned will be top-notch, many of them from the States and other parts of Canada. After the meeting there will be a social get-together in Wymilwood—with refreshments too! The series will be started off with a big bang by Dr. Moore, this Sunday, the 14th., at 7:00 p.m. Let's all get behind this and make it a big success.

YE OLDE COLLEGE SPIRITE: Tryouts for cheerleaders will be this Wednesday at 1:15 at Little Vic Field. Girls requested to wear shorts, boys' dress optional. No experience necessary, just plenty of spirit.

Men, can you play a musical instrument? Join the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band, hereinafter known as SGLIRPB. Leave your name at the V.C.U. Office. Vic must continue to produce a superior band to the Lady Godiva Memorial Noisemakers from the south part of the campus.

The Music Club's double bill—Trial By Jury and H.M.S. Pinafore—will require a great number of leads. Tryouts Wednesday 10th, 7:30 p.m., at Wymilwood. Chorus tryouts Monday 15th, 7:30 Alumni Hall.

Girls' Athletics: There's going to be a Splash Party in about two weeks' time—watch for notices at Vic—for time and place. Bowling is beginning soon. See Dale Pember or one of the executive for more information. Vic softball has got off to a great start with two wins.

Men's Athletics: Coach Lou Fick informs us that the football club is shaping up and with good support at the games should bring the Mulock cup back home to Vic.

Soccer, lacrosse, track, tennis and golf are all under way. Watch the sports bulletin board for practices and games. For any sports information contact any member of your athletic directorate listed in the students' handbook.

Look for us next Tuesday.

IRC New York Trip Seminar – This Year

A trip to New York, a seminar weekend (possibly at Hart House Caledon Hills Farm), prominent and well-informed speakers on international problems, and regular discussion groups will be all part of the programme of the International Relations Club this year.

"It is the aim of the I.R.C.," said Andy Watson who is President of the Club, in an interview yesterday, "to stimulate student interest in the problems of international affairs threatening peace. As a Club we support no one view as to how these problems are best solved, nor do we limit our membership to students of similar political belief. We hope, rather, that by bringing together students of widely varying opinions, the members of the Club may be able to form for themselves more enlightened decisions on international issues."

The first meeting of the I.R.C., to be held this Thursday at Wymilwood, will feature a panel of three students discussing certain aspects of the European situation with which they have become well-acquainted this summer. Also at this meeting, several seminar groups will be formed. Each of these groups will meet regularly and will specialize in the study of one field in international relations, such as the work of the United Nations; the Chinese and Korean issue; and the Colombo Plan for South East Asia.

The Club is hoping to hold a seminar week-end in the near future, possibly the week-end of October 20th and 21st. At the end of November; the I.R.C. will repeat its annual trip to New York to observe the United Nations in action. Other activities include regular meetings featuring speakers on focal points in current events; social evenings with films, refreshment and entertainment; and possibly a trip to Ottawa in the winter term to view the Department of External Affairs.

"We think," continued Andy, "that this type of activity is a valuable part of the fabric of university life. All students, whatever their fields of study, should feel a real concern for the problems confronting the establishment of a genuine peace. Only when the people of the world, as individuals, shoulder the responsibilities of citizenship can maturity in international affairs be achieved."

Aims of VCF Given Frosh

"Varsity Christian Fellowship (VCF) is organized in order that each student, during his university career might have the opportunity of finding in Jesus Christ a satisfying and integrated way of life," Vice-President Harry Robinson told over a hundred students at the VCF Frosh Reception held Thursday afternoon in West Hall, U.C.

President Ian Sowton gave a brief sketch of the organization's plans for the year, emphasizing that the main purpose of VCF, above providing a formal programme of social events for its membership was to bring Christ into the lives of Varsity students through prayer and the personal witness of its members.

Make Start On U N Club For Campus

The first step has been taken towards the inception of a United Nations Club at the University of Toronto.

Over thirty-five students, from a variety of schools, colleges and faculties, were present at an organization meeting of the new club, held Thursday afternoon in Trinity College.

A steering committee, chaired by Jack Tinker, IV UC, was appointed to draw up a constitution. The constitution will be presented at the next meeting, later this month. If it is accepted, officers will be elected, and the approval of the Caput will be sought for the new organization.

The purposes of the new club are to inform student opinion, and to take that opinion and mobilize it behind the principles and methods of the United Nations. Future plans call for study groups to prepare briefs on public affairs, a model General Assembly drawn up from the student body to debate world problems, and celebration of United Nations week, which this year comes between Oct. 21 and Oct. 27.

In this work the new U.N. Club is not expected to conflict with the International Relations Club (IRC), another organization already in operation which has much the same aims. IRC President Andy Watson, IV Trinity, says he thinks the two organizations will complimented each other. He has already extended an invitation to the IRC in its annual visit to the members of the U.N. Club to join United Nations in New York.

Europe Biased Against U.S. Not Canada — M. Jacobson

Canada is in a particularly strong position in international student affairs because it is not tagged with anti - American epithets. That's the opinion of Muriel Jacobson, who passed through Toronto Friday on her way to Geneva, Switzerland where she is going to work with World University Service (WUS).

"Canada is in a position uniquely strong for a country of her size and wealth," Miss Jacobson said. "She is able to wield a great deal of influence because foreign students (particularly Asians) do not feel the antagonism against Canada which they often feel against the United States."

For this reason, Canada should have representatives at the meetings of the WUS Executive, held three times a year, she said. However, Canadian International Student Service (ISS) is too poor to send these delegates.

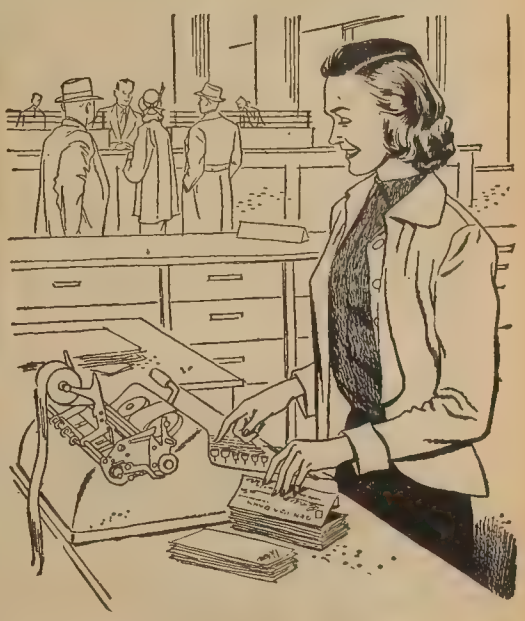
"The Canadian office must get money to send delegates to these meetings," she said.

Miss Jacobson will be Associate

Muriel Jacobson

Secretary-General of WUS, the world student relief organization which is replacing ISS. She will hold the post for six months until a permanent appointment is made. During that time she will be responsible for implementing the relief program which was decided at the WUS General Assembly held near Oslo this summer.

Practical co-operation between WUS and the Communist-dominated International Union of Students (IUS) is possible, Miss Jacobson believes, in spite of the difficulties the two organizations have had in the past.



At the General Assembly this summer WUS was invited to meet in an informal conference with IUS in order to work out grounds on which practical co-operation can be achieved. This meeting will be held sometime in November.

"The idea was greeted with great receptivity by the General Assembly," reports Miss Jacobson, "and I am sure that something will be worked out." However, she warned, the final agreement would have to guarantee terms acceptable to both sides.

Miss Jacobson is being loaned to WUS by the World Student Service Fund (WSSF) where she is Program Director. WSSF is the closest thing the Americans have to ISS. However, it is (as its name implies) primarily a fund-raising organization; international student activities such as seminaries are not stressed as greatly as in ISS.

Last year WSSF raised approximately $600,000; this year it is campaigning for $808,500. This will be used principally for international student relief and for the administrative costs of the WUS offices in Geneva; WSSF pays about 90 per cent of all the international ISS budget. Actually, this year WSSF is campaigning for almost three times the amount WUS asked for its General Assembly.

Although she is working for an American student organization, Miss Jacobson is Canadian by birth. She received her degree from McMaster University, and then proceeded to the University of Toronto to take postgraduate work in Economics.

When you add it all up...

WHEN you consider the men, women and money needed to operate 3,700 branches — you see what is involved in looking after the greatly increased demands made by busy Canadians upon their chartered banks.

In ten years . . . with bigger staffs and higher wages, payrolls have jumped from $40 million a year to $102 million

. . . taxes, federal, provincial and municipal, have risen from $9.5 million to $20.7 million a year

. . . interest paid to depositors has increased from $22 million to $57.8 million a year.

And these are only three of many expense items. Yes, today more than ever, it costs money to run a bank.

C'est Difficile A Comprendre Des Orfevres

In spite of a heavy demand, there are still 50 tickets left for the Friday afternoon performances of the UC French Cine-Club, Miss MacDonald, Secretary of the Club, reported Saturday. The club, organized last spring, is presenting a program of five French films in the Museum Theatre. The 450 seats for the evening performance of the shows were gone early in the summer.

The first presentation was "Quai des Orfevres," starring Louis Jouvet. Although the film was an excellent portrayal of music hall life in Paris, unfortunately the French used in it was predominately colloquial, which made it difficult for beginners to understand.

The next film shown will be "Symphonie Pastorale" with Michele Morgan, which Cine Club officials promise will be equally entertaining and easier to follow. Also to be shown with these films are a variety of artistic short subjects. On Friday a color movie of Paris accompanied "Quai des Orfevres" and apart from being beautifully filmed, it was narrated in an interesting manner by the poet Carco. In between the short and the feature, French songs were played.

In his speech preceding the showing, UC Principal Jeanneret stressed the need of films such as these, not only to facilitate the learning of the language through familiarity with its rhythms, but also to become acquainted with the finest offerings of the French film world. In another French address, the French consul also praised the series as a means of strengthening the bonds between France and Canada.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

One of the university librarians told me last week that most books are easy to get these first few weeks. Nobody really gets down to work until the end of October, she said. Which seems to suggest this is a good time to have a flock of above-average movies hitting the first-run houses.

Most of these have been mentioned in this column before. TALES OF HOFFMAN has opened with fancy hullaballoo and fancy prices. SEVEN DAYS TO NOON, a British "sleeper" should do well downtown when word gets around. PEOPLE WILL TALK is the successor to ALL ABOUT EVE in Joseph Mankiewicz' production line. HOTEL SAHARA has Peter Ustinov, who has been a London success in his recent West End production of "The Love of Four Colonels." Current European imports include ANGELO and THIS WOMAN IS MINE, both Italian.

Before this column investigates these prize offerings, and others to come shortly, I would like to talk about "better" movies. Quite recently, Hollywood press agentry embarked on a rather defensive publicity campaign which asserted in capital letters "MOVIES ARE BETTER THAN EVER."

The story is that the new ogre Television kept movie-goers away from the movies in droves. Box offices sickened. Panic in the streets of Hollywood. "Look, men, we must do something. (Spittle on the conference table.)" Result: "MOVIES ARE BETTER THAN EVER."

What made most critics happy, especially our more acid ones, was that movies labelled with this slogan often turned out to be lemons. And on the whole, movies weren't much better than the year before.

Gilbert Seldes, in his The Great Audience, gives one explanation for the difficulty of making good movies in Hollywood. Business to be successful must be aimed at the customers. And, Seldes suggests, perhaps the customers, the audience, are the hindrance. The movie audience today is composed predominantly of under-twenty-fives. (These, of course, are the people in whose hands the destiny of the nation lies, aren't they?) When Americans (that's us, too, Mr. Massey) get over thirty years old, they stop going to the movies.

So poor, unfortunate Hollywood is strapped. Movies to make money, and after all it is a business and not Renaissance art patronage, must be aimed at the adolescents, the eager young girls who devour fan magazines and get goopy about Peter Lawford. (Perhaps he is passé now, but the example will do.)

And so to the often unwieldy and illogical happy ending to please the American dream, the theological idea that Good always triumphs over Evil, and the shopgirls who want reassurance that all is well in this world. And also the title change from "TICKET TO TOMAHAWK" to "THE SHERIFF'S DAUGHTER," or "USS TEAKETTLE" to "YOU'RE IN THE NAVY NOW." And more important the thin slices of imagination which are wrapped up in costly technical ingenuity.

The important Seldes point is that Hollywood can counter the fearful inroads of Television into their entertainment oligopoly by weaning back the mature audience with pictures of higher standards. There has been some evidence of this track being followed. Directors like Joe Mankiewicz, John Huston and Robert Rossen are coming up with films that match Europe's best in ideas. And producer Stanley Kramer is setting Hollywood on its ear by trying different films with lots of talent and little money. CHAMPION, HOME OF THE BRAVE, THE MEN, CYRANO DE BERGERAC all attest to his success. The news that Kramer is making DEATH OF A SALESMAN with Frederick March is heart-warming.

But latest reports are that Hollywood is making money again this past year, and the sag from television now seems temporary. This may mean a lapse into smug sterility again. Or perhaps this means Hollywood may still pursue the idea of making occasional films that appeal to intelligence and taste.

Maybe one of these days, Hollywood will come along with pictures as good as Chaplin's CITY LIGHTS or Lewis Milestone's ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT. Both of these films were made over 20 years ago.

(But more of this in the next column.)

Engineer Advises On Tool Design

An engineer designing machine tools makes his first interest efficiency and function, beauty will naturally follow, said Newton Dutton, industrial design consultant. He was discussing the Aesthetic and Psychological factors in Design of Machine Tools at the first general meeting of the Engineering Society for the 1951-52 session, in Room 102 of the New Mechanical Guilding on Friday.

Mr. Dutton defined design as the organization of means and materials to a certain end. This end should include the psychological effect on the consumer or operator. The engineer faces the problem of how deeply he should interest himself in these psychological effects, he said.

He stressed that efficiency and ease of operation should be accompanied by certain fundamentals in design. Among these were the principles of order, resemblance of the part to the function it will perform, and an integrated whole as opposed to a machine that looks as though the major components were simply bolted together with no eye to the whole.

The principle of order should be most apparent, said Mr. Dutton, when control dials and levers were being placed on the machine. These should be so situated, he said, that safe and speedy operation would require little or no thought on the part of the operator.

A discussion period followed Mr. Dutton's address.

CUP Briefs

Montreal (CUP) — Within a month McGill students will walk through the east gate of their campus and run head up against The Falcon.

No need for panic however. The Falcon is a statue showing a figure poised for flight with one clenched fist held against his open wing, the other stretched down at the side. It stands four feet high and six feet wide.

Last major work of the Canadian sculptor and former medical director on the physical ed department, Dr. R. Tait Mackenzie, an anonymous Montreal benefactor donated the cost of having the statue cast in bronze. He had heard that the university was unable to accept the offer of Mackenzie to erect the stature on the campus because of the cost of having it cast in bronze.

This will be the second piece of work by Mackenzie to grace the campus.

Describing the gift, the McGill Daily commented: "The students who take themselves seriously will probably believe that the Falcon represents the poised intellect of a university student ready to take flight with cultural development."

Skule Allies With Rest Of Campus

A motion that Skule replace one of the former NFCUS representatives with an external affairs representative to be responsible for all liaison and between Skule and other organizations was passed Tuesday at a meeting of the Engineering Society Executive.

The Executive felt that Skule needed a man who could devote his entire energies to the more general aspects of university activity, besides the work which is already done by their representatives on the Students' Administrative Council. This man would be free to appoint committees as required to help him in his varied activities. It was also hoped that this appointment would create better feelings between Skule and her critics.

The External Affairs Representative will be a duly recognized vosing member of the Executive Committee, and will represent Skule on the External Affairs Committee of the SAC as well as the Engineering Institute of Canada and the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario.

Nominations for this position will be open until Tuesday at 5:00 p.m.

FIREFLIES

Science Notes

By JIM ANDERSON

Like a glow worm golden
In a dell of dew,
Scattering unbeholden
Its aerial hue
Among the flowers and grass, which screen it from the view.

The subject of this stanza by Shelley has been called many names, including glow worm and firefly. As usual, science destroys all such poetic fancies, for the dratted thing is neither worm nor fly. Lo, it is a beetle.

At night, this strange individual is loaded with romance and beauty, but in the cold clear light of day it looks disappointingly like an ordinary bug. Sic transit gloria. Anatomically, it owns the full beetle requisites of six legs and a tough exoskeleton. Its color is usually dark brown with a pale pink chest. On each segment there are two tiny bright red spots. The male of the species is privileged in possessing functional wings, but the female is necessarily a stay-at-home for she has none.

This difference in locomotion would be a serious threat to the path of true love were it not for the glowing extremities of both sexes which are used as signalling lanterns. Miss Lampyris waits in her grassy "dell of dew" until a Coleopterous playboy flits past with his traffic lights blinking. She answers his signal after exactly 2 1/10 seconds. This interval is so constant that one may lure an unsuspecting male over to any artificial light which blinks in reply to his with correct timing. I have tried it with a flashlight and succeeded in attracting (besides three thousand mosquitoes) a couple of masculine fireflies who seemed rather disappointed at seeing me. No doubt in their own way they muttered a profane denunciation of modern science making a mockery of the eternal values.

The production of their eerie greenish glow is still not completely understood. Their luminous area consists of a double layer of fatty tissue. The deeper one is pigmented and acts as a reflector. The outer cells contain granules of an oxidizable chemical and an enzyme which permits the reversal of the oxidization reaction. This reduction of the chemical ensures that the firefly never runs out of fuel. The luminous tissue has a rich supply of air tubes and nerves which control the amount of air passing through. As oxygen in the air passes from the tubes over the area, the chemical in the cells becomes oxidized and a bright glow assumed. It is said that during the Spanish American War, an army surgeon in Cuba performed an emergency operation by the light of a bottle of fireflies.

The producer of such an elfin aura should surely feed only on nectar and stardust. This, however, is not the case. The firefly is strictly carnivorous. His favourite prey is the snail. Lest undue suffering or struggle mar his banquet, the firefly first paralyzes his victim by the injection of a poison secreted through his mandibles.

The life cycle of the firefly is that of complete metamorphosis. There are four stages, those of egg, larva (which lasts for about three years), pupa and adult beetle. Even during the early forms of his infancy, the fireflow glows.

When you gotta glow, you gotta glow.

Speaking Of Sport

BY BRUCE MacDONALD

Ah! It was a wonderful weekend. The weather was simply beautiful (it hardly rained at all), the train ride was quiet and restful and the Blues walked away with about as nice a win as they have picked up in several seasons.

The Varsity cheering section was a pretty glum looking sight for the first half of the game. They were probably affected by some of the same psychology that the Blues had to overcome, but once the transformation had been made they were undoubtedly the noisiest crowd in Canada last Saturday afternoon.

The Blues really did themselves proud in dear old Macdonald Park. They showed the same kind of spirit that earned them a 6-all tie against the Redmen in that slushy mess last fall. We have been harping for weeks on the fact that the Intercollegiate team with the strongest line was the one to beat for the Yates Cup this season, and there is no doubt that the Blue front wall was the deciding factor against the Redmen.

But let's not take away any credit that is due the Varsity backfield. This boy MacFarlane is going to make a name for himself in Intercollegiate circles before he is done. Both offensively and defensively he was a standout for the Blues, tackling, intercepting passes and toting the ball.

Steve Oneschuck is the kind of ball carrier that can make 5 yards after he is tackled, and he did it on several occasions last Saturday. If they ever turn Bobby Dale loose he will leave a lot of opposing players wondering just what breezed past. Bobby can get into high gear in a hurry. His two runs, along with a 10 yard jaunt by Murray Hadlow paved the way for the Blue's final touchdown.

Bob Garside, one of the most deadly tacklers in the Intercollegiate loop, was at his best against the Redmen. A couple of his diving shoestring tackles brought the crowd to its feet. Al Brown and Jimmy Bell were no slouches in the tackling department either, and Jimmy's toe was a potent scoring weapon for the Blues. His converts and field goal were no more than an inch off centre.

Probably the strangest aspect of the whole game was the number of injuries that the Blues were carrying. With Bill Bewley, Bob Rumball, Ollie Mandryk and Pete Hynbida out for the game with assorted injuries when the Blues entrained for Montreal, the picture was none too bright. On the trip down, Tom Bird took sick and after he had been prepared for an appendix operation it was discovered that his trouble was a contused kidney, an extremely painful injury that will most likely keep him sidelined for the rest of the season.

In the first quarter, two of Masterson's most effective offensive linemen, Jack Roberts and Vince Collizza were forced to leave the game. The final blow was Geoff White's injured knee (it was operated on after the game), putting a total of 8 Blues out of the running.

With any kind of luck, six of these boys should be back in action this week. They may be needed when Western pays us a visit next weekend

Varsity Loses By 4-1 In Intermed Opener

BY BILL WILSON

On a cold wind-swept field at Cobourg the Baby Blues dropped a close game to the Cobourg Galloping Ghosts, provincial intermediate champions for the last two years. Although out-weighed considerably all along the line, Varsity got no worse than an even break in the play. Fumbles, initial nervousness and an offense that did not start to click until the second half probably cost them the victory.

In the first quarter Bob Cooper hoofed a single for the Ghosts as Don Fawcett was brought down behind his line. Cobourg enlarged this lead with a 30 yard placement by Art Jones after picking up a fumble at the 45. Varsity taking over at their 35 got a single before the half ended on a beautiful quick kick from the centre stripe to the dead line by Johnnie Adams, who punted and ran well throughout.

Play continued to see-saw back and forth in the third quarter. Just after the teams changed ends for the final quarter, Varsity started an attack which just fell short of a touchdown. A Doug Geekie to Gene Chorestecki pass went for twenty yards. Adams galloped 14 for a first down on the next play up to the eight. Don Fawcett then gained 3 but an off-side penalty set them back five. Then Fawcett carried across the field but was hit about one foot from the line ending the threat. The game ended as the Ghosts were held off from a touchdown by a determined line after they had picked up a fumble. The end also brought bad news as speedy Bob Pinkney suffered a fractured arm in the last three minutes and will probably be out for the rest of the season.

Once they got untracked Pinkney, Adams, Bob Kimoff, Fawcett and Earl Ford ran in good style. Gerry Fitzhenry and Doug Geekie sharing the quarterback duties called the plays well but failed to get their passing attack going until the second half. Harry Hyde, Al Lansky, Bernie Ellis, Bob Dougan and Don Smith played good ball along the line.

The team looks as if it should stack up well with the competition in its own league. This Friday's game with the Colts at Western should help tell that story.

Blues Lose Sailing Cup To Macmen

The sailors from McMaster have no regard for tradition. They came into Toronto last Saturday, and took home the Colonel Leary Grant Trophy, emblematic of Intercollegiate sailing supremacy, winning the meet by a scant 3½-point margin.

The trophy, which is a six-inch bell, has been in Varsity's possession since it was first donated in 1937. It has become such a permanent fixture that it has been used to call order at Athletic Banquets, but the Macmen have changed all that.

The meet this year was scheduled for eight races at the Queen City Yacht, half Saturday and half Sunday. But the storm Sunday cut off activity and this year's championship was decided on the basis of the first day's activity.

There were only four entries in this year's racing. Royal Military College and Queen's each sent two boats to compete with Varsity and McMaster. McGill, who have sent a team in previous years, were unheard from this season.

Doug Hall, captain of the Mac team, was the big factor in his squad's win, chalked up three firsts in the four races. The other heat was taken by the Varsity boat of Bill Lynn, with Wally O'Hara as his crew.

Toronto's captain Mike Winlo came through with three seconds and one fifth. The latter was partially caused by a close call with a freighter. Final score showed the Hamilton crew with 47¾ points with the Toronto lads 3½ behind. Queen's had 26 and RMC were fourth with 22.

Shoestring Bob

Bob Garside, defensive secondary for the Blues, reminded observers of his performances in Intermediate ranks when he cut loose against the Redmen in Montreal last Saturday. Bob's tackling was a large factor in the defeat of McGill.

With an uncanny faculty for calling plays, Bob has been used almost exclusively for defensive work the last couple of years even though ball carrying as well as kicking and passing were his strong points in Intermediate play.

Bob intercepted a Crain pass last Saturday and travelled 24 yards down the field before he was stopped.

Track

The Junior Interfaculty track meet gets under way this afternoon at Varsity Stadium. Applications for all events may be entered in the Intramural office in Hart House.

All those who have been members of either a senior or an intermediate Intercollegiate team, or winners of an event in the Senior Intramural meet are not eligible for competition in junior Interfaculty ranks.

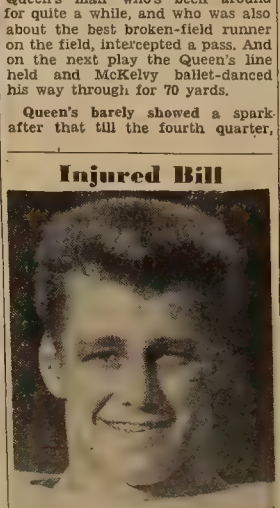
Western Wins First Beating Gaels 24-12

By MICHAEL CALLAGHAN

University of Western Ontario Mustangs opened their intercollegiate season by beating Queen's Golden Gales 24-12. Queen's last year upset Western twice for their only two victories of the year, but in this game there was never any question of who was going to win. The Mustangs played a steady powerful game, rolling over the Queen's line and passing competently.

Western got their first touchdown early in the first quarter by pouring through the Queen's line. From the initial kick-off till the first touchdown the Queen's line was so full of holes that the Mustangs seemed to have more trouble picking holes than finding them.

After that Ross McKelvy, a Queen's man who's been around for quite a while, and who was also about the best broken-field runner on the field, intercepted a pass. And on the next play the Queen's line held and McKelvy ballet-danced his way through for 70 yards.



Queen's barely showed a spark after that till the fourth quarter, and the Western team went right on playing a steady game. Truant and Church the Western quarterbacks threw short pro passes consistently, to catch a weak Queen's defence off guard.

The big difference in the teams was in the lines. The only times that Queen's threatened was when their line would suddenly hold. Then Mellor, Queen's quarterback, would get a chance to throw a few well directed passes to one of the most sensational ends in this league, Harry Lampman. McKelvy would shake loose, but sooner or later, and for all but twice, sooner than a touchdown, the Queen's line would fall apart or Western would intercept a pass. It wasn't till the fourth quarter that Queen's got over the goal-line again.

In the second half the play became a bit fantastic. Queen's had been using the latteral pass on the runbacks all the time. Suddenly Western who had refused to use one lateral, began to throw them all over the field on any excuse.

Aside for a few good moments, the game was unspectacular. Western had lost its fumblitis, their passing attack looked better than it has in years, and they were just too powerful for a spotty Queen's team. This week-end Western plays Varsity here. This will probably be Varsity's toughest game.

Injured Bill

Suffering from an injured shoulder, halfback Bill Bewley was a member of the long Varsity injured list for the league opener against the Redmen last Saturday.

Bill has been one of the bright lights in the Varsity attack to date this season and his loss for the game was a severe blow to Varsity hopes. Playing much improved ball over last season when he was one of the Blue stalwarts, Bewley will be welcomed back with open arms when his shoulder heals.

Captain John

Captain Johnny Evans was one of the stalwarts in an outstanding Varsity line that halted the McGill ground attack. Playing at tackle, Johnny is the kind of ball player that gives his teammates a shot of his own spirit when he is on the field. A fine blocker and tackler, John has been an outstanding lineman for several seasons.

KIDDY CORNER

"Over Sixties" Too

By VIVIAN STERNBERG

The University Settlement, now located in two rather inconspicuous houses behind the Art Gallery at Dundas and Beverley Sts., was founded in 1910 by the late Sir Robert Falconer (he of Whitney Hall fame) and several interested graduates and staff of the U. of T. It was their intention to provide a place where the faculty and students could exchange ideas with the people of the University district.

Thus they built the first Settlement House in Toronto, modelled after the English type. It was first located on Adelaide St., and in 1926 was moved to larger quarters at 23 Grange Rd. In 1942 the Boulton family donated the house which now bears its name, at 15 Grange Rd.

For a few years during the recent war this part of the Settlement was used by the city for a day nursery, but last year it was taken over for the Settlement's junior members. But facilities there now are unsatisfactory in relation to the crowded housing conditions, the lack of space for active play, and the influx of new Canadians in the district. There is, however, a trend towards expansion, which means the addition of a new gym and other facilities in the near future.

The staff also hopes to be able to include the "over-sixties" group into their already wide age range of activities. The Settlement is, moreover, inter-racial and inter-cultural in scope, and it tries to provide a varied social, athletic and creative program for its members.

Besides the city facilities, the Settlement operates Camp Boulderwood, on Gull Lake, near Gravenhurst, Ontario. This gives the neighbourhood kids a chance to escape the smoke and heat for three weeks in the summer, which makes for some pretty amazing changes in those youngsters.

The Settlement is related to the University through its Board of Governors drawn from the faculty and graduates thereof. There is also a Women's Auxiliary, consisting of the wives of faculty members, who help mainly in the upkeep of the residence. This small residence is located at 23 Grange Rd., where some of the staff as well as Social Work students and some others may live reasonably. Miss Kathleen Gorrie is the Head Resident.

The after-school program at the Settlement employs a large number of volunteer students from all courses as group leaders and for the gym and swim groups, with the cooperation of the Psychology and P.H.E. departments. Moreover, it is a Red Feather Agency where some students in the School of Social Work may take their supervised field work.

But the need for volunteers cannot be overemphasized. There is a genuine satisfaction to be obtained by giving a few hours each week. One not only enjoys the challenge of working and playing with the kids, but also the feeling of camaraderie one shares with the staff and other volunteers. It is only through the help of those who volunteer (by phoning WA. 4335) that the Settlement can properly carry out its program and see some of its future plans materialize.

Culture

To date this term there has been little cultural activity in these pages. True, small things have worked their way in, and some of the larger parts of a projected program (such as the Book Review page) are under way.

But the big department, formerly known as Art, Music and Drama, hasn't yet reared its ugly head.

There have been a few enquiries about Art, Music and Drama. In spite of the fact that it hasn't gotten under way in the grand style yet, it's coming.

The editors of The Varsity, in reviewing their plans for this year, felt that change in the Art, Music and Drama section was indicated. In the past we have managed, one way and another, to cover most events. Yet it has often seemed to us that the coverage was less than adequate, that in a university like Toronto there was an opportunity to do a better job.

There have been reasons: the job is too big for one undergraduate editor, it requires a knowledge too broad to expect except in rare instances. There were technical bugs also, mainly space problems.

By and large the technical problems have been solved. And the Art, Music and Drama department is no more. In its place we have substituted what is flippantly being referred to as the Culture Section. Broken down into several parts, it will work this way:

Each day The Varsity will carry a column: Balcony Viewpoint. This will be devoted to the theatre; on days when there is drama it will be on the drama. And on the other days it will be on the movies. The movie section, under former Varsity Editor Frank Moritsugu, is already well under way.

As required, we will carry reviews of art shows (being handled by Joe Kamenicek, IV Architecture), and the various musical events.

And each week, on Thursdays, there will be a page devoted to the arts. Included will be the line-ups for the coming week, as well as articles of interest on current affairs in the theatre, and the world of music and art. The first of these pages is scheduled to appear on Oct. 18.

Also of interest are the Book Reviews, carried in a weekly page (on Tuesday), and already begun.

Of prime importance, as far as The Varsity is concerned, are campus events, or work which involves the active participation of undergraduates. To such events we hope to pay not only more attention, but more intelligent attention. There is a large amount of creative work in the arts being carried on by Toronto students and it is our aim to bring the aims and achievements of that work to as full attention as we can.

The Varsity, in attempting to set its standards high, has found some difficulty getting the kind of people it needs to head its foray into a larger interest in the university arts. The program is slowly being worked out. And as soon as enough oil (and blood) has been spilled we hope to have the Culture Section running in high.

Socialism's Bane

The Big Cigar

This month Britain faces an election. In the second of three articles, the writer examines the issues from a summer's study at a Dockland Settlement in an east-end London, England, slum.

In a fortnight's time Prime Minister Clement Attlee will lead his reigning Labour Party to the polls. Soon the October air will be as multi-coloured as Hyde Park, and as thick as a London fog. In the current battle for power Winston Churchill shot the first volley last week with a signed statement of Conservative aims. Labour shot back with an apology for past problems, and the old cannon ball of imminent war if the Tories are voted in.

In spite of what happened to Dr. Gallup in the last American election, I poked a representative number of east Londoners with the sticky question "On what side of the political fence are you, and what do you think of the welfare state?"

Answers from dockers, laborers, ministers and members of the Rotary Club ran from left to right. But out of the hodge-podge of opinions I drew this much. Each was a product of the person. Self-interest was the motive behind the vote, whether Conservative or Labour. Therefore the party which can play upon that motive at most points in the most people will most likely win. Says G. K. Chesterton: "Modern society is intrinsically insecure because it is based on the notion that all men will do the same thing for different reasons. . . . Four men may meet under the same lamp post; one to paint it pea green as part of a great municipal reform; one to read his breviary in the light of it; one to embrace it with accidental ardour in a fit of alcoholic enthusiasm; and the last merely because the pea green post is a conspicuous point of rendezvous with his young lady. But to expect this to happen night after night is unwise."

The man who sees the British election as a matter of course is viewing the scene with half-closed eyes. Issues may be the food of political conflict, but the ultimate decisions lie with that unpredictable, amorphous mass of people to whom the food is fed. We on the other side must not forget what Sir Robert Peel called "that great compound of folly, weakness, prejudice, wrong feeling, obstinacy and newspaper paragraphs which is called public opinion."

With tea down to a bare two ounces a week, and the cost of living rising, high taxes and a shortage of houses, the elector's mind is very self-consumed with the bread and butter problems at first hand than with Iran, the dollar gap, or Korea. Not unlike the Canadian, the Londoner lives in a groove, is shut in by his own affairs, meets few people outside his trade or his class, and except for the wireless and the tabloid, he rarely looks outside his own concentric sphere of life. Thus it is the party which so to speak can "get in the groove" with these insular, working millions that will call the tune at Westminster.

Meanwhile the British press plays upon public opinion for all its worth. Attlee and Churchill are fast being labelled and stereotyped, the greys of government are heightened to a distorted black and white, and "expanding symbols" are thrown at the voter's emotions from all sides. We see with Walter Lippmann "The frontier between what is concealed because publication is not, as we say, 'compatible with the public interest' fades gradually into what is concealed because it is believed to be none of the public's business." The task to retain perspective in the midst of election fever requires a stern and steady eye. Just how steadily the Britisher sees his politics is a moot question in the current flurry of speculation.

Attlee's cabinet has made mistakes. In nationalizing mines the miners' pay stayed far too low. In steel, the competent men with the "know how" were readily replaced with green bureaucrats. The Town and Country Planning as I saw it on the borough level tended to ride rough-shod over minorities and small business with autocratic efficiency. The Labour Government since 1945, in spite of all its benevolence, has too often confused its ends with means. Socialism has almost become an end in Britain, a law unto itself, until the Bevan revolt brought into focus the danger of losing the human wood in the leviathan state trees. In the public eye the cards are stacked against Labour on these points. But we ought not to forget that the Tommy's grumble is often a far cry from how he'll vote. Whatever the gripes I heard in London on queues and prices, the government was not to blame. To the Cockney a "bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and so Churchill's vague promises face an uphill fight.

Over beyond the austerity of food and rising costs is a deeper, riper fear. I saw it in the Boys' Club at the settlement, in those who were called up for two years' training at eighteen. I heard it from mothers and dads as they came in for a nightly tea and darts. That fear is the dark horse of the election. That fear is the threat of war. Dockland in East London, with Coventry, was the most blitzed area in Britain. These people reached the limit of their capacity for suffering, before and during the last war. Even a shadow of doubt as to another conflict is enough to cast their ballot to Right or Left.

That shadow is still cast by The Man With the Big Cigar.

OUR READERS WRITE

To Avoid A Breach

Editor, The Varsity:

On Thursday last, I gave a story to The Varsity which appeared in the Friday edition on page 1. The story concerned the failure on the part of the two women's affiliated colleges of St. Michael's to arrive at an agreement regarding the proposed union between their two debating societies. My purpose in allowing that story to appear was to arouse interest in an issue which I felt might otherwise be a dead concern.

However, unknown to me, my action in this regard only succeeded in placing Loretto College in a most unfavorable light. I was most surprised and grieved over the resulting controversy.

Consequently, to avoid any serious breach in the friendly relations which up to now have always existed to a high degree between Loretto and St. Joseph's, I feel it is my duty to assume publicly the personal blame not only for the article (which I had intended only to cement relations, certainly not sever them) and the unfavorable repercussions resulting from it—but also for the entire idea of union which was promulgated solely by me with the support of my executive, without the sponsorship or knowledge, of St. Joseph's College SAC.

St. Joseph's College, or St. Michael's College, therefore, is not in any way responsible. The blame is entirely of a personal nature and rests with me, and me alone. I can only offer my deepest regrets to Loretto College, and to Barbara Lyon, their debating society president, whom I took the liberty of quoting, for a completely unexpected climax to something which was intended only as a means to further our already friendly relationship.

I would welcome the opportunity to discuss further the idea of union to these two debating societies with the S.A.C.'s of both colleges concerned, as I feel, and my executive with me, that the idea of such a union should not be abandoned, but if brought about, could not help but promote greater college spirit and more complete co-operation.

Anne McGinn,
President, St. Joseph's College Debating Congress.

Worn out with cheering the Blues to victory, this Varsity fan dozes, serene and content. What matter if he misses his stop, when he is dreaming no doubt of games to come and future scores of 15-7, all in favour of his alma mater? Let's hope that this Saturday's game will leave him with equal peace of mind.

Resignation Tabled At Vic Bob Revue Producer Stays

The Victoria College Union managed to stay within their constitution last night and at the same time keep Terry Lawson, an occasional student, as producer of this year's Bob Revue. Under the constitution of the VCU, Lawson should be an undergraduate if he is to sit on the assembly. The VCU therefore felt obliged to accept his resignation, but by tabling his resignation until the next meeting in November, Lawson was allowed to remain as producer until the show is over.

The Bob Revue will run on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Nov. 5, 6 and 7. The Bob Revue is a combination of the Scarlet and Gold Revue with the traditional Bob. would be a critical one for the Bob Revue, since if the show was not a success then the Bob tradition would be lost.

While John Devereux, president of the VCU, felt that Lawson was only technically an occasional student, Lawson himself felt that he had been "always an occasional student". Lawson had started working on the show last January and Devereux felt that the whole show revolved around him, as he was half of it.

Then Lawson told the VCU that he was having a lot of fun on the show and was glad that he was staying.

Lawson said that the program for the Bob Revue this year would contain no advertising and would make a suitable souvenir of the show. Almost $200 has been raised for the cost of the programs and the VCU was only asked for $20 to complete the amount needed for printing.

Most of the meeting was taken up by the reading of reports from the executives and committees of the VCU. Publicity director Ed File reported that a cheerleader selection committee had been formed, made up of File, social director Alec Gigeroff, athletic director Lorne Lodge, and drum majorette Helen Mackie.

File said that the publicity committee was having more trouble starting the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band, but that the SGLIRPB would be functioning soon.

The first issue of Acta Victoriana is planned for the first week in November, according to editor John Finlay. The typography in this year's Acta will be livened up, with general improvements planned in all forms of the quarterly's make-up.

To Give Students Foundation Grant

Students at the University of Toronto will benefit this year from a grant of $4,000 in bursaries given by the Atkinson Charitable Foundation. The total of this new grant is to be spent this year.

A Committee of Award has been set up representative of the different faculties to select students worthy of the bursaries. $2,000 will be allotted to approximately six freshmen in five different faculties. The other half of the grant will be given to students of higher years. Applications are now being accepted at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, from students who are permanent residents of Ontario. All students other than freshmen may apply.

Bursaries to individual students will consist of approximately $300 to $500 depending on the number of applicants and nature of their circumstances. These bursaries are a part of a grant of $15,000 to be distributed among six universities this year.

A study of the whole program is to be made by the Atkinson Charitable Foundation and will determine whether or not the grant will be resumed next year. To ensure capable leaders in the future the bursaries will be awarded on the basis of merit as well as need.

Although the six freshmen have been selected for half of the bursaries their names have not yet been approved. Names of bursary winners will never be known, J. C. Evans, Registrar of the University of Toronto stated "no student who wins a bursary, partially contingent on financial need, will ever have his name publicized.

Wax Visits Laval On 3-Day Jaunt

Sid Wax, president of the SAC, has just completed a 1,000-mile trip over the weekend to Montreal and Quebec city to discuss NFCUS problems. It was the first time that an SAC president has made an official visit to the University of Laval.

While at Laval, Wax discussed, with student representatives, the reaction of Laval to the program of the international affairs commission and listened to their criticisms and comments. Present at the meeting was Laval student Jean de Margerie who is NFCUS president this year.

De Margerie and Wax discussed the drafting of a reply to the Russian student delegation and also a reply to president Josef Grohman and the IUS council in Prague. Copies of the letters are being sent to CUP editors, student council presidents, and local NFCUS chairmen across Canada.

Plans were laid by Wax and De Margerie for Canadian student attendance at the Edinburgh conference on Jan. 3 of western unions and non-IUS unions. It is hoped to solve the problem of financing the trip by contributions from student councils and from outside sources.

It was decided to try to get a Canadian student living in Rio de Janeiro to report on the Pan-American student conference being held in Brazil as the cost of sending a representative would be prohibitive.

Presidents De Margerie and Wax also discussed the problem of improved co-operation between the NFCUS national offices at Carleton, the president of NFCUS at Laval, and the International Affairs commission at Toronto.

Wax said yesterday in Toronto that NFCUS has added one point to the resolution which is to be handed to the IUS council of students at Prague. IUS will not be acceptable to Canadian students unless it does not take sides on major political issues which fall under the competence of the United Nations. Under this 13th point the IUS council would limit political activity to improving the position of students by cultural, educational and economic means in the interest of international student solidarity.

Information will be sent to student unions across the world urging their support that a meeting should be held between IUS and the other unions before the Edinburgh conference.

TRAVELLING STUDENTS

Endicott, Sopha And Smith At IRC

A panel of three students recently returned from Europe will highlight the International Relations Club's opening meeting on Thursday at 4:10 p.m. at Wymilwood, 84 Queen's Park at Hoskin.

Shirley Endicott (IV Victoria) who has travelled throughout France, Italy, Poland and Germany under the auspices of the World Federation of Democratic Youth will, in particular, give her impressions on the International Union of Students' Conference in Warsaw and the Free Youth Festival in Berlin.

Elmer Sopha (II Law) spent eight weeks in Finland with other Toronto students and the Warden of Hart House aiding in the construction of a residence at a technical school.

Rowena Smith, the third speaker, from the School of Social Work, was a member of an International Brigade in an Austrian Work Camp. For six weeks she helped in the reconstruction of villages damaged by an avalanche.

Also at this meeting, several seminar groups will be formed. Each of these groups will meet regularly and will specialize in the study of one field of international relations, such as the work of the United Nations; the Chinese and Korean issue; and the Colombo plan for South East Asia.

The IRC, a non-partisan organization, throws out a broad appeal to every student (whatever course he or she may be enrolled in) who is interested in international affairs to attend this meeting.

Sloppy Eaters Spoil Scenery For Students

Some people on this campus, it seems, need to learn some manners. Many places on the campus have been left in a mess lately by careless eaters. These people do not have a sense of respect for the property of others.

Those on the left and many others who did not appear in the photograph managed to leave a fair mess on the east side of U.C. as can be seen in the photograph at the right. The space in front of Hart House beside the observatory was also well strewn with trash, despite the fact that there were two trash cans within easy reach of both spots. One of the trash cans was half full and the other was almost completely empty.

It would seem that people who are old enough to come to University should be old enough to have learned some respect for the property of others, and for the labours of these around them.

If . . .

. . . we had a Student Union Building, the Student Administrative Council would not have to wander all over the campus in search of a place where SAC meetings could be held regularly.

ISS Medicine From Canada Is Crucial Aid

University Health Centres in Europe and Southeast Asia have just received a life-saving shipment of drugs and medicines. This shipment was made possible through the United Nations, by the Canadian Council of Reconstruction, when they granted a substantial sum to the International Student Service Of Canada for this purpose.

The drugs were dispensed through the World University Service, our international organization, by two shipments, one to Greece and Yugoslavia and one to Southeast Asia. Reports have now been received from both of these regarding their distribution and success.

Institutions which received part of the drug shipment included Universities in Delhi, Calcutta, Bombay, Burma, and Indonesia. Reports from all of these are the same. They repeat over and over the fact that the help came as a life saver without any exaggeration.

One person in Calcutta was suffering from Pulmonary Tuberculosis. His doctors advised him to have 20 grains of Streptomycin which was beyond his means. He approached the field office of the ISS drug supply for it, received his medicine, and is still alive.

The story is much the same in both Greece and Yugoslavia. They felt that the work was very important there because of the high incidence of tuberculosis and the high cost of treatment. From February through April 1951, a total of 50 students in Europe received 760 grams of streptomycin.

Physicians co-operate with WUS by diagnosing the case of each applicant for drugs. They submit progress reports at intervals which is an evaluation for the use of the drug and specifications for its continuance.

A Tragedy Started It

Just about this time, many students are faced with the chore, as they feel it is, of going through a distasteful medical examination. Yet this check-up is for their benefit.

The chief aim of the University of Toronto Health Service is to promote and to preserve the health of the student body. It would be impossible to accomplish this objective if the students were not obliged to have a compulsory examination to find out whether they were physically fit to participate in sports, for instance.

The Health Service had its origin in a tragedy, two tragedies to be exact. In 1906, 2 students were killed while playing rugby. It was then decided that all students were to be examined before they could play any sport. The following year, Dr. Barton became full-time health director, combining the duties of medical examiner and physical trainer. The present Health Service came into being in 1921 with Dr. George Porter as the first director. The next year, Dr. Edith Gordon was named the head of the Women's Division.

In 1935, Dr. Gossage was appointed by the Athletic Association to head the Hart House Surgery. He was responsible for the reorganization of the hitherto separate Men's and Women's Health Service into one unit. Under his supervision, the combined Health Service opened its quarters at the present address, 43 St. George St. Dr. Wodehouse directs the Health Service now along with his assistants, Dr. MacKenzie and Dr. Stewart.

Besides being concerned with the health of students, the Health Service tries to maintain a patient-physician relationship between the students and themselves, very much like a family doctor would. In addition to medical examinations and X-rays, there are the infirmaries for out-of-town students for treatment of ordinary illnesses, and the Athletic Injury Service.

"We especially welcome anyone to come for consultation about anything that worries them—mental, physical, or otherwise," invites Dr. Wodehouse. "We want the students to feel that the Health Service is a place to which they can turn if anything is bothering them."

The total physical attendances last year numbered about 14,000 with 93.8% of the students fit for unrestricted athletic activities. The health of the student body is, on the whole, excellent, and this fact well reflects the good and conscientious work of the Health Service.

DEBATE

The Garbage Man

What's the place of the professional faculties in a University? Should they be included in it or should a University teach only the liberal arts?

Those questions should be answered tonight at the first Hart House debate of the 1951-52 season. The debate, which starts at 8 p.m. in the Hart House Debates Room, is entitled, "Resolved that technical training for the professions has no place in the university."

This is a subject on which there has been long and heated dispute in educational circles throughout the world. Many leading educationists have made statements about it, among them Abraham Flexner, who says (in "A Modern College") that "Education cannot be made a matter of bookkeeping."

American state universities are not universities except in name, insists Thorstein Veiben in his "Higher Learning in America." "These establishments have been founded, commonly, with a professed utilitarian purpose and have started out with a professional training as their avowed aim," he continues. 'The purpose made most of in their establishment has commonly been to train young men for proficiency in some gainful occupation.

"They are founded by politicians looking for popular acclaim rather than by men of scholarly and scientific insight and their management has not infrequently been intrusted to political masters of intrigue with scant academic qualifications; their foundation has been the work of practical politicians with a view to conciliate the good will of a lay constituency clamoring for things useful, that is, pecuniarly gainful," he continues, and ends "They have named these establishments universities because the name carries an air of scholarly repute."

On the other hand, the former Chancellor of Chicago University, Robert C. Hutchins, replies simply, "It is impossible to get an education in an American university."

And Dean Tupper of SPS says, "The Professions grew up as Professions in the University, and I would challenge the wisdom of divorcing them at this time. The university is a university only by embracing many disciplines, else it is only a vocational school."

Two of the students who are debating also have something to say on the questions of professions and the university. Jim Peters, OCE, who will speak for the motion, says, "The University is more occupied today in filling the needs of industry and supplying professional men than in the search for and providing of an ethical education worthy of the name.

"The university must recognize its true role. It must repair the discrepancies between material and spiritual progress. Industrialization does not equate civilization and until the university ceases to be an adjunct to business, it will

Season Starts Bar No Sex In AV Chorus

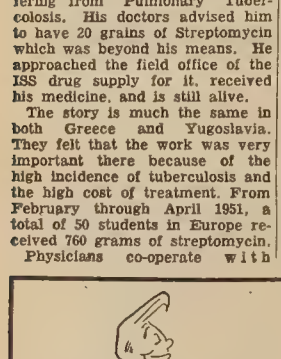
The only choral organization on the campus to draw members from all colleges, faculties and sexes, the All-Varsity Mixed Chorus is going ahead with plans for another big season. It is also the only campus chorus to have a symphony orchestra for accompaniment.

The Chorus presents annually two works of major dimensions. This year's projects include a Bach cantata for presentation at Christmas, and for its March concert, some capella (light and unaccompanied) numbers, and a large work with orchestra, yet to be chosen.

No previous experience is necessary to join this organization, so that any who can pick up a tune fairly quickly — and hold it — are invited to attend rehearsals (regularly). These are held on Monday evenings from 8:00 to 10:00 in the Women's Union Theatre, 79 St. George Street. All who are interested are urged to turn out next Monday.

Prize Dramatists Give "Octopus" For 3 Evenings

"Dear Octopus", a play by Dodie Smith, will be the first presentation of the University Alumnae Dramatic Club for this year. The show will run at Hart House for three nights starting Tuesday, Oct. 16th.



The lead will be played by Christina Templeton, a member of the club since its formation in 1919 and player in many of their presentations since. Male lead will be taken by W. H. Brodie, the supervisor of broadcast language for the CBC.

The romantic leads will be taken by Edith Ord Tuff and Arthur House. House acted with the Earl Grey Players during the past summer.

The Drama club, winners of the Central Ontario Drama League Festival this year, plan a full program of events this term, including a play during Convocation Week if time should be available.

Shown above is John Morden, Speaker of the House at the Hart House Debates. At the left is Gwen-Anne Miller I U.C. She is wishing that women were allowed to attend the Hart House debates, but this pleasure has been denied them up to the present, since Hart House was given to the University for the use of men only, and women can be admitted, only upon the declaration of a special occasion.

Christians Decide Life Has An Aim

About fifty students attended the Student Christian Movement Fall Camp at Humber Glen Camp, near Weston last weekend. These represented almost all faculties and colleges on the campus, about half of them new to the S.C.M.

The main discussion was led by Rev. Ted Nichols, chaplain to Hart House, with the topic, "Has Life a Purpose?". It was decided that life has a purpose, but that there are various ideas of what it is. The Christian interpretation of the way of salvation or method of improving man's present plight was also discussed.

Miss Corrie Ten Boom described her experiences in a German concentration camp, and stated the need for faith and the Bible message.

Dr. John Coleman, of the Mathematics Department, in speaking of "The Student in the Church", said that the student with university experience can make a great contribution to the Church, but that the student needs the Church for fellowship and strength.

Reports on the international conferences held in Finland and Germany this summer were given by Frank Jennings, I Emmanuel, and Shirley Endicott, IV Victoria. Ato Bandoh, of the Gold Coast, who is at the School of Graduate Studies, spoke on the political and economic conditions in Africa with particular emphasis on the new Pan-African Congress.

Miss Isobel Squires spoke of the importance of drama in expressing the Christian Faith, and gave examples of drama which were both serious and humorous.

Co-eds Fly In Air Club On Campus

The old Ajax flying club, formed after the war at Ajax, has now become the University of Toronto Flying Club on an all-Varsity level. It offers its members, grads and undergrads, male and female, an opportunity to learn to fly at reduced rates which include personal insurance to the value of $2,000. There have been no accidents in the club, however, and last year eight students, including three women, earned their private pilot's licence.

Members use the Central Airways two and four-seater light aircraft, and the Island airport. After completion of a ground school course and thirty hours of flying time, a test is given by the Department of Transport and if he passes it the student is given a licence and a $100 rebate from the government.

A "Breakfast flight" to Oshawa is scheduled for October 28. Members will have breakfast there, a social time and then will fly back.

Plans are now being made for a special introductory flight at a very small rate. This will include twenty minutes in the air and a chance for beginners to really fly an airplane. Anyone interested should get in touch with Walter File KI. 3547.

The purpose of the club is to promote flying and increase interest in the air. As club president Tom Comery says, "There is no thrill like flying."

Travelling Ass'n Covers Continent

The University Travel Club is not, as the name suggests, a travel bureau sponsored by the University, nor has it any other official connection with the University of Toronto than that of its name.

It is a general Travel Organization with offices all over the world, its latest permanent office opening in London, England, last year.

The University Travel Club acts as an agent to the different steamship and air lines and also conducts its own tours.

Tours can be arranged to Europe, Canada, the United States and other distant corners of the world, said G. H. Lucas of the University Travel Club, but it is not necessary to take one of the tours. Transportation can be arranged for those with vagabond tendencies.

During the summer the Travel Club organizes two hours which are limited to University students from all over the continent.

Last summer university students were conducted for seventy-six days over all of Europe from Scotland through France, England, Holland, Belgium, Germany and other countries to Italy by Miss J. Gillespie, a member of the University of Toronto French staff. The price of the tour was $1,152 round trip, all expenses included and the trip was made on the Cunard Steamship Lines.

The University Travel Club, operating since 1926, has University graduates as its staff members, and often conducting the tours for the Club are members of the staff of the University of Toronto.

BOOK STORE

Students Have Manners

Believe it or not, the student body as a whole still is not classed as a hopeless entity in spite of its initiation antics, football fanaticism, and whatnot. Miss Margaret MacMurray of the University Book Store was very pointed in her commendation of the student body and the co-operation they had given her and the rest of the staff.

But, of course, all is not a bed of roses. Miss Barbara Earle, an employee at the book counter, said one of their chief aversions was the self-service type who, impatient at the service offered during the peak season, would proceed on his own to investigate the book stocks in the rear.

Difficulties may also take on other forms. Barbara said she was slightly confused when approached for the first time by a student searching for his "Dental Garbage". The object of the search turned out to be a case which she assumed to contain a miscellany of dental equipment.

Here are a few tips to enlarge your knowledge of book store etiquette. First of all, avoid the noon hour and the 4 o'clock rush. During October, Miss MacMurray announced, the store will remain open from 8.30 a.m. to 8.30 p.m. (8.30-1.00 on Saturdays) to help alleviate the rush periods.

The book store is not a replacement for the professor, and students are urged to have at least some knowledge of the books they require before they push their way through the turnstiles. Printed lists of basic books plus the various calendars are the only guides available in the store itself.

If you are temporarily out of funds because that cheque from home has not arrived yet, drop in at once, fill out a card, return it to the staff and then relax. With almost no complications or difficulty you will then became the possessor of a charge account.

Even those in the outer fringes of the campus—pharmacy students, grads, professors—should feel at liberty to use this service which aims at complete coverage of available books. "We will order anything anyone wants," stated Miss MacMurray. The delay may be anywhere up to four weeks for imported books but local publications can be obtained in as little as 24 hours from the time of ordering.

Although still in the realm of theory, it has been suggested that students could now camp at the store until ordered books were received. Machines for dispensing soft-drinks, cigarettes and chocolate bars await their pleasure and are there expressly as a service. Witness the 5c charge for drinks!

Give Awards For Writing Competition

Awards in creative writing have now been announced for the present session by University College. These awards total nearly one thousand dollars and will be awarded to undergraduates of University College for good manuscripts in poetry, drama, and other literary works.

Most important are the Norma Epstein Foundation Awards in Creative Writing. These prizes total approximately 800 dollars each year, and are open to UC undergrads in these classes: Poetry, Drama (full length play), Novel, Short Story, and Critical Essay.

Other awards include the Robin Godfrey Prize, of $50 for a one-act play, and the Frederic Davidson Prize, of $100 for Poetry.

The conditions of award and all other specifications on these awards are available on posters in University College. Anyone interested should see these notices at once since some of the manuscripts must be in soon.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Yesterday I talked about why it was difficult for "good" movies to come out of Hollywood. The complexion of the audience to which cinemoguls must cater to make it almost impossible for Hollywood to produce a mature movie. Add to this the Puritanical Code of Censorship which often allows some drawing-room innuendo to creep through but throws up its manicured hands in horror when the small boy runs to perform an urgent natural function in THE BICYCLE THIEF. And the pressure of minority groups which lobby and lobby and lobby against. And the incredible overhead which results from the hierarchical systems of studio management. And the over-emphasis is on the voice of the theatre managers concerning film quality.

So, when Hollywood produces ALL THE KING'S MEN, CYRANO, CHAMPION, THE ASPHALT JUNGLE, or even ON THE TOWN, it seems like accomplishments against fearsome odds. Recently of course, because British and European imports have been the better products on the whole, they have shown up the frequent tinsel glitter of the American standard product.

Anyway, I mentioned two films, both over 20 years old, yesterday. These, CITY LIGHTS and ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT are both better than most pictures made since that time in Hollywood, and better than any Hollywood picture made in the last ten years.

Fortunately, this dogmatic criticism is not based on nostalgia, as my high opinion for LIVES OF THE BENGAL LANCER might be. (I have not seen the Gary Cooper epic on its current re-release; I treasure my teen-age enthusiasms.) But CITY LIGHTS and ALL QUIET were both around just last year, and what a mistake it was for me to see them. Because with these pictures under the belt, frustration and only occasional moments of fleeting satisfaction became the routine in my subsequent movie-going.

I saw CITY LIGHTS twice last year. First time was at the art house of Toronto art houses, the Town Cinema. The crowd paid it the obeisance it deserved having come prepared to do so. But second time was at the Casino Theatre sandwiched between the stage shows Rural-looking folk in over-alls, hot dog munchers, people out for a good time made up the audience.

Yet there was the wonderful phenomenon of a Casino audience being held completely by the Chaplin, roused to hilarious laughter in the comedy sequences, and held to a torturing quiet in the final agonizing recognition scene between The Tramp and the flower girl who was not blind any more.

Chaplin made a picture which had no speech, only sound effects and a musical background that fit so well. Walking out of CITY LIGHTS, you do more than merely recollect a good scene or a good crack, or a smart dress worn by a female star. You feel a completeness of experience, mixed with a sense of recognition with the little man of The Tramp.

And how many of us have said or thought how little is the contribution of talkies to the art of the film after seeing CITY LIGHTS?

ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT is an honest filming of the Erich Remarque novel. Based on World War I, it shows the futility of war. Mud, boredom, fear, and man's frequent descent into animalism are hurtled at you from the screen, sometimes with the impact of the old-fashioned machine guns, sometimes with the agonizing waiting of trench warfare.

The highlight was the sequence in which the German boy-soldier hero is trapped during an artillery barrage in a shell crater with a French soldier that he has himself mortally wounded. But even in the comparatively unimportant meeting with the friendly girls, the bedroom scenes were portrayed subtly then and even poetically.

With both of these pictures, some element of what makes up Life's experience was present. Chaplin's world is a somewhat fantastic one, and yet we recognize something we know ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT aims at more realism and its mud does not look like synthetic studio mud. (When since has any Hollywood film had that quality?)

THE ROYAL VISIT

Well-laid Plans

"According to the arrangements we have been able to make," Registrar J. C. Evans remarked, "this is one time when the little man gets the break." He meant that the student and working-staff spectators outside Hart House, unlike the academic dignitaries inside, would have three different views of Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip when the royal couple visit the University of Toronto. "But," Mr. Evans emphasized, "all our plans concerning the royal visit are tentative."

It is certain that Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh will be on the campus between 12:00 noon and 12:15 p.m. of Saturday, October 13th. To make possible both student and staff attendance, all labs and lectures will be cancelled and all university buildings closed on Saturday morning. University grounds will be open to the public, but special areas are to be reserved for students (presenting ATL cards) and for members of the administrative staff (presenting tickets from their respective faculties). Absolutely no parking will be allowed on any Hart House, Queen's Park, or Front Campus areas.

The 1939 visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth, unlike the present royal visit, had little to do with the University. The Queen reviewed the Toronto Scottish on the Back Campus; and their Highnesses attended a luncheon, in Hart House, sponsored by the Provincial Government. The earlier trip of the Prince of Wales and Prince George in 1927, was also a non-student affair as the visit was made in August when the university was not in session. HRH the Prince of Wales had made two previous visits to Hart House and was very anxious that his brother should see the facilities of the house. This time the University is responsible for 15 minutes of the royal itinerary. Only after a monumental amount of worry and thought by the Registrar's Office has the following tentative schedule been evolved.

The fourteen-car royal caravan is expected to drive through "the underpass" at 12:00 noon. It should circle around the campus and come to a halt at the main entrance of Hart House. The royal party will, weather permitting, pass through the quadrangle to the Great Hall. Amidst the dignity of academic dress, the Chancellor will greet the Prince and Princess in the University's name, and they will sign the visitors' book. They will leave Hart House by the East door, and should proceed on foot through the underpass to the parliament buildings.

Meet The Author

OF TV

And Tarzan

The Mechanical Bride by Prof. M. McLuhan published by Vanguard Press, 1951, $5.50.

Professor McLuhan's book represents an attempt to disengage certain basic patterns of our society by concentrating on advertising as one of its prime symbols. He believes that modern man has been shaped into a predetermined complex of basic responses to predetermined situations, and that the means to this end has been the tremendous growth in communications, notably the penny newspaper, the weekly magazine, the radio and television; and the spread of literacy over the past 75 years. This process has been so outstandingly successful that all value judgments now refer themselves in the last analysis to one of the three standards of sex, success, or hygiene. The billboard and not the university now set the values of society.

Dr. McLuhan regards the state and society in general as a work of art that it should be possible to criticize as a work of art. Our "supposedly wide - awake technological world is full of childish bric-a-brac and sets so much value on the same;" to disengage its causes and its effects is his aim. Time and Tarzan, the Na'ional Association of Manufacturers and drum majorettes are all relevant to this technique. The book hopes to dispel the collective dreams of which the above are social manifestations. "It is nice to be enfolded in a collective dream as long as the comfort is greater than the pain, but we have nearly passed the critical point. Consciousness will come as a relief."

In so bringing our minds to bear upon these key points, instead of the reverse, we may be able to free ourselves from our own folklore. One could take exception to this and argue that a society at any particular moment can only develop (or have imposed upon it) a folk-lore corresponding to that particular level of culture it has reached. But the analysis remains, nevertheless, undeniably correct, and that is what is more important.

The most interesting conclusion to come out of the book is that we are here presented with a monopoly of knowledge controlled by . . . no one. The ad men and the economic upper class who are the most directly responsible are probably as conditioned by advertising as much as the people to whom it is directed. Increasing numbers of people are induced into this state of mental paralysis, but as yet there has been no organized attempt on the part of any specific group to use this power for its own ends. The mind of modern man has been exploited in a variety of ways and for a variety of ends; thankfully there has been no cohesive movement.

Advertising is a monopoly of knowledge based on the conquest of space, as opposed to one based on the conquest of time. The idea is to reach as many people as possible in as short a time as possible. Nothing is less likely to sell the product than the ad that was used 10 years ago. By that time, people have caught up with the specific techniques, and as these are understood, the value of the ad is destroyed. This is the very thing that this book attempts. Folk-lore is presented as a "whirling phantasmagoria that can only be grasped when arrested." When the ad is contemplated, it can no longer have any effect on its victim: its whole point is subconscious. To be successful, any ad depends on a similar response from all whom it reaches. The mind of each individual must first be collectivized so that the ad man can be sure of creating the response that he solicits. He must have an unconscious audience. "To put the thing briefly, a power economy cannot tolerate power that cannot be centrally controlled. It will not tolerate the unpredictable thoughts and actions of individual men."

The technique of the book is cubistic, in that there is no logically connected argument, but rather a series of essays which posesss unity only when taken as a whole. Each essay criticizes society from an angle that has no apparent relation with the preceding.

Lost Atlantis

The Sea Around Us, by Rachel Carson, published by Oxford University Press, 1951 — $4.00.

Water, water everywhere, but if you are in the same boat as I am, you will probably know very little about it. Here is a book, small enough to look inviting, and yet crammed with information for the interested reader. With the exception of boys in the U.N.T.D., we in Ontario probably know little and care less about the sea then we should. Until I picked up this book, I would never have believed that the sea could hold so much of interest to land-locked lubbers like you and me.

Was there ever really a "lost Atlantis"? Why is the sea literally in our blood? What is the sea's phantom bottom"? How was the moon formed from the sea? This book answers questions I could not even have asked.

The Sea Around Us is written by a person who obviously knows and loves her subjects. The fact that four out of five of the nation's best sellers are stories of the sea is an indication that she is not alone in this. Miss Carson quotes freely from many sources and displays an ability to make her story live. Several illustrations and an extensive bibliography and index round out the book, which, incidentally is topped off by a very original cover design.

If one were to find any fault with the book, it would be the opening chapter when Miss Carson is describing the beginnings of the earth. Her cosmology is obviously not as good as her hydrography.

However the book is the work of a first-rate writer who blends scientific fact and literary ability into a vibrant work of art. The Sea Around Us will stand for a long time as a classic about the eternal ocean.

George Fierheller

Ave Atque Vale

Since the death of Sir Roger Newdigate in 1806, Oxford University has offered annually a prize of twenty-one guineas for the best poem submitted by an undergraduate on a prescribed subject. The Newdigate Prize for Poetry has been won in the past by such famous men as Mathew Arnold, J. A. Symons, J. Huxley, Oscar Wilde and Lawrence Binyon This year the prize was taken by a graduate of the University of Toronto, Michael Hornyansky who is attending Merton College on a Rhodes Scholarship.

Now writing poetry is generally a very precarious business and not the sort of thing one does often with the deliberate intention of competing for a prize, let alone having someone else prescribe the subject of your poem for you. Some people would contend that it is impossible to write poetry under such conditions and immediately lose interest in the competition. Mr. Hornyasky was not of this mind and seems to have had no difficulty in finding appropriate words, images and phrases as well as a suitable situation to fit the topic offered, namely The Queen of Sheba.

His poem follows an arbitrary rhyme scheme and is sustained throughout with a careful and colourful choice of words. To my mind the best stanzas of the poem come at the conclusion of the second section where the Queen of Sheba is described:—"She is fair, my love; behold, she is fair/Brighter than spiced wine, sweeter than midnight /More secret than the rose . . . Aloes and myrrh succeed/Her coming, frankincense attends her. Gold/Shall adorn her hair, silver shall confine/Her feet, and ivory and silk enfold/Her sleeping; honey and sweet wine shall feed," but readers who are familiar with the Song of Solomon may feel that this passage is too indebted to the Biblical love-song.

There is a skilful consistency in the way in which Mr. Hornyansky presents the thoughts of Solomon as he contrasts the confusion of his own feelings towards the Queen of Sheba with the constancy of mind which his people attribute to him, and which he knows they expect of him He is brought to a closer realization of man's limitations and accepting these limitations, he becomes lost, at the conclusion of the poem, in a reverie over the Queen of Sheba:—"the chambers of the stars declare/Her presence, who still binds with silver chains/The mind's horizon; and the sky contains/Her laughter. And at midnight she remains/Claiming the shadows of my mind, reigns there." Perhaps I expect too much from thirty-six stanzas of prize poetry, but I left Mr. Hornyansky's poem with the feeling that not very much had happened that either given me food for thought or made me want to go back and savour some of the lines again.

Crew Cut For Asa

The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis by Max Shulman, published by Doubleday, 1951, $2.50.

Asa Hearthrug has acquired a crew-cut and a new name in Max Shulman's The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis, but it is a flimsy disguise. He is still shoeless and retains all the unpredictable cheek of the hero in Shulman's earlier Barefoot Boy With Cheek.

Eleven Short and Swift Stories, most of the having made previous appearances in American periodicals, relate campus love affairs and the resultant comic complications of a University of Minnesota lad named Dobie Gillis. Shulman, himself a grad of the the U. of M., created a reputation as editor of the school magazine, "Ski-u-mah", and that accounts for the setting

However, as the reader will discover, the persons, places and situations are recognizable in any North American university, with very little alteration of detail. Even Dobie is constantly transformed throughout the book to give him the characteristics of various campus types. The unfortunate part is that one may even glimpse himself among the incarnations of Dobie.

As the author points out in his introduction: "Mean, small, captious, and niggling readers will notice certain discrepancies in the following stories. In some of them, for example, Dobie Gillis is a freshman; in others he is a sophomore. In some he is majoring in law; in others he is majoring in journalism or chemistry or English or mechanical engineering or nothing at all. In some he is shrewd; in others dumb; in some aggressive; in others meek. . . . These tiny variations will be noticed, as I said, by mean, small, captious, and niggling readers."

The quality of the stories suffers in comparison with Barefoot Boy With Cheek. As one reads, he can almost predict the outcome of each plot and what will be said next. To switch an old MacArthur quote, "In Humour, there is no substitute for the unexpected". Although Shulman caricatures the "types", the job is not always extreme enough. The personalities are sometimes too recognizable, too familiar on our own campus to be correctly placed on a level of absurbity and laughed at.

But perhaps that is being too "mean, small, captious, and niggling", for the laughable material certainly dominates the opposite kind. The Shulman satire is in full and glorious bloom. Nothing from fraternities to freshman, from editors to essays, from parents to profs, from physics to football, is spared from the author's witty sarcasms. Frosh, grads, profs, and all in the intermediate stages will discover more than a little amusement here.

You And I And Life

The Conduct of Life by Lewis Mumford (New York, Harcourt Brace and Company), 1951, 342 pp., $6.75.

This volume, as both jacket and preface immediately inform one, constitutes the culmination of a series begun in 1934. Technics and Civilization, The Culture of Cities (1938), The Condition of Man (1944), and now The Conduct of Life undoubtedly modify one another, yet each volume can be studied alone. To be considered, then, is the ripest thought and scholarship of a man active for many years in American higher education.

The excellence of this book's scholarship may be judged from its comprehensive and descriptive 24 pages of bibliography. Yet it is no dry tract. Imagery, literary allusion, and summaries make for highly satisfied reading.

Lewis Mumford takes considerable pains, right from the beginning of his study, to show the unhealthiness of present-day Western civilization. He is particularly disturbed that man has become his own most dangerous enemy. Over-specialization, callousness, raw animality, and thoughtless activity indicate that life itself has become uninteresting and that culture no longer represents the necessities of modern man.

God is re-defined, interestingly if somewhat anthropomorphically, as the ultimate goal of creation, the impulse of divine discontent that tantalizes man towards future perfection. Unfortunately, this definition is at the cost of typing the God of the Old Testament as one of matter, bestiality, darkness, and pain. "The good," an admitted relative-absolute, is taken as that which furthers growth, integration, transcendence, renewal, completeness and balance.

On the basis of such concepts, and bearing in mind that rigid systems do not comprehend man's continual reshaping of himself and of his environment, Lewis Mumford has a number of suggestions. Nurture and education must bring about a sympathetic co-feeling, equanimity, farsightedness, and humility in the individual. Nor are man's sensory equipment, memory, emotional sensibility, and genius at handling symbols to escape cultivation. A daily period of withdrawal should also help to plan better use of one's free time. In this connection, it is unfortunate that the lines between dreaming, planning, and imagining are not more precisely drawn.

The goal is to project oneself into the ideal (Renaissance) state of being able to replace anyone else. Such all-roundness should be coupled with today's technical knowledge to attain the universal community so necessary if modern man is not to lapse into self-asphyxia and barbarism.

To question the over-all value of these suggestions seems unnecessary. Yet, one cannot but wish more attention had been given to the "how" of the process. To have the principles of "a good life" is one thing, but to find the essential (and perhaps irrational) motivation to live it is still very difficult.

Blue Soccerites In Double League

For the last two weeks, the 1951 version of the Varsity Soccer Blues has been practicing hard under the critical eye of their new coach, Ted Slade.

Many holes were cut in last year's squad by graduations, and fellows missing the boat, but so far they have not proved too diffiult to fill. Of last year's team the defence is still intact, with Bob Lane, Tom Broadhurst, Wally Eze, and Doug Moffat coming back to take over their old positions. However the front line has been shattered by the loss of four of the five forwards, the most notable of whom was Brian Barton, last year's playing coach. Only Bob Antoni remains to take over his old position to centre forward.

The Blues attacking force has had to be reconstructed from last year's promising intermediates, and new players that have shown well in practice. The showing of the new forward line so far has indicated that they will be a formidable combination, and will be hard to stop.

Manuel Atucha from last year's intermediates will probably hold down the left wing position. He will have as his partner at inside left, his younger brother, Jose Atucha from Venezuela. These two will form a strong left wing, and should give a lot of added punch to the forward line. On the opposite wing, Al Logan from the University of Saskatchewan has shown a lot of promise as a speedy right winger, and Ken Jessop will probably patrol the inside right position. These competent players, along with Bob Antoni at centre forward should form a fast, thrustful forward line that should pile up the Varsity goal averages.

Just who is going to fill the all important wing half positions on the team is uncertain yet, but Gil Toppin, and Ole Frierle are promising candidates, and they should fill the bill well.

The Intercollegiate Soccer League has been revised this year with the formation of an Eastern, and a Western Division, with Varsity competing in both. R.M.C., McGill, and Toronto form the Eastern Division, with O.A.C., Western and Toronto making up the Western Division. This gives the Blues a rather crowded schedule, with having to play eight league games, and one exhibition game in the space of four weeks.

The new league structure is such that if Varsity wins in both divisions, she is automatically declared Intercollegiate Champion, but if one of the other colleges win in their respective divisions there will be a play-off between the Eastern and the Western Divisions.

The heavy schedule will be a strain on the Blues, especially if injuries occur, so a large supply of reserves will have to be kept on hand for emergencies. The turnout during practice has indicated there will not be much trouble in this regard, but there is always room for more. Anyone interested in trying out for the Blues is urged to attend the practices on the Front Campus on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons at 4.30, and to sign the list in the Athletic office in Hart House.

Ojala Best With 13 Pts. As Skule Edged By UC In Jr. Interfaculty Meet

By MAL CRAWFORD

As the javelin throwers in the Junior Interfaculty track meet were taking their preliminary throws yesterday, a well built figure wearing a spring coat, a shirt, a pair of grey plaid stripes, and street shoes, walked up to the line, took off his coat, picked up the javelin, and threw the spear 162' 10".

The throw, which betters the intercollegiate marks for the past two years anyway, is a poor effort according to the man who did it. Juri Vrzesnevski, who came over from Esthonia three years ago, says he used to throw 190 feet when he was competing several years ago. If he regains his old form, he stands a good chance of breaking the Intercollegiate record of 193 feet, which no one has come near since it was set in 1938, and is a shoo-in for a first in the Intercollegiate at the end of the month. He is in I PHE.

In total points, UC edged SPS 39-35, with the 440 and 880 postponed till next week when the bleachers will be off the far side of the track. The results, for a junior meet, were very encouraging, in spite of the near-freezing temperature. Besides Vrzesnevski's fine record, there were good times posted in the three mile, 100 yards, the hurdles, and fair distances in the shot put and high jump.

Tauno Ojala was the big winner with two firsts, a third, and a fourth. His 17.8 in the 110 high hurdles and his 29.3 in the 220 low hurdles were very good considering there was no one pushing him hard.

Pal Johnson, I Vic, was another double winner. His 17:13 in the three mile makes him a possibility for Senior Intercollegiate in this race. He also won the mile.

A surprise winner in the 100 yards was Don Fawcett, II PHE and Intermediate footballer and basketballer. Fawcett was rounded up as a post entry by the UC athletic director when it looked like no UC men were going to turn up. He beat Yeigh of SPS by a nose to clock the century in 10.4.

Bernie Deuchars, I SPS, put the shot 40'6". Burns high jump of 5'6" deserves credit, as does Evans pole vault of 9'6".

The meet was staged by the Phys Ed faculty, and was well run. For a while, in fact, it looked like there would be more officials than competitors. They far outnumbered the spectators, thats for sure.

Injuries Keep Five Players Out This Week

The hospital report for this week on the Blues doesn't compare with the ponderous tomes we issued on the subject around this time last year, and in view of this year's teams superior strength and experience, it will probably not weaken them much, except possibly in one or two positions. However, some of the injuries are quite serious.

Geoff White is out of football for the season, maybe even for life. He was brought down by a hard tackle in McGill Saturday and went off with torn ligaments and cartilage in his knee, was operated on the same night.

Tom Bird had a kidney condition, which will sideline him for most if not all of the season. He was on the operating table at the Royal Vic in Montreal ready to have his appendix removed when some alert doctor suddenly discovered it wasn't his appendix at all.

Jack Roberts, right guard, blacked out for the second Saturday in a row at McGill. He is taking an encephalogram today to determine whether a brain injury has resulted, and will know from the results of this whether he will play any more. A terrific blocker, he will be a big loss to the line if he is out.

Bob Rumball will probably miss this week's game as well as last week's. However, Bill Bewley, the first string right half, is in good shape again and expects to play Saturday.

Olie Mandryk is in the same boat as Rumball, will not likely play this week. Joe Harris, the other casualty, has a bone formation in his calf, but will be ready to play.

Intercoll Squads In Tennis Picked

Announcement has been made of the teams which will represent the University in Intercollegiate tennis competition. The Senior team consists of Don Coles, Grad; John Coles, III Vic; Stan Hurowitz II Vic, Ken Lawson I Vic, Gerhard Lukk II SPS; and Pete Stewart III Trinity. The Coles brothers will play the doubles.

On the Intermediate team will be Dick Arnold, Arts II, Robin Arnold, Pre-med; John Little SPS IV; and Craig Upfold, Pharmacy IV.

Intercoll Golf Qualifiers Led By D. G. Beattie

The 8-hole Senior Interfaculty Golf Tournament and the qualifying rounds of 36 holes for Intercollegiate teams have been played last week and over the weekend. Vic took the Interfaculty championship with a low score of 308, while Meds came second with 321. Law's team was third, SPS fourth. Paul Walton of Vic and Jack Sheppard of Meds were the best individually with rounds of 75 each.

D. G. Beattie of Trinity, who had one round of 74 to card a 54-hole total of 231, led the Intercollegiate qualifiers. Kater of Trinity, Sheppard of Meds, and Smith of SPS make up the rest of the senior team. The tournament will be held Friday at the Cataraqui Club in Kingston.

The intermediate foursome is comprised of Stewart, Dents; Griffin, SPS; West, Forestry. The fourth member will be decided in a play-off between Timmins, SMC, and Mills, Vic, who tied in the round last weekend. The Intermediate meet will be played at Toronto's St. Andrew's, also on Friday.

Others who came in with low scores but who missed the teams are Clenny, Dents; Harrison, SPS; Walton, Vic, and Eisele, UC.

Sportswoman

Yesterday's game between Vic seconds and Physio and OT played on Trinity field ended in a tie. With Vic leading 11 to 8 in the top half of the fourth inning, the Physios rallied to bring in three runs but were stopped from further gains by effective Vic outfielding.

In an exciting game at Varsity Stadium PHE softball team defeated the Vic I girls by a score of seven to five. Outstanding players during the game were the right-fielders: Marybell Segworth of Vic and Joan Kennedy, pitcher for P.H.E.

The third game of the day was won by Meds, when they managed to get two players around the bases and home. In the short two innings St. Hilda's team had plenty of exercise and just as much fun, but failed to make any impression on the score sheet.

Vic Football Squad Set For Good Year

Victoria College, last year's Mulock Cup semi-finalists will, from all pre-season apeparances, again field a fast running, hard-driving ball club in the 1951 season. Still coached by Lew Fick who is ably assisted by ex-Blue Carl Kanteroff, the Vic squad will have many of last year's men back on the roster.

Although the team has lost several of the boys from last year's squad, notably Jeff White who has graduated to the Blues, the empty slots seem to have been very capably filled. Along the wingline last year's team is again represented by centre Jim Rogers and end John Anderson along with towering Tony Lobraico in the guard position.

In the backfield Lorne Lodge has returned for another season as well as shifty Mel Fraser. The tricky running of Jim Bond will again be an asset to the Red and Gold team. Out of the crop of new men on the team this year the most impressive is North Toronto's Johnny Fowler, a short, blonde quarterback who shows equal polish either handling or passing the pigskin.

Vic is again using the T formation and will rely mostly on speed and deception as the squad is fairly small in stature. The backfield as a whole seems to be clicking fairly well and a few more scrimmages will whip the line into form. Vic can be considered a very potential threat in the Mulock Cup race this fall.

Many Injuries May Weaken Mustang Squad

While Bob Masterson is having his troubles over injuries to Varsity players Coach Metras of the Western Ontario Mustangs is far from being free from worry concerning his own squad. It seems certain that both teams will start the big game considerably below full strength.

When the Mustangs played Queen's they were without the services of Gerry Fitzgerald, Jimmy Carroll and Geno Fracas. Fitzgerald is out for the season (appendixed) while Carroll is suffering a shoulder injury and will not be ready for Saturday. Fracas may possibly be in the line-up.

In addition to this Metras is faced with the loss of quarterback Ray Truant who is suffering from a groin injury. Centre Miller Gallow will more than likely be forced out of action as he has an injured shoulder.

Bob McMurdo may be started at the pivot spot but he has sore legs as also has halfback Bob Smith.

On the other side of the ledger Varsity will be minus five players for the important game, details of which may be found elsewhere in another story on this page.

Television brings far-away events to your eyes. Most metal parts of the tubes of the television camera and the receiving set are nickel or nickel alloys

Neighbours the world over with NICKEL

Hundreds of everyday uses for Nickel have been developed by the Nickel industry through a planned program of research. Today a large share of Canada's Nickel production is being diverted from peacetime uses into channels for preparedness. So the Nickel mine facilities, greatly expanded over the past decade, are again being operated at peak capacity. There is actually more Nickel now being delivered by Canada to the free world than in any peacetime year.

The heart of long distance telephone service is the vacuum tube—its metal parts are nickel or nickel alloys. Nickel alloys increase the efficiency of trans-atlantic cables. Men and women the world over are neighbours—with the help of nickel.

Bookstore?

Possibly one of the greatest needs on the campus today is a bookstore. Not a retail agency for anything that appears to sell, nor an in-between lecture snack bar, nor a Readers' Digest dispenser, nor a pennant bureau, but a real, honest bookstore. A bookstore that is interested in being a bookstore and not, by a strange and tortured process of metamorphosis, intent on turning itself into a drugstore.

We are being optimistic and idealistic and all the other things that students are accused of being, by asking such a thing.

Two years ago, when the University Bookstore was offering a 10% discount, the lineups were long indeed. Last year, they tapered off considerably. Undoubtedly, decreased enrollment as much as the discount, was responsible for this. Yet, in the calm, uncrowded days of the very postwar years, the Bookstore should take stock of itself, its purpose in the university, its function as a bookstore and its service to students.

Such obvious bureaucratic absurdities as requiring a $2.00 deposit on all books which are ordered (even on pocketbooks) could be easily remedied by demanding a deposit in proportion to the price of the book to be ordered Again, it hardly seems necessary to sell bookcovers at 8 cents when they can be printed for about one-third of the price by downtown jobbers, if not by the University of Toronto Press. These are small points among many which could be made, but inexcusable because of their stupidity.

The really important thing which should be considered by the Bookstore is its function—is it a bookstore or is it a supply centre for texts?

Obviously, the Bookstore is not satisfied to think of itself only as a place to buy texts in September. The display shelves, albeit meagre, contain a number of books which do not seem to be specified on any course. The fact that the store continues to operate at full staff after the September rush would indicate that the Bookstore had ambitions.

How satisfactory the Bookstore is in supplying students with texts is open to question. It may be said fairly safely, however, that it is a better place to buy specified texts than to buy books of a more general interest. (The difference between books and texts is a matter of philosophic interest. We consider a text as what must be read for a course and a book as what must be read.)

At present, the University Bookstore is better equipped to sell soft drinks and candy bars than books. The display is unimaginative and uninviting. They are quite right in being so unpretentious. It is an understatement to say that there is hardly any room for books any more — turnstiles and cash registers and other machines eat up the limited space. While this continues, there is little hope of the Bookstore becoming a bookstore.

Only when the University Bookstore ceases to think of itself as the women's Hart House, can we again consider the possibilities of having a bookstore on the campus.

Comment

University College's Women's Undergraduate Association held its annual freshman initiation last night, on the eve of Yom Kippur. How very non-sectarian of a non-sectarian college! . . . We see that not only Hart House, but Victoria College is concerned with standards of dress these days. On the list of instructions for '52 graduate pictures: "Men to wear well laundered white shirts and conservative ties. Girls, white blouses with starched open collars." Can Hart House top this? Of course not, no open-collared girls.

OH CANADA!

Money-less

A Delegate To This year's ISS Seminar held at Ottawa, the writer, Ian Montagnes, would like to suggest some ways In Which Future Seminars might be improved.

The ISS seminar held this summer near Ottawa was a success. There can be no doubt about it; any meeting of students from many countries is bound to create international understanding. However, there are degrees of success, and I propose to point out some places where there was room for improvement.

The criticism, however, should not be interpreted as aimed at the Canadian International Student Service, which organized the seminar. That organization can certainly bear improvement in other fields, but in this case enough cannot be said for the work which the National Secretariat, under Pat Daniel, did to find the necessary money and organize the seminar. Without the work of Mr. Daniel, the seminar would phobably have had to be dropped early in the spring.

The greatest criticism which can be brought to bear on the seminar was the appalling ignorance of the vast majority of the students (myself included) concerning current Asian problems. Whose fault this is would be difficult to say. ISS must share part of the blame because of its tardiness in sending out reading lists. But even so, few of the students made use of the library at the seminar.

This lack of knowledge showed up considerably at the discussions, lowering many of them either to a debate between three or four "experts" or to a quiz session between the lecturer and audience.

One delegate to the seminar, in another student paper, describes the students as "accepting nothing at face value, but thinking deeply and constructively, accepting what they felt was right and discarding what they felt was wrong " Actually, the truth was anything but this. We had no facts to work on, and were accepting facts wholesale from anyone who seemed to have any authority. At one point serious credence was given in some quarters to a report by an Indian student that in order to destroy the Indian weaving trade, the English cut off the right thumb of every native weaver.

But the most serious limitation of a Canadian seminar is its limitations on the number of non-Canadians attending. This year there were no English students, only two French and two German students. Belgium, with four students, was the only European country to have a representative delegation. The majority of the European students were able to come to the seminar only because they happened to be in the country anyway: they were either on their way to Canadian or American universities, or were returning home from them.

In 1950, in France, more than half the students were Europeans. This year they represented only about one-sixth of the student body. True, this year we had a large Asian delegation, which varied from two to thirteen at different times. Still, the large preponderance of Canadians (over half the students) destroyed to a large degree the international spirit of the seminar.

One of the strangest features of the seminar was the failure of the Canadian Department of External Affairs to recognize its importance This was the first time Canada had played host to such a gathering. Yet, at a time when the Communists were spending tens of thousands of dollars on a gigantic Peace Rally, the Canadian department refused our request of $2,000 to keep the seminar going the expected five weeks, because "it didn't know where it could fit such an expense into its budget." Most surprising of all was the failure of Lester B. Pearson, the Minister of External Affairs, or one of his top assistants to even make an appearance at the seminar.

The most serious difficulty the seminar faced was lack of funds. Last year the seminar expenses mounted to over $40,000. This year ISS budgeted for $14,000, and received $12,000. Whether or not high-pressure salesmanship might have brought in more money would be difficulty to say. Some Europeans suggested that their countries might have contributed some money. (At present the seminars are entirely Canadian-financed.)

At any rate, the seminar suffered because of lack of funds. It had to be cut from five to four weeks It had to be in Canada. It had some good lecturers, but it couldn't get the top men in several fields because it couldn't compete with summer school wages. Seventy-five persons attended it, as compared to 117 last year.

No one knows whether or not there will be a seminar in 1952. Considering the financial difficulties of this year, it does not seem too likely. At any rate, my advice to ISS is this: this seminar was good but it could have been improved. If you can't get $30,000 or $40,000, don't have a seminar next year. It is better to have one first-class seminar every two years than to have an annual one that is just "good."

IRON CURTAIN

Two Sides

By J. A LOUGHEED

NFCUS—IUS—ISS: these are symbols which float before the vision of the average student with varying degrees of illumination. While I am no authority on these international university groups I am definitely interested in the cause of world understanding or, to be more concrete, the breaching of the east-west iron curtain; and let us never forget that the curtain is not one-sided.

How many citizens of Canada or the U.S.A. have read an objective report, or heard an objective account, of Life in Russia today. Not many I venture to say. The ones who do not receive such reports often become Marxists; once one disagrees with "The American Way of Life" one finds oneself outside the aura of conventionality and consequently suspect. Thus the person who attempts to evaluate the world situation objectively is cut off from the comfortable position of blind nationalism and is likely to be charged vaguely with socialism, which, as George Drew pointed out incisively, is synonymous with Communism. Cut adrift from the right the would-be neutral is forced to embrace the left.

We have just as effective a system of protection from the truth on this side of the iron "curtains" as they do in Communist countries When we read the inside story on what went on in China during the past decade we realize that we were consistently deluded by the popular press for years, and that the opinions of the "discredited" leftists have been ultimately vindicated. It is apparent that that fallacious reporting over the past few years regarding the political situation in China hardened public opinion against China and contributed to the alienation of that country from the west. Ultimately it has resulted in open conflict when the US pursued a consistently unrealistic policy of courting the "democratic" Chiang and refusing to recognize the people's government in China. One does not need to be a flabby sentimentalist to see some merit in the viewpoint of the Red government of China toward the western world.

It appears to be somewhat the same story with regard to Korea. Stewart Meacham, who went to Korea in 1946 as labor advisor to Gen Hodge, the US general commanding the Korean occupation, had a letter in the Christian Century Oct. 3, 1951. He speaks of the Gestapo methods of Rhee's police who close newspapers which do not agree with Rhee's policies and arrest political opponents in profusion. Despite the fact that rival opponents were arrested and intimidated Rhee's candidates were administered a whacking defeat in the elections of May 30, 1950.

The problem for the university student is to keep some degree of objectivity in the present day of blanket opinion in our leading newspapers and magazines. It would indeed be comforting if one side of the iron curtains, either the east or west, were absolutely right but our university training teaches us that probably the truth is somewhere in between. The student has the privilege seeing behind, and evaluating, news to a greater extent than the average citizen of Canada. At the same time the student has the responsibility, and a frightening one today, of ensuring that the true story of world events is not submerged under the deluge of war propaganda now being disseminated in our press.

It would seem that the proposal to I.U.S. that the Russian students visit Canada is a saving idea in the curtained world of today. Perhaps if students were more vocal they could gain a more daring and courageous policy on the part of their representatives in international student organizations. Perhaps if students were more aware of their responsibilities they could prevent such slander as was exemplified by George Drew's rather unin structed attack on Professor Infeld in the daily newspapers last year.

It seems that the lines are hardening and the "One World" which Wendel Wilkie envisioned is fast becoming two worlds each of which suspects the other of having no motives worthy of respect. The inescapable result of such a policy is war. Surely it is the responsibility of the student to keep the lines open for the expression of all types of opinion. Surely the current catch-phrases have not outmoded "the truth shall make you free."

Enthusiasm And Indifference Await Princess And Duke

Nineteen of the thirty-five students polled yesterday by The Varsity said that they were coming to see the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Saturday morning. Three of the remaining sixteen were undecided, and the other thirteen had decided not to come for various reasons.

The majority of the group did not know where the student section was, although this has been printed three times in The Varsity. Only five knew definitely where it was.

Most of the students were coming because they wanted to see the Princess. Some were coming for sheer curiosity, others because they wanted to see the future Queen of England. A Czechoslovakian student who had only recently arrived in Canada felt that he would learn from the crowd how Canadians feel toward the royal family and Great Britain. A few of the women shyly confessed that they were coming to see Prince Philip. One student chortled quietly to himself, and said in a thick accent that he was not at liberty to give his reasons.

Most of those who had decided not to come were going home for the week-end or else had jobs. A few hardy individuals could not be bothered, and felt that the whole affair was over-rated.

Students will be able to watch the royal tour from the island between University College and Hart House. This area will be roped off and reserved for faculty and students. ATL cards will have to be presented.

No parking will be allowed on any Hart House, Queen's Park or Front Campus areas.

The fourteen-car royal caravan will drive under the Queen's Park underpass at 12 noon. The Princess and Prince will meet Chancellor Massey, President Smith and Warden Ignatieff before Hart House. Then they will proceed through Hart House quadrangle into the Great Hall, where they will sign the Hart House Guest Book and the University Golden Book.

They will leave Hart House by the east door and proceed by foot, weather permitting, to the Ontario Parliament Buildings.

Hart House will be cleared of students at 10 a.m. Saturday. Only those with special tickets will be allowed in after that time. The only persons allowed in the Great Hall will be members of the faculty and the SAC.

The University of Toronto, along with the rest of the city, will be brightened up for the coming visit of Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip. Above, the entrance to Hart House is being decorated with white and blue cloth. The royal couple will visit Hart House between 12:00 noon and 12:15 p.m. on Saturday and then proceed to the Parliament Buildings. A special area is to be reserved for students with Admit-To-Lecture cards on the "island" in front of Hart House. In view of the visit all labs and lectures will be cancelled Saturday morning.

Vindicate Skule's Existence In Year's First H H Debate

The chief function of a university is to integrate the accumulation of knowledge and its practical application said Dr. H. E. Van Wyck last night, in opposition to the resolution of the Hart House debate that "technical training for the professions has no place in the University." The resolution was defeated by a vote of 66 to 26.

University life is a stimulus to the professional student, said Dr. Van Wyck, which alone justifies the retention of technical training in a University, for the resulting benefits not only to the student, but also to the public. However, he added that the university too benefitted from contact with professional schools, as contact with those who seek information gives direction to the man who pursues wisdom.

C. W. J. Eliot, Grad., the first speaker supporting the resolution, charged that the necessary subjects of liberality and humanity are neglected by the technical faculties. He said that education for life is no longer taught at home, and that since we can no longer trust the primary and secondary education provided by the province, it is therefore the task of the university to train and educate people with a foundation of moral excellence, without which all education is baseless.

Eliot claimed that technical timetables are too full for arts subjects, which resulted in the production of assembly line machines instead of hand-made creations. He demanded that the assembly consider whether the university should set its seal of approval on those who know how to make a living, but not how to live.

A profession is equally a vocation for a philosopher or an engineer, claimed Robert Shepherd, Meds, the first speaker to oppose the resolution. The motives of a scientific profession, as distinct from a trade, are to engage in research and to deal with ideas and hypotheses, he said. Shepherd pointed out that while many doctors and engineers may use their professions as trades, equally as many "arts" students use their B.A.'s for commercial purposes, or their literary training to produce "best sellers."

The world is suffering from "galloping technological tuberculosis," charged Jim Peters, OCE, the second speaker defending the resolution. He charged that this had reached its final degree of degradation on this campus, where it was proposed to pay a professor of Science more than a professor of Philosophy, and where the Psychology Department is housed in "hand-me-downs" on St. George, while the Chemistry Department luxuriates in a "palace" on College Street. This, he said, was a sign of the times, when the University produced technicians instead of "the full man" with the habit of rational thinking and the love of truth—"the Ethical Man."

The second speaker against the resolution, Geoffrey Hyde, SPS, said that it would be impossible to ban technical subjects from the university, as this would defeat the basic purpose of the institution, and leave it a "tall, ivory tower of learning, with a narrow and insufficiently strong foundation."

Speaking from the floor in support of the motion, Elmer Sopha, Law, demanded the reconsideration of spiritual and moral truths before the extermination of mankind resulted from the materialistic viewpoint of this age.

Collect At Once Exchange Warns

The SAC Book Exchange will start making payments on books sold this year at one o'clock tomorrow. It has over $9,000 to dispose of, having handled over 1,100 customers since the exchange opened.

Payment will be made from one to five on the Thursdays and Fridays of this week only. The exchange will not be open after next Friday, and any money not collected will have to be picked up next year.

There is still a good selection of books at the exchange, and there is a heavy demand for many texts—The Government of Canada, Psycholovy and Life, Principles of Physics, and From Descartes to Kant, in particular. Exchange officials stress the importance of buying second term texts now. They have several shelves of History, Philosophy, Geography, and technical texts which will not be needed until after Christmas, but as the exchange will not be open then, they suggest that it is sensible to buy them now, while it is still possible to get secondhand editions.

The exchange officials are anxious to have students collect their money as soon as possible to avoid a last minute rush, and possible postponement of payment until next year.

Buy Bloops From B & W

The Blue and White Society will have girls selling bloops and ribbons around the stadium on Saturday afternoon, according to Publicity Director Hugh Niblock. The B and W would appreciate it if students bought from the girls and did not purchase ribbons from the hucksters. Niblock said that all profits from the sales go back to the student through the society's activities around the campus.

There will be no B and W dance in Hart House over the week-end because of the All-Varsity dance on Friday night and the Royal visit on Saturday. Niblock said that the only dance planned was a tea dance in the Drill Hall on St. George St. after the game. As far as is known there will be no rugby dances on Saturday night.

If...

... we had a Student Union Building, the proximity of the male and female sex on this campus might help to improve the standard of dress.

H. H. RULING

Woman Almost Man

Last night's Hart House debate was number 100 in the House's history. It was also the first time a woman has covered a Hart House debate.

Varsity reporter Denise Richards didn't find it too easy to get into the Debates Room, however. As soon as she entered the House door, the Night Duty Officer called an official halt to her progress. But after much discussion and an appeal to Debates officials, he abdicated with a remark, "No ladies are allowed in the House, but I guess it's O.K. for the press."

When Denise went into the Debates Room itself, there was even more trouble. Foot stamping and cries of "shame" echoed throughout the hall.

The first item of new business brought before the House was a motion by Elli Rubin, IV UC, that "the person at the press table" either be declared male or neuter, or be required to leave the House. Calls of "Don't be silly" answered him.

Finally the matter was quashed by Speaker John Morden, Wycliffe, who announced Denise could stay because "she was not here as an undergraduate member of the University but as an accredited representative of the press".

Dr. V. Meen, left, is seen with a companion at Chubb Crater in northern Quebec. Dr. Meen and his party from National Geographic Society and the Royal Ontario Museum found definite proof this summer that the crater is of meteoric origin. No fragments of the meteor have been found. An expedition to the crater last summer was only able to examine the rim and a small section of the surrounding territory. One of the lakes near the crater was named Museum Lake to honor the research work done by the museums of the world. Future work on the crater will be purely scientific and non-commercial.

CHUBB CRATER

Meteoric Proof

Dr. V. Ben Meen, director of the Royal Ontario Museum of Geology and Mineralogy, again this year led an experition to Chubb Crater, the world's largest known crater of meteoric origin. The joint National Geographic Society-Royal Ontario Museum Expedition found that the crater had a diameter of two miles and a maximum depth of 1,350 feet.

The expedition sought for nearly a month for proof of the crater's meteoric origin. In the final 48-hours before the flyaway on Aug. 22, the expedition's scientists discovered the presence of a "magnetic anomaly" under the eastern portion of the pushed-up crater rim.

A "magnetic anomaly," Dr. Meen explained, is a scientific term for a magnet-indicated underground metal-bearing mass. In the glacier-scoured, granitic region of the Chubb crater area, it constitutes proof of iron-bearing meteoritic material.

The demensions of Chubb crater are more than double those of the Canyon Diablo Crater, long accepted as the world's largest known depression due to a meteor crash. Unlike the Canyon Diablo Crater which is cut in comparatively soft sandstone and limestone, the Chubb Crater was blasted from hard granite rock.

The party worked under semi-winter conditions, with the August temperature staying in the 36-to-45 degree range. Heavy woollens and parkas were correct summer wear in the region. The only mammal seen was an Arctic fox. Birds included the American pipits, northern horned larks, snow buntings, terns, gulls, loons and geese. Trout, however, were abundant in the Crater lake and neighbouring bodies of water.

Chubb Crater, located on the map aove, was scientifically discovered a year ago last summer by Dr. V. B. Meen. Believed to be the largest meteoric crater in the world, it was blasted from hard granite rock.

UC Lit's Open Meeting To Discuss Budget

Several touchy events are on the agenda for the U.C. "open" Lit. meeting on Thursday, Oct. 11, according to Dave Rose, this year's President. One of these is the budget, which, because of the annual drop in enrollment, grows smaller and smaller, although the cost of the debates, follies, and receptions for which it pays does not similarly diminish. As well, it must be decided whether or not to subsidize the Music Club's aspirations to Opera this term, after the serious financial difficulties of last year.

Also planned are the nominations for the First Year President, Literary Director, Athletic Representative, and Secretary-Treasurer, as well as the Assistant Secretary-Treasurer and the Second Year President of the Lit. The elections for these offices will take place on Thursday, Oct. 18.

The new Honorary President D. A. Keith, Esq., M.B.E., a member of the Lit. in 1936, will be installed, and several addresses, including ones by the President of the Lit. and the S.A.C. representative will follow, and plans for the U.C. Follies will be formulated. Traditionally, the meeting is not expected to end before midnight.

Housing Shortage Bothers Queen's

Kingston—(CUP)—A Kingston rooming house shortage greeted Queen's-men as they returned to the campus this week. Many students returned to find that their landladies were no longer taking roomers because they "could no longer make it profitable." Others found their rooms rented to the wives of soldiers at the re-opened Barriefield camp.

Medical Students Ask Standard Training

Kingston (CUP)—The standardization of medical degrees throughout Canada will be the chief item of business at the 15th annual conference of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and interns (CAMSI) to be held on the Queen's campus, October 12th-13th.

Delegates from Canada's 11 medical schools, the representatives of the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Hospital Association, and the Canadian Intern Placement Service, will be attending the conference. Differences in the present educational and training requirements of Canadian medical schools will be discussed and some uniform method of instruction will be proposed whereby Canadian medical education can be standardized.

Bar No Holds At First Meet Liberals Plan

The University of Toronto Liberal club will start its political season with an organization meeting on Tuesday of next week. This first meeting will be held in the Junior Common Room in University College on Oct. 16th at 8.00 p.m.

The program for the evening will consist of movies and a discussion which it is hoped Campbell Calder will lead. Discussion topics for the evening will be: Price Controls VS Credit Controls, and Why be a Liberal? Said John Medcof, President of the Club, in commenting on the program for the night, "The Liberal Club intends to lay their cards on the table in a no-holds-barred discussion on Campus Politics."

This meeting is not restricted in any way, and freshmen are encouraged to come and see how campus political clubs operate, and take an active part in the discussion.

The Liberal Club also has a big program outlined for the rest of the year which includes Mock Parliament, Federal Cabinet Speakers, Forums, Discussion groups, luncheons and other social activities.

RYERSON INSTITUTE

Campus Community

Ryerson has a Student Union. Ryerson has no parking problem. Ryerson has approximately 2 men for every woman. The "Ryersonian" editorial rooms have nice new typewriters.

Here's the story of how the Ryerson Institute of Technology came into existence, and what makes it tick. During the post-war years, the government spent a small fortune on training equipment for rehabilitation purposes. The vets eventually left, and the problem arose about what to do with said equipment, still new and shiny, and very much up to date. Canada's expanding and understaffed industry saw possibilities. What about a school offering technological courses on a college level?

The idea clicked with the Department of Education, and before you could say "Ryerson Institute of Technology", it was born. It has grown fast — outgrown its campus at Church and Gerrard in fact. Institute authorities hope for a new locale someday, one which will offer a true college atmosphere.

In the meantime, Ryerson has plenty of spirit, and the same initiation shenanigans and inter-department feuds that exist at Varsity are very much in evidence. There's a football team, a debating club, an annual "Miss Ryerson" contest (for men) and something called a gladiator race.

There is little of the studied, ivy-covered academic atmosphere at Ryerson. There is instead an intense busyness about the place. The faculty is young — the athletic director is Ted Toogood, ex-Blues star. The library, common rooms and class rooms are informal, spacious and well lighted.

R.I.T. is practically a self-contained community. If a Ryerson co-ed suddenly finds herself matrimonially inclined (and the man is willing) she may have her ring, trousseau, home and furniture designed without leaving the campus. Meanwhile the food she eats in the school cafeteria will be planned and prepared by fellow students. The "Ryersonian", the student daily, is written and published on the campus. C.G.R.T., the Ryerson radio station has a listening radius of 100 miles, and by Christmas, T.V. will be in operation. Furniture in classrooms and offices was designed and made at the Institute.

Principal H. H. Kerr explains Ryerson's official educational status in this way. "Ryerson provides training for careers requiring 2 or 3 years instruction beyond high school. It is not simply a trade school. Many of our students are university graduates, and many more of them enter university after graduation from R.I.T. We are most happy to co-operate with Varsity in any way we can."

Connection has already been established in that Varsity students in Physical and Occupational Therapy, and Hygiene take some classes at the Institute. Closer connection may be established when Varsity freshies begin signing up for night classes in forward passing under the tutelage of that magnificent athletic director.

The Ryerson Institute of Technology has courses in almost everything that does not fit in a University. Here we see RIT band doing a little practicing in preparation for one or other of their frequent activities.

In a recent "Science Notes" column it was stated there are five thousand cases of leprosy in the world. This should have read five million.

US Shows Rise In Trade Course

The American Institute of Foreign Trade, Phoenix, Arizona, has announced that a total of 189 students have enrolled in their courses this year. This is an increase of eleven percent over last year and contrasts to the 11-percent decrease in enrollment in all other institutions of higher learning.

Fifty-three of these are enrolled in a course for training for a foreign career, and will graduate in February, 1952. The others will graduate next June, and will receive the degree of Bachelor of Foreign Trade.

The degree is offered to any who are holding a baccalaureate degree and who have successfully completed the basic AIFT course.

This Institute was founded in 1946 and made its initial emphasis in Central and South America. During the last two years area courses on Western Europe and the Far East were set up, and this year French was added to the course.

SCIENCE NOTES

Forest Inventory

By ORIE LOUCKS

A report was published in Ontario in 1945 known as the Kennedy Report. It discussed at great length the use and misuse of the Forest Industries of Ontario and their related subjects. Since then almost everyone in the province has been exposed, in one way or another, to this report, and has had to pass an opinion on it, or more particularly its results or lack of results as the case might be. We of the Science department would like to take this opportunity to clarify a few technicalities involved in one of the main recommendations.

Ontario has been leasing out its forests to the timber companies for nearly a century as if they were an inexhaustible quantity. As a result the report stressed that before the government could look after and supervise the operations of all the pulp and lumber companies in Ontario, they would have to know how much timber the province had to work with, where it was, and what it was like.

This resulted in the Forest Resources Inventory which is being carried out now. When started it was the largest forest inventory of its kind in the world. It attempted to find out the volume of timber in Ontario to within a few percent, exactly where it was, the different species that were there, and the condition it was in as regards age and health.

The whole area that was to be inventoried was photographed and large scale maps were made from them. Then Foresters took the photos to the bush, took down field data about the timber on small plots, and marked the spot on the photograph.

At the end of the summer, back in the office, the forest types encountered were outlined on the photographs and again maps were made. These maps showed the area of timber in which a certain species predominated, and what condition it was in as regards age and health.

Forest types that have the same quality of timber on them in one place, have the same quality of timber in another place miles away, if it looks the same from the aerial photographs of it. As a result the numerical data taken in one place can be applied to other areas which look the same but for which no data could be taken.

The information taken on the plots in the selected forest types is an exact tree count by their diameter, species and average height classes. From these figures volumes can be compiled for that area on a per acre basis, and the estimate arrived at can be applied to all the area which has been classed as the same forest type.

Over a period of five years the Forest Resources Inventory has covered nearly all of Ontario, and estimates have been made for nearly all forest types in the province. At the same time the areas of all the types that were tallied have been taken, and in about two more years the government will know along what lines they will have to reorganize their forest policies.

Now the government is able to tell, in general, how much timber a company should take from an area if they are cleaning it up properly. This results in closer supervision of all operations, and since the regulations regarding proper cutting practices and forest management are now in effect, the great waste of our natural forest resources will be brought into line as far as this small branch of it is concerned.

Correction On Correction

This is the third time we are trying this, and we're beginning to feel pretty foolish.

Tuesday an announcement said classes would be cancelled on the morning of Oct. 12 for the Royal Visit. This was wrong, so we printed a correction with the date as Oct. 13. Then the printers came into the picture, and changed the date to Oct. 3.

This time we hope it comes out right. LECTURES WILL BE CANCELLED THE MORNING OF OCT. 13 (THIRTEEN).

Our thanks to Toike Oike for pointing out our error.

HORSEMEAT! Mmm!

Each year, this parade, designed to foster "esprit de corps" between the various faculties of the French-speaking university, winds its way through the French-speaking section of the city.

SPIDER BUSINESS

A Fantasy – Tragedy

Last August when the announcement was made that Her Royal Highness, Princess Elizabeth would visit the University of Toronto campus, people all over the Dominion began to prepare for her arrival, and so too did some of our animals.

Living in the tower of Hart House, is a small spider who has never been known to do anything remarkable, in fact no one has ever known of him before. And he did so want to do something important with his life. When he heard that the princess was coming to his very own home, he decided to do something very special for her.

He planned to have by the time she arrived an enormous web stretching across all the tower windows in Hart House. This wouldn't be an ordinary spider web . . . it would be a filmy fragment of gossamer filled with the scent of Canadian autumn, which the sun's rays would touch turning all the silken threads into glistening bits of amethyst, sapphire and aquamarine . . . truly a sight for a royal princess.

The flimsy gauze was not only to be a bauble to delight and amuse the princess, it was to be a symbol of all the higher hopes, the ideals and aspirations of all the students who pass under the tower. For the spider has been living in Hart House for some time watching those about him and sharing their college life. Now the time has come for him to give his contribution to Varsity.

So he enlisted the aid of some of his friends. He talked with the mouse from Hart House pantry who agreed to gnaw the moulding of the window sashes in order that the spider might have a firm foundation upon which to begin the masterpiece, and he talked with the pigeons on Hart House roof, and they agreed to aid him in protecting the web. And so the work was begun.

Many times his labours were undone by the winds and the rain, but early this week the piece of art was almost finished. Oh, you couldn't see it from the ground yet because the sun's fingers had not yet painted in the final touches, but the spider was very pleased, and the princess too would be when she saw it.

And then came tragedy. From the president down to the cleaning staff, the rest of the university was preparing for the visit too. And in their zeal the cleaning staff swept away all the work of a whole month on the part of the spider and his friends, the mouse and the pigeons. All their hopes of delighting an almost "fairy" princess were swept away with a few sweeps of the broom.

Now the spider knew of the days of labour which others were putting into the fifteen-minute royal visit. If the hours were added together they would make a life-time of preparation, but he had so wanted to show the princess something rare and wonderful from his university . . . something besides bunting and buildings.

With only two days remaining before the visit he has again begun work on the exquisite web, but it is doubtful whether the damage will be repaired in time. Perhaps our Titian spider will never fulfill his dream of presenting his [illegible] cate fabric for a future queen's pleasure.

EMBRYO MP'S

Fee Planks

November 15 is D-day for the political clubs on the campus. A new system of election will be tried whereby a campus-wide election will be held to see which party is to be put in power at the mock parliament. There will be no constituencies and all students are eligible to vote. Although this plan is new at the University of Toronto it is a tried and proven method at many universities, including those in Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

"Two forums will be held in advance of the election plus a violent epidemic of soap-box oratory, in addition to the usual pub-pumping associated with a campus political campaign", stated J. Medcof, president of the Liberal Club.

This year there is a tentative plan to hold Mock Parliament in the Legislature. Mock Parliament, always a featured event of campus politics will be convened twice, once in December and once in January. In the past it has been along debating lines and restricted to the campus buildings with the exception of two years ago when the speaker of the Ontario Legislature banned a discussion of the Charitable Gifts Act and the Liberal Government resigned. This year, however, the sessions will be run on more parlimentary lines with the added prestige of using the Legislature.

At the first meeting of the Liberal club on Oct. 16 the guest speaker will be Campbell Calder, MPP for London. There will be a group discussion to set the club policy for the year. Topics will be Liberalism, and Price Controls vs. Credit Controls for which they expect to come under fire from the campus. The latter problem will be thrashed out among the members at the meeting so they may take a unified stand on the problem and defend their view in Mock Parliament.

The fees question is going to be a popular platform during the coming elections and both the LPP and CCF parties are concerned with it. "The low income group is being hit hardest of all due to the way in which Mr. Abbott is attempting to control inflation," said W. Parker, of the CCF club, "We are concerned with hope of finding greater opportunity for advanced education for members of lower income groups." The CCF club would protect lower income groups, express opposition, and offer the CCF policy of price controls and control of profits, added Parker.

"We believe," said Marg O'Kell of the LLP club, "in fighting to preserve peace, and working with students for economic needs — lower fees, lower - priced books, more scholarships and bursaries." At the beginning of the term a conference was held at which a statement was drawn up to the fees question to arouse interest on the part of all students.

The Macdonald-Cartier club intends to participate in the coming elections and urges students interested in the Progressive Conservative party to come to their meetings.

The coming elections should be heavily polled in view of the preparations being made by the four political clubs on the campus. The party securing 40% of the votes will obtain 40% of the seats available in the 90-seat Legislature.

Plans & Aims Of EAC Told At WUA Meet

The plans and aims of the External Affairs committee were set forth yesterday afternoon at the WUA meeting by Joan Present, III UC. The External Affairs Committee is a local amalgamation of ISS and NFCUS.

EAC will work this year to broaden the scope of exchange scholarships and to prepare a booklet on university costs, texts, and academic standards to be distributed to all Ontario high schools. If it is successful EAC hopes next year to publish this information for all Canadian students.

The student Faculty Committee of EAC hopes to arrange a Caledon week-end with OAC, AVA and McMaster, also exchange week-ends with American colleges to further student understanding.

An Austrian good-will tour is planned for sometime this winter, and a Host Committee will be set up to welcome foreign and exchange students to the campus.

EAC will attempt to furnish travel information concerning work-camps in Europe, and Canadian Youth Hostels.

Nominations for WUA Secretary and First Year President were accepted, with their election this Friday.

Parking Space Big Problem At McGill U.

Montreal (CUP) — Sixty-five students have already applied for a bare twenty-five parking spaces allotted to student vehicles by McGill University. And there is still a week left to apply for the spaces.

The business of sorting out who are the deserving from the non-deserving falls on Ralph Shackell, secretary-treasurer of the Students' Society. He will decide on the basis of distance of the students from the campus, number of students carried to McGill in the car, and any physical disability requiring his service.

Located close to the downtown section of the city with its main entrance on one of the busiest thoroughfares, McGill has a perennial parking problem.

The University is looking for a larger parking lot, near the campus but so far it has been unable to come up with one.

CUTE L'IL HOME ECCER

She was five-foot-two and she had the cutest hazel eyes — the big, und, dewy type that, coupled with her warm smile, immediately attract young fellow with red blood in his veins. She had soft auburn hair and certain freshness about her. She was wearing bobby sox, saddle shoes, skirt and sweater.

A mutual acquaintance introduced us.

"You're a Sammy, aren't you?" were the first words she spoke to us.

We nodded, pressing on with "What are you taking . . . ?"

"Do you know Norval Brown?" she interrupted.

"Why, yes, very well."

"He's a Zate." With this we detected the slightest trace of a far-away ok in her big brown eyes.

"That's right. What did you say you were taking?"

"Home Ec. I'm going into second year. I just can't wait to get back school. I didn't make my average last year, but I will this year. Then l be able to pledge. I haven't quite decided which sorority I like best, t . . ."

"Home Economics is a good course," we tried to change the subject. at Reid was just telling me how much she enjoyed the practice house nd . . ."

"Pat was president of Zeta Tau Alpha last year!"

"Do you intend to take part in any extra-curricular activities this ea — I mean besides your sorority, if you make your average?" we eried.

"Well, I don't really know. Haven't thought much about it. I was oing to try out for cheerleader. Iveagh Foreman's in charge. She's a . . ."

"So I've heard. Well, cheerleading is very good if you like to get up front of people and make everybody follow your lead," every ounce paternalism we could muster came forth in one fell swoop.

"I think it would be awfully exciting. Frank Muldoon — he's a Sig — ays talking about how much he admires cheerleaders."

We cringed.

And so the conversation went. Nobody's name could be mentioned ithout our wide-eyed friend identified him or her by Greek calling.

Finally we couldn't take it any longer.

"Say, do you know Dwight D. Eisenhower?" we blurted out.

"No, I don't think I do," she replied pensively, a wrinkle appearing n her hitherto unfurrowed brow.

"Kappa Rho Gamma," we shot back.

"Oh, do they have those at Manitoba?"

Will Feature UC Tradition In Ceremony

The highlight of the U.C. Soph-Frosh on October 15 will be a traditional ceremony. This is "the passing of the Torch" from Sophs to Freshmen, which dates back almost as far as the College itself. Although originally an initiation, it is now an impressive custom, and marks the official acceptance of the first year into the College. The evening will open at 7 o'clock with a dinner in the West Hall, and will include dancing to the orchestra of Jack Denton.

NOTICE!

The Atkinson Charitable Foundation Bursary

Students in years other than the first may make application at the office of the University Registrar, Simcoe Hall. Applicants must be permanent residents of Ontario. The bursaries are to be awarded to students "on the basis of merit and need; academic sincerity and future promise of the candidate to be as much a factor as shortage of funds".

Application should be made before October 20th.

New Bond Campaign Will Stress Defence

"Defence" is the theme which is being stressed throughout the Campaign for Canada Savings Bonds Sixth Series which commences on October 15th, 1951.

Canada, in common with other nations of the free world, is re-arming to meet the threats to her freedom. An increasing share of our national production is being used for this purpose. A year ago about two per cent of our total output was appropriated for defence purposes. By the end of this fiscal year it is anticipated that approximately ten per cent of Canada's total production will be utilized for our re-armament and defence programme.

Under these circumstances, it is essential to provide a large proportion of the requirements for these increases for defence expenditures from the sale of Canada Savings Bonds.

Sidney Smith, President.

Sad News For Intermeds Pinkney And Kimoff Out Visit London Saturday

With the Intermediate Intercollegiate football season set to open at Western on Friday, the Baby Blues so far seem to be an unknown quantity. Their one exhibition game, which they lost 4-1 to the Cobourg Galloping Ghosts, didn't prove too much due to the poor weather and to the fact that the Blue and White didn't really begin to click until the second half. Once they did get started they showed a strong offense, missing a touchdown by a mere foot.

The spectre of injuries, which seems to haunt the Seniors, has reared its unwelcome head in the Intermeds camp already, claiming star back Bob Pinkney for the rest of the season with a fractured arm. The other main casualty is first year man Bob Kimoff who has a bad knee.

Several members of last year's team have graduated to the Big Blues, notably back Bill McFarlane, who is playing some good ball for the firsts. Olie Mandryk, Hank Tamowski, Ray Yakasovitch, and Bob Leeming are others who have moved up. Harry Hyde and Johnny Adams were called up a couple of days ago to fill some of the spots left by injured players.

Holdovers from the 1950 team include speedy Don Fawcett at half and Gerry Fitzhenry at quarter. The former dashed off the 100 in 10.4 in the Jr. track meet — if he can duplicate that speed on the gridiron he'll be all right. Earl Ford returns at fullback, Bob Milne at end, Al George at tackle, and Jim Murray at tackle.

Some good-looking newcomers have come up to offset the loss of players to the Seniors, but two of them, the aforementioned Pinkney and Kimoff, are out of action right now. Kimoff, however, is expected to be back in harness soon. These two players came from championship teams last season, Pinkney from TSSAA winner Humberside and Kimoff from the TDIAA champs, East York Goliaths. Halfback Doug Geekie from Salt Fleet has shown well, as has end Gene Chorestecki, brother of Johnny, former Blue star.

Ends Ted Lansky and Danny Nelson from the Red Feather winner St. Catharines, show some promise along with back Eddie Ksiazek, up from Hamilton Delta.

Although the team will undoubtedly feel the loss of Pinkney, they should be able to hold their own with the rest of the league. The game with the Colts Friday will put them to the test.

PHE II VS. ST. HILDA'S

While the Yankees and the Giants are having a battle of the bats down in New York, the baseball enthusiasts of St. Hilda's and PHE fought it out behind Trinity yesterday. As it turned out the Trinity girls swamped the Phizz-Edders by a score of 22-5.

The game lasted only one and one-half innings, but during their one trip to bat, the St. Hilda's girls managed to bring in their 22 runs before PHE could take over. The Phizz-Edders fought hard but the lack of a short stop was a set-back and they could do nothing against the onslaught of the opponents.

Wonder who will tackle St. Hilda's next?

MEDS V VS. ST. HILDA'S

Sparked by the superlative pitching of Irene Hain, Meds V took a 2-1 decision from St. Hilda's II yesterday. Hain also hit a triple. Sallie Sarles provided the two runs for Meds with a home run that scored a teammate on base as well as herself. Nancy Allen pitched a nice game for St. Hilda's.

TENNIS

The Women's Interfaculty Tennis Tournament gets under way today on the Trinity courts. The winners will represent Toronto in the Intercollegiate meet at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club on Oct. 19th and 20th.

Blue Soccerites Travel To Guelph

Tomorrow, both senior and intermediate soccer teams travel to Guelph to open the Intercollegiate soccer season against O.A.C.

For the Senior Blues, it will mark the beginning of the new Intercollegiate Soccer League set-up, having Western, O.A.C., and Toronto in the western division, and R.M.C., McGill, and Toronto in the eastern division.

The Blues will have to be up for this game as Varsity has not been able to bring home a win from Guelph in the last two years, though they have amply made up for it in their home games, beating the Aggies 10-1 in 1949, and 7-1 in 1950.

O.A.C. normally field a strong team, whose tactics are usually rough and ready. In the past it has taken the Blues a little time to get used to their kick and run tactics and to settle down to their own pattern of play. However this years Blues appear to have a strong defence, and also a fast skilful front line which should give the Aggies plenty of trouble.

The Intermediate League contains Western, O.A.C., McMaster, and Toronto, and the Little Blues will be out to win the championship again. So far this year the Intermediates are a question mark with only Bill Rundle, Dave Johnston, and Ted Kersey remaining from last year's team. Promising interfaculty players such as Mat Derzai, and Doug Quirk have come up to fill the holes and a strong team should result.

STAFF MEETING

There will be an important meeting of all women sports writers in The Varsity news office this coming Friday at 1:00 p.m. All those who will be unable to attend are asked to get in touch with the Sports Editor or leave a note in the news office before the meeting.

Oops! Dropped It

Forestry made history on November 29th last year when they crushed Trinity 24-4 and annexed their initial Mulock Cup, symbolic of Interfaculty Football supremacy.

Graduation Thins Forestry Ranks Interfac Champs Toss-Up in '51

Last year's Mulock Cup champions, the Faculty of Forestry, are, from all reports, far from the equal of last year's team. According to informed sources this Fall's team is going to miss the help of a lot of old-timers who have graduated, since last season.

One of the most important of these holes is the position of quarterback which was handled last year by Syd Sheldon. This year's team has lined up two new quarters, both of whom are fairly good, but need considerable experience. These are Bill Earle of third year, and Teddy Taylor from first.

There are several others who have come in from first year, and are replacing the gaps created by the loss of stalwarts like Austin, Collict and Masterson, but like the others they will need a lot more experience before they are the team that Forestry had last year.

Running the show again this year is Gord Whitcombe, who played and coached them to the title last year. Despite serious losses on the team, Gord thinks that with enough training he may get another good squad again this year. Also helping in getting the team together in Bill Earle, quarterback, who played football for Cornwall in his highschool days. Bill is now coming to the fore in his third year.

Some of the stalwarts of year are back however, and sh be a good influence on the players that are coming in. T include stars like Magnus, held down a strong position the line, and Booth who tur in a good job in the backfield.

Several other players who serve some credit for their year's performance, and who expected to do as well this ye are Burgar and White II year Beatty of IVth. All in all th seems to be the makings of a team but it will take a lot m work.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Bob Masterson said a week or so ago, after the M Master game, that on his teams "nobody gets hurt but best". He should have saved his little gem for this we Last week was just the first wave of injuries.

There are a few serious injuries like White, Bird, a Roberts (maybe), out for the season, and Mandryk, Ru ball, and Colizza, who should be back in another week, b most of the guys are suffering from minor hurts and a ments, a lot of them strains and bruises they have be carrying since training camp last month and that ju refuse to heal. Al Haig has a bruise on his foot that pai him whenever he kicks, Oneschuk has a painful should muscle, Bewley still is troubled by the shoulder he hurt the McMaster game, etc., etc.

As a result, Harry Hyde and John Adams, who we sent down to the intermediates last week, have come ba without even getting a chance to get acquainted. Hy will replace Roberts if the medicals Jack is taking pro unfavourable, and Adams will play right half if Bewley unable to play.

White's injury leaves Alex Lawson the only man wh can play quarterback. Bob may yet bring someone up fro the intermediates to spell Lawson, but so far he hasn't deci ed to. Which is quite all right with J. Kennedy & Co., suppose. After all, he needs a quarterback too. But if thin keep up the way they've been going, the Intermediates w be a checking room for Blue replacements, just as in oth years.

Andy O'Brien has a priceless quote in the weekend T to the efect that "Canadian colleges have stuck to a code th has prevented building up (football) to the super-spectac —mainly due to the unrelenting policy of McGill in opposi the least deviation that might tend to place brawn befo brain in college." Maybe McGill's dull prospects for th season are a result of "de-emphasis". Are Tomlinso Mitchener, etc., the last of the Loan Rangers? McGill is t only college that actually admitted, giving athletic a (through alumnae loans, of course).

A Weekend With Sturman

By JACK STURMAN

A nicer, friendlier town than Montreal we don't think you'll ever find. Personally we enjoyed every dollar of our stay there.

To start things off on a buddy-buddy basis the McGill Redmen became our "cousins" and blew a 7-0 half time lead allowing the Varsities to cash in on 15 points with nary a reply from them. Now that was real sweet.

But those Montreal hotels . . . they're so nice to incoming tourists. You ask for a room and bath and a glib-tongued room clerk tells you in fractured English, "The room I'll give you, but the bath you'll have to take yourself." You finally wind up with a room that is so small all you can dream about are midgets. For this you pay ten dollars a nite but when the manager isn't looking, you sneak twenty other fellows ??? into the cubicle to defray the cost. It's simply a case of paying good dollars for poor quarters.

And how about those adorable Montreal girls. To say that they are friendly would be the understatement of the year. One fellow we know was walking back to the Mount Royal after the game when a breath-taking young doll rushes up and embraces him. He though it was a miracle wrought through the use of Voids. Well sir, this doll squeezes a piece of note paper into his hand, kisses him again and then disappears. The note read, "I am madly in love with you. I cannot live a moment without you. Come to room 6099 in the Mt. Royal at midnite tonite."

Comes midnite and our friend goes to room 6099. He takes another look at the note and notices that it is mimeographed and addressed "To Whom It May Concern". Anyway, he got lost in the line-up and decided to forget about the whole thing.

The nite-life in Montreal is really keen. We visited one spot on St. Catherines St., where we recognized familiar Varsity visages. Some of them had traffic-light complexions — red eyes and a green face. But there was one inebriated heckler in the crowd who was making the M.C.'s life miserable. Finally the M.C. could take no more from this drunk and sarcasmed, "Don't mind him, he got drunk on Scotch Tape." So we left.

Our date for the week-end was a shy girl. She liked her men tall, dark and handcuffed. It was all due to her parents. They were very strict with her. She wasn't allowed to go out with boys until she was three.

But the moral of this whole little story is still that wise old saying, viz, "a fool and his money get a lot of attention from the head waiter."

Candlelight and Skits Initiate UC Freshies

U.C. Freshies were initiated ednesday night, both formally th a candlelight ceremony, and ually with a series of skits. these skits, several Freshie uads combined genius and cos- mes, shelved their dignity for at part of the night, and pro- ced a show worthy of almost y "critical" audience.

Highlights of the 'dramatic' tal- t included mock radio broad- sts, original songs, and Freshie pressions of campus life, with special mention for the travesty on Young Lochinvar, and a novel March of Time depicting Man through the ages.

Passing from the ridiculous to the serious, the Seniors then in- itiated the Freshies with their traditional candlelight service. In it, each was reminded of her own share in upholding the honour and principles of U.C.—the college she chose to represent. With this im- pressive note the responsibilities of college life were invested in each aspiring Senior of '55.

Lacrosse Starts Short of Players Only Two Return

Canada's oldest game, the one that the Indians made famous gets underway on campus next Mon- day. The Interfaculty Lacrosse loop will swing into action then, but at the moment all teams are in urgent need of men who can wield the stringed stick.

The plight of the U.C. squad is one of the sadder stories in the loop. The Redmen had only two men out to practice.

Laws Leave Study Only Pastime

Reprinted From
The Daily Californian

There is a dark side to every golden cloud — in the spirit of which reversible adage the editorial writer of the Times pens the fol- lowing:

"The Town Council of Berkeley has passed to print an ordinance prohibiting gambling by cards, dice or other games. A tidal wave of morality seems to have lashed it- self furiously against the walls of the University town.

"A state law prohibits the sale of liquor within a mile of the Univer- sity buildings; the faculty of the University, at the insistence of the coeds who are interlopers anyway, has issued an edict prohibiting the smoking of pipes and cigarettes by the students; a fastidious press, animated by motives that pass for moral ideas, has protested against 'midnight orgies' in the Academic groves; other elements are en- deavoring to deprive the students of the innocent pastime of badger baiting; and now comes a stiff- necked generation of town trustees to set the seal of disfavor on gambling.

"What pleasure, recreation, hilar- ity, may the overworked student indulge in? Wherein may he seek surcease from the arduous effort to conjugate a Greek verb or dis- entangle himself from the maze of Roman dates and medieval history? The coeds decline to flirt — they are too serious, too earnest in their aspirations for that; lawn tennis is insipid; croquet is out of fashion; baseball is too rough; football is dangerous and other forms of sport and amusement are unsuited to the University environment. We are afraid that the student will have to study." Berkeley Daily Herald, Oct. 5, 1892.

BOB-REVUE

Old Faces, New Faces

Enthusiasm. That's the feeling of ver two hundred Victoria College ndergrads taking part in the Bob evue, the biggest turnout for the ow in years.

The show will contain a lot of amiliar faces —names that are emembered from last year's hows. Frances MacDonald, who sed to sing with the Bell Singers, the musical directress; George cCowan, star of numerous Hart ouse productions and last year's ic Drama Club's "Thunder Rock", handling skits; the skits of icky Arnold and Walt Stewart are till remembered from former hows and the Bob Revue promises o have more and better ones for he audience.

Anderson, who has studied with the Volkoff Ballet, is one of the dancing directors. Four of the dancers in the chorus were in the Jimmy Durante Show at the Exhi- bition and who of us would dispute that Mr. Durante has an eye for feminine pulchritude? Umbriago!

Vic shows have a name for start- ing songs that end up as college classics. The Subway Song, the To- ronto Song, and even the Persian Kitten — these are all children of Vic productions. This year there is going to be a new one to join the legion of tunes that have been written about the K.C.R., if you'll pardon the expression. The direc- tors of the show think that is one of the cleverest parodies written in years. If the most famous pub on the continent needs any more publicity, it's got it.

Besides the big names and the songs, there is the host of fresh- men and first-timers who are bringing to the show their energy, talent and all that enthusiasm mentioned before. These kids are making costumes and building sets — by the way, the sets are going to make the Art College green with envy.

Victoria is watching the results of this year's show. It will be the first time the traditional Bob, originally an initiation for fresh- men, has been amalgamated with the Scarlet and Gold, Vic's musical revue. November 5, 6, and 7 pro- mise to be world-shaking days — can a college tradition which was intended for an all-male college back in 1880 be revised to fit into our modern co-ed university? Should traditions be shelved when they have out-lived the age for which they were intended or can they be adapted to fit the new age? That's the question and Victoria will have to wait for the answer.

Mass Standards

While it may seem like nothing more than the proverbial teapot tempest, we have watched with increasing interest expressions of opinion on the recent "regulations" regarding dress in Hart House.

In the columns to the right today Hart House Warden Ignatieff has posed some of the larger issues he sees involved in the dispute. It is true that there are certainly larger issues; we do not feel that the meat of the matter has yet been reached.

Indeed, while we agree with the analysis that the Warden has presented of the situation, we can not look on this latest edict of the Board of Stewards as anything less than an unjustifiable assault on some of the basic rights of the individual in a democratic society.

We are certainly concerned with education in this University. And it may even be true that the University is doing the proper thing when it undertakes to educate the whole man, to look after his manners as well as his mind. Yet the key to education, as we understand it, lies not so much in legislation as the Board of Stewards have assumed, but rather in leadership and example.

You do not tell a man what to think in a university, you point out ways of thinking. And by the same token, you do not tell a man what to wear, but point out ways that clothes can be worn.

There is a tendency in the democratic world to involve the individual to a greater and greater degree in mass standards — of thought, of taste and of action. There are those who apparently feel that an elected body has the right to legislate on just about anything that comes into its collective head. We doubt that such is the case.

It seems wiser to maintain the point of view that elected bodies should keep legislation to the barest minimum, and that while they may lead as best they can in certain fields there are places where they simply do not have the right to lay down the law. Over and beyond this, no elected body should ever feel that it has the right to take unto itself functions which the majority of those to whom it is responsible feel are outside the sphere of its jurisdiction, no matter how "right" the cause.

Hart House is built on democratic lines. Most of the time it manages to exercise its legislative functions with regard to its activities in the spirit of the democratic tradition. Yet in this case we feel that it has undertaken to regulate too much of the individual man.

Though the Stewards, and this paper, may deplore the current standards of dress which appeal to many undergraduates, it seems the height of high-handed autocracy to say that those undergraduates shall or shall not wear this or that kind of clothing. It is almost as bad as the Federal government trying to tell the men of this country that they shall make love in such and such a way, or that sweets, for the good of the general health, will only be eaten on Tuesday.

Mass standards do not appeal to free men. It does not matter whether those standards are political, religious, social or ethical — they must all of them be judged in the same court.

The Stewards, in attempting to place the mass tie that binds around the mass male undergraduate neck have not only overstepped their responsibility, but have violated one of the basic principles of the men they represent.

A Wider Issue

Responsible Standards

Editor, The Varsity:

I read with interest in your columns that the Foresters' Club had discussed dress regulations in Hart House and had voted 8 to 1 against the imposition of any standard of dress among students using Hart House.

As this raises a number of wider issues for the University you may consider it worthwhile to continue the discussion a little further.

The question is just how far could or should a University consult majority student opinion in ordering its affairs? I often hear the phrase: "most of the students want" or "most of the students think."

Here is one instance when somebody took the trouble of discussing an issue and arrived at a majority opinion by means of a vote.

Suppose it represents the opinion of most of the studentsstudents of the University, should the administration of Hart House accept this as mandatory and act accordingly?

The University, which is so important a part of Democratic Society, obviously cannot be wholly authoritarian in its methods. But just how far should Democracy go and how exercised?

On the academic side there are some fairly obvious limitations. If student majority opinion was to be the criterion of academic courses and requirements one would probably find most lectures and the examination system done away with — perhaps not a bad change but one which students would find difficulty in foisting on our legislators. It is also probable that the exacting courses and the precise such as calculus, the classics and technological theory would give way to the easy, popular and vague — such as courses with a practical flavour, psychology and sex. This is not underestimating student intelligence — it is just human nature in the process of undisciplined self-expression.

Surely the whole process of education is largely that of acquiring discipline. It is the process whereby a confusion of latent impulses, aspirations, appetites and ideas are brought into some sort of order through discipline — self-discipline achieved by the constant inter-action or tension between the student and the teacher. It should not be a one-way process.

When it comes to extra-curricular activities the picture is somewhat different. In many European universities the administration ends its responsibilities with the classroom and the students organize their own extra-curricular life. There is something to be said for this as a method of developing student initiative.

In North America the University is concerned with educating the whole man or woman and considers extra-curricular life as part of that education.

In this University, as in most others on t continent, student extra-curricular activities provided for and regulated by the University. T process of education for Democracy is a conscie and controlled process and as such is subject discipline. The discipline is not entirely impo from above but one which is developed throu the inter-action of students and administrators

Hart House, as part of this system, happens be one of the most Democratic institutions of kind on this continent. By Constitution, t Warden is not an autocrat. He is merely Chairm of the Board of Stewards, which is the governi body of the House and on which undergradua are in the majority.

As in all well-ordered Democratic society exercise of authority is channelled through t elected representatives of the people. The stude members of the Board of Stewards are elect Secretaries of the major committees, with usua a year's experience on the committees of the Hou A representative of the Students' Administrati Council sits on the Board. The whole male unde graduate body of the University is free to exerci its suffrage — undergraduate suffrage — at Ha House elections each spring.

It is the Board of Stewards who have come view with increasing disfavour the growing slo piness of some of the students using the Hou and have felt that this attitude is not in keepi with the dignity of the House or University.

When one sees some students come to eat in t Great Hall with their overcoats on or sit at tab with a bloop on the back of their heads, or sle full-length in the Common Rooms, one wonde whether the University does not owe somethi in the matter of teaching manners which, aft all, is only part of the education in standard values, propriety and consideration for others. Th happens to be the view of the Stewards who, true representatives of the people, are concern with doing what they consider is right and n merely with what is popular.

If anything is done about dress in Hart Hou it will be done on authority of the Stewards a not through the whims of the Warden.

The proper expression of student opinion through the exercise of their suffrage and accep ance of the responsibilities which this involves.

Democracy cannot properly function throu opinion polls or frequent referenda. That way H paralysis of government and the triumph of t lowest common denominator with consequer lowering of all standards. Democracy demand intelligent leadership and a sense of responsibili which requires effort, vigilance and discipline o the part of the people.

N. Ignatieff,
Warden, Hart House.

Why Universities ?

Editor, The Varsity:

The other day I had an appointment with a doctor in the Medical Arts Building with whom I had not had any connection before. Among other things he asked me how I liked University. I told him I liked it very much and that the only thing I could wish for was that some of the professors were better speakers. He agreed with my point and transferred it to his own profession. "We have too many doctors who know very little about medicine, but they have a large clientele because they know how to talk to people and tell them what they like to hear," he said, then continued, "there are doctors here I simply refuse to be together with, and I leave the room if they enter."

I was startled at his last statement; however, it was not until I read in the newspaper the next day that a prominent Canadian Dr. Hugh Keenleyside had refused to shake hands with Dr. Hjalman Schacht ond called the latter "a disgrace to the human race and a despicable scoundrel", that I began to think over the medical doctor's words.

Many thoughts went through my mind — these men have received what most people would call a high education, but is it true education when such men have not learned to live with their fellow men? Why do we go to university? Is it merely to learn how to make more money, or to get more power than the other fellow, or is there a higher goal? Maybe these men are exceptions, but they make me wonder whether we are really progressing in spite of atom bombs.

Contest Needed

Editor, The Varsity:

During the past week a squib has appeared each day in The Varsity. These squibs have dealt with the inconveniences resulting from the absence of a Student Union Building. The Varsity apparently feels a Student Union Building is indispensable. Why does it not promote a contest, therefore, on means of obtaining such a building?

As a first suggestion in such a contest I offer the method used at the City College of New York. The students of this university want a two million dollar Student Union Building. To obtain this sum they are engaged in a continuing series of money raising efforts. Among the money raising efforts are dances, carnivals, athletic events, and requests for contributions. In this manner over a million dollars has been obtained.

In the same manner, I believe the money for a Student Union Building could be obtained at the University of Toronto. Of course it would take some years to get the required sum. The need for a Student Union Building at the University of Toronto will however exist in the future as it does now.

Lawrence A. Weller,
Grad. Studies.

Lit Criticism Of UC Music Curtails Club

The operations of the University College Music Club last year were severely criticized at last night's meeting of the UC Literary and Athletic Society. Literary Director Al Strauss said that the operations of the Music Club would have to be greatly curtailed this year after the extravagances of last year's club executive. Graham Jackson, 1st vice-president of the club, said that this year "The Chimes of Normandy", a non-royalty play, would be produced by the club, if the production of an operetta was acceptable to the Lit.

D. A. Keith, a UC Lit executive member during 1930-31 and a Toronto lawyer, took the chair as honorary president for the coming year to replace Mr. Justice J. L. Wilson. Prof. Bagnani was asked to act as censor for the UC Follies, after his questioning as to who would perform that "delightful" task.

Lit director Strauss reported that the editor of the Undergraduate would be K. P. Jarvis, IV UC, and that the first of two issues would appear before Christmas. Strauss said that the snack bar in the Junior Common Room would be stocked with official UC insignias and that cardigans and beer mugs were also planned for sale to the students. Entry lists for the Robinette Debates will be posted soon.

Several recent graduates dominated the discussion from the floor. R. B. Dnieper asked if an editor had been sought for The Varsity following the resignation of editor Jack Gray. Chuck Hanley, Students' Administrative council representative, said that ads had been placed in The Varsity and that the SAC Publications Committee had been charged with finding an editor. Hanley included a definition of "intellectual integrity" in his report on Dnieper's request: "the ability to pass the examinations in May." Hanley said that all employees and persons acting in an official capacity for the SAC possessed" intellectual integrity."

Dr. John Dow At Convocation Addresses Vic

The "Truth that makes men free" is the knowledge that comes from Christian experience, concluded Dr. Dow, addressing the Victoria College Convocation of Arts last night. Reverend John Dow, professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis in Emmanuel College spoke to a large audience of Victoria College professors, students, alumni, and graduating students in Victoria chapel.

Knowledge derived from learning may lead to truth and reality, he said, but it often ends in "shallowness, arrogance, and infidelity."

Regarding knowledge, "we must feel like pebbles on the shore of an immeasurable ocean," he said. But, he decided, "you don't touch reality until you hear the song from the other shore." With this, Dr. Dow indicated that the Christian experience is essential to finding Truth, and concluded with the Biblical suggestion: "Except ye become as little children, ye cannot enter the Kingdom of God."

Following the address, Registrar M. St. A. Woodside awarded the scholarships. Professor Woodside said that he would be excused from flippancy in presenting the prizes, since flippancy derives from true pride. "A chamist reports that soft soap is 90 per cent lye," he added.

Bookstore Strongbox Is Robbed

Thieves broke into the University Press Bookstore Wednesday night and cracked open a strongbox containing an undetermined amount of money.

Press officials have refused to give an estimate of the amount of money stolen. Manager Alex Rankin said yesterday it was "not a considerable sum; not worth the effort"; downtown papers ranged in their report from $2,000 to $5,000.

The cracked strongbox was discovered by night watchman Harry Hamilton, about 1:30 a.m. yesterday morning. The door had been forced by stolen railway bars.

Police suspect at least three men took part in the robbery; two to force the safe and one as lookout. The men jimmied one of the small windows on the north side of the building, and entered through it by standing on one another's shoulders.

They then moved the safe into the back room and smashed it open. In their flight they left behind their tools, described as railroad tools six to seven feet long.

Police think the robbery was a professional job; it showed too much planning and too much knowledge of bookstore hours to be an amateur job.

The Tour

12:00—Noon—The Royal couple arrives at the University and makes a tour of the front campus.

12:06—They enter Hart House, pass through the quadrangle into the Great Hall.

12:09—They proceed to the dais of the Great Hall, are welcomed by Chancellor Massey, and are invited to sign the Guest Books of the University and Hart House.

12:14—They leave by the East Door of Hart House and proceed to the Parliament Buildings.

U. of T. Rolls Out The Carpet

This is the Blues' first league game at home. It is the Western rugby weekend. It is the eve of the annual All-Varsity Fall Dance.

But it is also the weekend of the Royal Visit, and everything else has been set aside.

When Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip arrive tomorrow noon, an estimated 5,000 students and faculty will be on hand to cheer their reception before Hart House, as the royal couple visit the largest university in Canada and the largest private men's club in the Commonwealth.

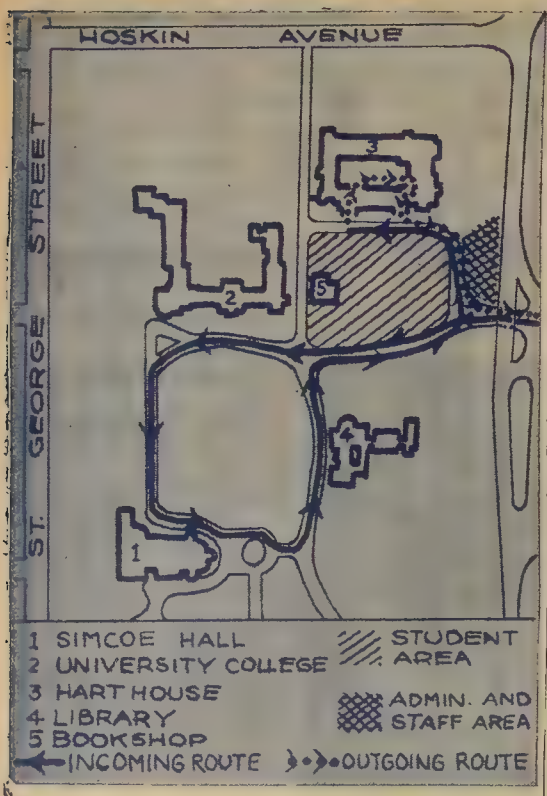
Some students say they are indifferent; insist they will not be out Saturday morning to see the royal couple. But the majority will probably be there, enough to prove that royalty still has the best public appeal in the world today.

Decoration has been kept to a bare minimum; in Hart House there is only a bit of blue and white bunting above the main doorway. A few flags can be seen above the underpass. But outside of that, Hart House has been left in its own austere Gothic splendor.

The Princess' fourteen-car cavalcade is expected to enter the Queen's Park underpass at exactly 12 o'clock noon tomorrow. It will make a circle around the campus, then retracing its path south of the bookstore and end up in front of the West doors of Hart House.

From here university officials have set down the schedule with minute precision. The motor tour should take three minutes. At exactly 12:03 p.m. the Princess will get out the right side of the car, before Hart House, where she will meet Vincent Massey, Chancellor of the University, President Sidney Smith, and Warden Nicholas Ignatieff.

At 12:06 the royal party will enter Hart House, pass the Hall Porter's desk, into the quadrangle. They will cross the quadrangle and enter the Great Hall. The only spectators allowed in the Great Hall will be members of the Board of Governors, the Senate, the Students' Administrative Council and senior academic officials.



Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip will proceed to the dais of the Great Hall, where the Chancellor will welcome them, and they will be seated. University officials hope the Princess will reply to Mr. Massey's address, but this is not definite. The Royal pair will be invited to sign the President's Guest Book and the Guest Book of Hart House.

At 12:14 the royal party will leave Hart House by the East door, and proceed by foot to the Parliament Buildings. If the weather is bad, they will drive.

This 15-minute tour climaxes many weeks' work by university officials. When the royal visit to the university was first anounced, a committee was formed to plan the schedule. Three weeks ago the Warden could be seen pacing the distance across the quadrangle to see how long it would take. The postponement of the visit brought other problems. Now tomorrow is the day.

Lectures and labs will be cancelled and the library will be closed the morning of Saturday, Oct. 13, for the royal visit.

This is a map showing the route of the royal visit and the areas reserved for students and staff. The island south of Hart House will be reserved for students only, and anyone wishing to stand there will have to present his ATL card. The bank at the side of Queen's Park Crescent is reserved for staff. The royal couple will enter the university by car at 12 noon tomorrow, circle the front campus, retrace their way south of the bookstore, and stop in front of Hart House. There they will enter by the West door, pass through the quadrangle and Great Hall, and depart through the East door to the Parliament Buildings.

To Meet Royalty

These are the three members of the University of Toronto that the royal couple will meet tomorrow afternoon.

Chancellor Vincent Massey has had a long and intensive career in Canadian politics. First as Canadian Ambassador to the United States and later as High Commissioner to London he has helped make a place for Canada in international affairs. Recently he headed the Massey Commission for Arts, Science and Letters which suggested as one of its recommendations further financial aid to education. Upon graduation from the University of Toronto in 1910 Mr. Massey received his M.A. degree from Oxford nd returned to lecture in Modern History at the university and was Dean of Residence at Victoria College from 1913 to 1915. Between that time and when he was appointed Chancellor of the University in 1947 he has directed the building of Hart House, served a four-year term as President of the Massey-Harris Ltd. and in 1925 was Minister without portfolio in the Dominion Cabinet.

President Sidney Smith has been academic head of this university since he left his post as principal of University College in 1945. Born in Port Hood, Nova Scotia, he attended Port Hood Academy, King's College, Dalhousie University, and Harvard University. He was called to the Bar of Nova Scotia in 1921 after serving overseas in the first world war from 1916 to 1919, first in the Ninth Canadian Siege Battery and later in the R.F.C. He came to Toronto in 1925 to lecture to law students at Osgoode Hall. In 1929 he left to become Dean of Law at Dalhousie University. Five years later he was appointed president of the University of Manitoba where he remained until 1944 when he returned to Toronto as Principal of University College. In 1945 Dr. Smith was appointed president of University of Toronto.

Lieutenant-Colonel Nicholas Ignatieff was born in Russia in 1904, the son of Count Paul Ignatieff, the late Minister of Education under the Czarist regime. He attended St. Paul's School and later the University of London. He came to Canada in 1925 where he married Helen Fraser, the daughter of Colonel Alex Fraser. From 1939 to 1945 he served as a lieutenant in the Royal Canadian Engineers and later as an officer of the Intelligence Department of the Department of National Defence. During the time he has spent in Canada he has worked in a mine and several times had served as a farm hand before receiving his appointment as Warden of Hart House in 1947.

Royal Visit Coverage To Set New Record

The Royal Visit tomorrow will be more thoroughly covered by The Varsity than any other campus event of the last decade.

Six top reporters and four ace cameramen will be on hand during the 15 minutes Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip will be at the university. No other occurrence can claim one Varsity staffer for every one minute and 30 seconds of its life.

Varsity reporters will be watching the royal couple as they arrive at Hart House and meet the Chancellor, President and Warden of Hart House; they will be on hand when the Princess and Prince cross the quadrangle; they will be peering over the royal shoulders as they sign the guest books in the Great Hall.

In addition Varsity photographers will be stationed on the roof of the observatory, in front of Hart House, in the quadrangle, and in the Great Hall.

Reporters will also be circulating throughout the crowds to get the reaction of the students as the royal pair visit their university.

The Varsity news staff will be represented by Managing Editor Barb Browne, News Editor Ian Montagnes, Features Editor Pearl Parnes, Assistant News Editor Harold Nelson, and Staffers Don Burwash and Max Parsons. Photographers will be Photo Editor Alan Ford, and Ted Sparrow, Bruce MacDermid and Bob Rapp.

Lack Western Welcome Royal Tour Interferes

It isn't a failing in the famous Toronto hospitality that mars our welcome to Western this week-end. It's just that when Royalty visits the Queen city, the Mustangs don't stand a chance.

Western students are finding the royal visit to Toronto is really complicating their plans. First of all, their special train had to be cancelled because neither railway would supply the equipment.

Then they found it was nearly impossible to find accommodation in the Royal York. A few lucky students who had their reservations weeks ahead still have their rooms. But they will be lonely. As soon as the royal visit was postponed to this week-end, the Royal York stopped taking room applications except for members of the royal party and the press. Where the Western overflow is going to stay hasn't yet been decided.

Main body of Purple and White supporters is expected to arrive at the Union Station at 3:25 p.m. today. A suitable reception for them as they get off the train will be next to impossible because of the Royal Visit.

Possibly the saddest part of the entire week-end is the lack of a big dance after the game. The only big event of the entire week-end is the All-Varsity Fall Dance tonight, an affair which is rather limited in numbers. There will be a Blue and White Society tea dance Saturday afternoon. But the big Western Alumni Dance which was going to be held Saturday night had to be cancelled, because the Princess will be dining on the entire convention floor.

Law Students Greet Frosh With Varied Social Plans

The students' society of the University School of Law held their opening social meeting last night at the West-End Veteran's Club. The senior classes were hosts to the first year men, introducing them to the wider activities which supplement the academic study of law. An interesting feature of what might be called a stag in a predominately male school was the presence of the women members of the course.

Club President Jim Torrens, III Law, outlined an expanded program for the coming year. Speaker-meetings will be enlarged to cover rgular discussions. This will mean more student participation and will increase the value of such meetings, he said.

The social side of the activities will feature the annual Mardi Gras extravaganza held each fall. This has been compared favorably with the famous Quatre Arts Ball in Paris. This year a semi-formal dance in the spring term will be introduced. The season ends Torrens explained, with a posh banquet in March at which the Club entertains the Chief Justice, eminent members of the Bench and Bar to gather with the Deans of some of the Faculties. The first business meeting was announced for Tuesday.

Emphasizing the value to be gained from activities outside those of professional interest, W. L. S. Trivett, S.A.C. representative, gave a brief description of student activities on the campus. He further suggested that the school might be interested in discussing a proposed brief to present the Canadian point-of-view to the Edinburgh conference of I.U.S. Trivett said that this brief, supported by Syd Wax, President of the S.A.C. was something that Law students could sink their teeth into.

Clean Page In Guest Book Awaits Royal Signatures

By ADELE KREHM

A brown leather-bound book will assume great importance on Saturday morning when Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh add their signatures to the thousands already entered in the Hart House Guest Book.

The Book is bound in hand-tooled leather of buff brown. A floral motif decorates most of the front cover with the crests of Hart House and the University of Toronto in the corners. In the centre of the cover stands the inscriptions, "Guest Book, Hart House," and "University of Toronto."

The pages of deckle-edged paper are of stiff white parchment, and each page is decorated with the Hart House crest printed in red ink.

Two title pages precede the first signature and are printed in gold and colored inks in a fine pattern very like the old French manuscripts of the Lee Collection. These title pages are by Frank Carmichael, one of the famed "Group of Seven." While the inscription of the first title page is the same as that on the cover, the second contains the history of Hart House and the prayer of the founders.

A gift of Rouss and Mann, Toronto printers, to Hart House in 1921, the Guest Book is enclosed in a glass-covered case of natural oak which is hand-carved in Gothic style.

Following the first signature, that of Edward, Prince of Wales who later reigned as Edward VIII, are written the names of distinguished men and women from probably every nation in the world. Biographies are kept on each signer and will eventually be compiled into a companion book after the Guest Book has been filled.

Last year 100 new pages were added so that there is now a total of 200 pages in the book.

Among the famous names inscribed which fill over half of the book are those of Governor Generals and Prime Ministers. Even Ripley's name is included. Thousands of distinguished men and women in various fields have signed the Guest Book while visiting Hart House. Page 83 of the book contains the signatures of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, who signed during the royal tour of 1939.

Although more men than women have signed it, there is a high percentage of feminine names in the Guest Book.

At approximately 12:13 p.m. Saturday, Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh will add their names to the Guest Book on the dias in the Great Hall of Hart House using an ordinary straight pen. Another page in the historical Guest Book will have been filled.

Hazing is Missed By McGill Frosh Survey Reveals

Montreal, Oct. 2 (CUP) — McGill University frosh say that they were disappointed by the elimination of frosh hazing this year. Firty-five percent of 391 frosh interviewed missed the hazing. Some said they thought hazing would have added "color" to their introduction to university life.

A 78 percent vote of approval for the programme of compulsory freshman athletics was given by the 365 students who answered this question. Participation in athletics is compulsory for freshmen this session for the first time.

The majority interviewed, however, did not feel that it would be advisable to extend the program past first year.

The belief expressed that the upper-class student might well have sufficient classwork to keep him occupied.

Book Money Ready Now

About eight thousand dollars will be given out by the SAC Book Exchange in payment for books sold this year. Payments began yesterday afternoon, and will continue to give out money to-day, and pay-days next week will be Wednesday and Friday.

Students are warned by those in charge to collect their money promptly. Books not sold may be left for possible sale next year, or claimed by their owners. Since the Book Exchange will close next Friday, it is suggested that students needing texts for the second term should buy them now.

No Editor Yet

No student had applied for the Editorship of The Varsity by deadline yesterday noon, reports Miss A. E. M. Parkes, SAC Associate Secretary. The position has been open since the resignation of Editor-elect Jack Gray was accepted by the Students' Administrative Council Last week.

It is not known what steps are to be taken next. For the interim period, Gray is editing the daily issues.

Men Wanted

Above is the almost unmixed All-Varsity Mixed Chorus. While the women have turned out to sing in almost unlimited numbers, there has so far been a dearth of males. But, says Conductor Keith Girard, those men who would like to investigate the possibilities of the chorus may come along any time.

Deadline At Five To Buy Tickets

Varsity football fans will have to cheer louder at the rest of the games this year if they want to equal the vocal power of last year's rooting section. According to J. P. Loosemore, Financial Secretary of the University Athletic Association, the reason for this is that decreased registration has caused the ticket sales to be down 1,800 from last year. This meant that instead of 8,600, there will be only 6,800 Varsity fans in the rooting section during the 1951-52 season.

Tickets were no longer on sale to the majority of students, but those who registered late would have until 5 o'clock to purchase theirs, stated Mr. Loosemore.

As a consolation to those students' wives who are sitting at home this year while their husbands attend the games (or vice versa), he said that next year arrangements would be made so that they would be able to purchase student tickets.

Fewer Vets Easier Pay

Because of the considerable reduction in numbers of veterans registered this year at the University of Toronto, long pay parades will not be necessary.

The following faculties will be paid by a paymaster from the D.V.A. office each month at their faculty office: Dentistry, Applied Science and Engineering, Architecture, Medicine, Ontario College of Education and the School of Graduate Studies.

Faculty of Arts students will receive their cheques from the registrar of each particular college, as will the faculties and colleges where DVA registration is at a minimum.

The first allowance cheque, under the arrangements outlined, will be available on Oct. 30. The second will be distributed on Nov. 15, and monthly thereafter in the middle of the month.

SQUARIN' OFF

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Anyone fortunate enough to be the proud possessor of a ducat to tomorrow's Varsity-Western game should have his head read if he is not in attendance at Varsity Stadium between the hours of 2.00 p.m. and 4.30 p.m. tomorrow afternoon.

We have pounded out so many lines in relation to the chances of the respective teams as far as the winner is concerned that we can only say at this point, "Words fail me." One thing however, we have probably not mentioned enough. Aside from the fact that tomorrow's game is one of the most important in the Intercollegiate loop this fall, it will probably be one of the most interesting from the spectator standpoint as well.

Always a tough club to beat, as evidenced by their record of Intercollegiate championships in recent years, the Mustangs are going to make it tough going for any Blue championship hopes. And then, of course, there is the Blue line to consider. It seems pretty certain that the Metrasmen are not going to be able to waltz around the Bloor Bowl at will as they have done on certain occasions in the past.

As a matter of fact, the whole thing is shaping up to a first class football game. Besides that, it's your first real chance to get out and ruin your singing voice rooting for the Blues.

The Intermediate football Blues put their cleats on in earnest this afternoon in London when they meet up with the Western Colts in their league opener.

Always more or less overshadowed by the goings on in Senior football circles, the Baby Blues play a brand of football that few people see enough of to appreciate. With a starry Colt team of last season hit hard by losses to the Mustangs, particularly in the backfield department, the Intermediates may be able to follow the lead of their big brothers and walk away with a win in the first league tussle of the season.

Coaches John Kennedy and Fraser Mustard of the Intermediates have a tough job on their hands as theirs is the club that must act as a pool of reserve material for the Blues and they can never be sure from one day to the next just exactly who they will be able to count on to carry the load.

Intercoll Tennis

This year's Inter-Collegiate Tennis Tournament ended up in a three way draw. The matches were played at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, yesterday and Wednesday, and the University of Toronto squad was forced to share first place with the McGill and University of Montreal teams. Each came out of yesterday's play with 14 points and the fourth entry in the tournament, University of Ottawa, failed to win a match.

The clinching matches for the Blues were two upset victories by Stan Hurwitz and John Coles. The former beat Pete Constable of McGill and the [illegible] Gil Rochon of Montreal [illegible] the Toronto team into a tie with the Redmen. The final match of the tourney saw Page of Montreal came from behind to beat Quain of McGill to make it a three way tie. Page lost the first set 6-4 and was down 3-0 in the second but came back to win it 6-3 and went on to take the third 6-2. This win brought the Carabins into a tie and kept the Redmen from pulling ahead of the Blues.

The Toronto crew compiled their 1[illegible] points by winning 11 out of 15 singles matches and three out of six in the doubles. The Varsity netters won seven singles matches yesterday to erase a two point deficit suffered in the first day's play.

Metras And Co. Visit Blues For Key Contest Tomorrow

Colours do clash, but never so violently as they will this coming weekend, when the Queen City (or should we say the Princess city) will play host to another Intercollegiate football weekend.

The colours in question will be borne by Johnny Metras' Western Mustangs, the Purple and White of London town, and Bob Masterson's Varsity Blues. With first place at stake, this game is rated by many of those so-called football analysts and experts as a key game of the 1951 season, especially for the Blue and White squad. Fresh from an uphill victory over the McGill Redmen, the Blues are out to prove it wasn't just a fluke, and that their team does possess the all round power needed for a championship this year.

On the other hand, Metras and company (especially the Western Press Agents) have been hollering Blue murder that the Mustangs are possessors of the strongest line in the Senior circuit, and although they lost one of the finest lot of backfielders ever to graduate into Senior company, they still have, through Johnny's fine coaching talents, one of the best backfield groups they have had in past years, at any rate good enough to win the Yates cup this year. However, Masterson's crew are out to show these press agents that games are won or lost on the field, and not on newspaper type.

The Blues will probably start the same lineup that played such a fine (last) half game of football last Saturday at McGill. This probably means that Al Dancy will be at centre, flanked by guards Hames and Bruce Miles, with Captain Johnny Evans and Joe Harris at tackle. Al Brown and Jimmy Bell will complete the line at end positions.

Familiar faces to Senior Football fans that will be seen in the Western lineup are Reg Ort at centre, linemen Cork, Wyatt, McMonagle, Fewster, McNichol, Turner, and Beatty, while the only [illegible] backfielder will be Jim Buck and Murray Henderson.

Knox, Meds Win Opening Soccer Tilts

Yesterday afternoon Knox College handed out a 3-0 drubbing to Forestry. Both teams were fairly well matched with Knox making better use of their opportunities, and showing better finishing power.

Late in the first half, Dave Murphy sneaked a ground shot past the bushmen's goalie. This ice-breaker egged the clergymen on and early in the second half McKennley scored with a well placed shot. A fair exchange of plays followed, but this was soon broken by a scorcher from Welch's boot which left the goalkeeper gaping.

In the other afternoon game, Trinity's goalscoring machine was held to a 1-1 draw by UC. The Buttery boys, blessed with their Bermudian imports, started out impressively. Despite them, the UC squad remained undaunted pressing Trinity's defence. Hugh Rowan, Trinity's roving forward played his usual fine game, and opened the scoring with a "doll" that came his way.

This was early in the second half, and seemed to open up a determination among the U.C. forwards. Despite fine playing by Gaunt and Dashwood, U.C.'s Russel made a dash that had Pettigrew holding thin air. The game petered out to a tame draw with U.C. pressing hard for the clincher.

In the noon-hour tilt Sr. Meds. shaded the Emmanuel College entry by a 1-0 count. The game was close all the way with the Medsmen scoring in the first half and holding out the rest of the way.

Victoria Down Trinity In Exhibition Football

In an exhibition contest that broke wide open in the first quarter Vic downed Trinity 17-6. Taking advantage of two Trinity fumbles in the opening moments the Scarlet and Gold struck fast for two touchdowns.

After recovery of the fumbled kick-off, Vic's John Bond got the first going over from the 10 on an end-sweep. The convert attempt failed. Trinity elected to receive and again bobbled the ball on the first play. George Hevenor carried across on an off-tackle play, and John Wooton converted to make the score 11-0.

Play continued fairly even until late in the third quarter when Vic again scored, sparked by Ra[illegible] Newell's catch of John Fowle[illegible]'s pass. Jim Goodfellow ran it over from the eight-yard line.

A belated Trinity offensive unhampered by fumbles and [illegible] playing good blocking and [illegible] ning, netted them a fourth quarter touchdown. Tommy Thomas climaxed a sixty-five yard march scoring a touchdown on a plunge. Quarterback Doug Andison converted.

Vic's end runs were clicking with quarters Fowler and Lorne Lodge pitching out to Ray Atkin, Goodfellow and Bond, usually for long gains. Jim Rogers, K[illegible] Stoier and Ed File went especially well up front for the winners. For Trinity, who no doubt will improve considerably, Thomas and Tiny Thompson stood out.

Pitching Sportshoes

By BEAUREGARD YUMPF

This column, under the heading of Pitching Sportshoes will appear daily, outlining the highlights of interfaculty competition. The games in major sports will be covered in separate stories, elsewhere on the page and everything else will be here. As many indoor games such as lacrosse and volleyball, are played in the late evening, team managers wishing the scores to appear in the paper should bring information on these game to the Varsity office, Room 78 UC as soon as possible after the end of their tilt.

Interfaculty football is in the news today with the announcement of new groupings. Trinity, last year's group III champions, have been moved into the second group along with Forestry and St. Mikes. Jr. SPS have been moved down to group III and will compete with Dents and Meds seconds. Group I has been left unchanged, with Vic, UC, Senior SFS, and Sr. Meds, fighting it out.

There has also been a change in the lacrosse leagues. Group I has been changed from a five to a four team loop with the UC entry being dropped to the second section. The Redmen are entering only one team this year, and for this reason, they were dropped from the top group which is now left with SPS, Meds, Vic, and St. Mike's.

Play in both football and lacrosse will commence on Monday. Victoria and UC will open the grid season with the kick-off at 4:00 p.m. In boxla, the Senior Vicsters will take on Meds I in a noon hour tilt, and Senior Skule meets the Irish at five.

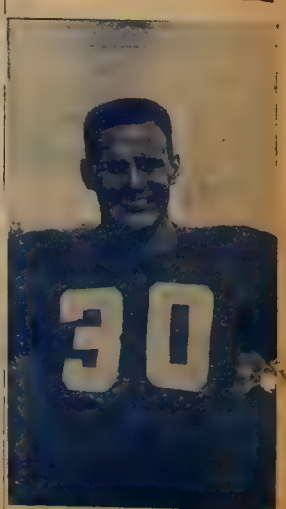
The interfaculty schedule opened today with both soccer and volleyball on tap. The former is covered elsewhere on this page. In the v-ball opener, Jr. UC had to go to the limit to get a win over Jr. SPS. It was 15-5 for the Redmen in the first game, but the Skulemen came back in the second 15-6. UC took the decision in the third, by a 15-6 count.

In the suppertime encounter, III year Meds took Sr. UC two in a row, 15-3 and 15-1.

WOMEN

There will be an important meeting of all women sports writers in The Varsity news office to-day at 1:00 p.m. All those who will be unable to attend are asked to get in touch with the Sports Editor or leave a note in the news office before the meeting.

There are openings available for two more girls and if interested in this type of work you are urged to attend this meeting.



Roberts Awaits Medical Report

One of the main cogs of the Varsity line is at this moment awaiting results of medical exams which will determine his football future. Jack Roberts, one of the best blockers Varsity has had for some time, and honour student besides, had the last of a series of head examinations yesterday, to determine whether the blackouts he has been experiencing in the past two games might result in permanent injury if he is exposed to further pummeling.

Roberts came out of the McMaster game in the first half, dazed and impassive, but still conscious. The same thing happened a week later in the McGill game at Montreal. If any sign of permanent injury is found, he will likely be through with football. Jack missed last season with a broken arm.

A veteran of the Vaughan Road CI team which were perennial divisional champions a few years ago, and a scholarship student when he graduated to Varsity, he is in his final year of Maths and Physics—top-flight competition in studies as well as football.

Jack himself thinks he will be all right, but he will still be out for this week's game.

Debated Blonde

For the first time in an ordinary Hart House debate, a staff photographer was allowed to take pictures in the sacred precincts of the debate room last Wednesday. Another first was the presence of a female representative of the press, Denise Richards of The Varsity (foreground). The others in the picture are (from the left) a down-town newsman, Clerk of the House Roger Bull, II UC; Speaker John Morden, Wycliffe, and guest speaker Dr. H. B. Van Wyck, whose rhetoric earned a defeat of the resolution that technical training for the professions have no place in the University.

Gay Norman Chimes Oust 'Merry Widow'

By PEARL PARNES

Like Robert Burns' plans of mice and men, the University College Music Club's plans for an operetta have almost, but not quite, "gang aft a-gley."

Originally scheduled to produce "The Merry Widow", final plans make the operetta for this year "The Chimes of Normandy," by Robert Planquette.

Reasons for change of plans are strictly financial, explains Graham Jackson, conductor and producer of the operetta. "We lost money last year because expensive production caused us to surpass the budget. In addition, the registration of University College has dropped, and therefore the UC Lit budget has been cut."

With the grant of the Lit to the Music Club lowered, the budget for the operetta has been cut one-third. Since royalties and rental of music in previous years have amounted to about $400, prospects for an operetta to match those of previous years looked grim.

However, three years of successful production of such shows as "Red Mill and "Naughty Marietta" could not meet with such a harsh fate, felt Jackson. "We rummaged around, and have come up with a non-royalty operetta which is every bit as good as 'Merry Widow' ".

"The Chimes of Normandy" takes place in a town in the France of 1867. Written in the style of Offenbach, (Gaite Parisienne and Tales of Hoffman), it is gay and tuneful. The story is a charming legend of a haunted castle whose chimes are supposed to ring on the return of the long lost heir. The songs include "Legend of the Bells", "That Night I'll Never Forget", and the rollicking "Cider Song". The comedy is lively, and includes the patter song "As He's Looking Somewhat Pale, put Him into Mail" (armor, that is).

"The choruses are excellent," promised Jackson. "Lots of people will be needed, particularly men, set painters, costume-makers, and a publicity director. The operetta will be produced in Hart House Theatre Dec. 13, 14, 15."

The opening meeting of the Music Club will be held next Tuesday, to discuss plans for the operetta and other club activities, the Record Hour and the UC Singers.

Casting for the operetta, which will also be produced by a collegiate in Toronto next spring, will be held on Wednesday and Thursday of next week. Bob Osborne, Occasional Student, will be Stage Director.

SPS Society By-Elections Held To-Day

The Engineering Society fall by-elections are today. President Doug Sherk of the Society said yesterday that he hoped all the engineers would vote before the 2 p.m. closing of the polls. Voting will start at 9 a.m.

Skulemen are electing an external affairs representative for the first time from three nomineers: J. D. B. Arrowsmith, IV Eng. Bus.; B. Hawrylyshyn, IV Mech; R. E. Turner, III Eng. Bus.

J. Drummond has been elected by acclamation as chairman of the Electrical Club and E. H. Scott is secretary of the Society by acclamation.

Running for third year SAC representative are J. F. Cattion, D. R. Gilley, G. O. Hayman, D. R. Stevenson, and D. K. Wilson. Jim Allan and George Burns have been nominated for 1st vice president of the Engineering Soc.

A. R. Jackson and J. L. McFarlane are the contenders for the position of president of the class of 5T5 while D. W. Sime and W. S. Haruby have been nominated for the position of secretary-treasurer of the class of 5T2.

East European Sincerity Real Says Endicott

East German youth is sincere in its protestations of friendship, Shirley Endicott, IV Vic., told the International Relations Club's opening meeting yesterday afternoon. Miss Endicott, Rowena Smith, School of Social Work, and Elmer Sopha, II Law, gave their impressions of European recovery and the varying attitudes to western policy they encountered.

Miss Endicott attended the Youth Festival held in Berlin this summer. She claims that news-stories of typhoid and hunger at the conference were erroneous. The German people no longer want to make war on other peoples, she declared. The working class bitterly resents the importation of American arms. "These people are more interested in an improved standard of living than in ideological considerations," she explained.

Sopha was in Finland this summer with other University of Toronto students working on the construction of technical school buildings. He reported that the Finnish economy is impoverished. Reparation payments demanded by Russia, loss of territory necessitating resettlement of one-eighth of the population on uncleared land, and a shortage of American dollars have made recovery extremely difficult. There is every sign of democratic government Sopha said. The Communist party controls one-fifth of the seats in the legislature. Finland has no concrete foreign policy and is entirely uninterested in membership in the United Nations, he said.

Rowena Smith spent the summer in southern Austria at work camp clearing avalanche debris. She found the people desirious of building "their own country in their own way." A great many dispossessed people want only to get out of Europe, she said.

Next weekend thirty members of IRC will meet at Caledon Farm to discuss the effect of the Russian-U.S. clash on the world at large.

University Drama

By PEARL PARNES

Judging from reactions of twelve universities to a CUP questionnaire sent out by The Varsity, the calibre of Canadian amateur acting is on a high level. Support of the university drama group, however, ranges from the apathetic state at Western to the well-filled theatre at the University of Toronto.

Acadia, too, suffers from the mediocre reception given to its productions. It has an ambitious programme including a Shakespearian play, a current Broadway hit, French plays, a religious one-acter by S.C.M. and an interclass drama festival with entries by each of the four years. It is headed by Prof. H. S. Sipperell, "probably the best dramatic coach in Eastern Canada," according to the report received. Yet one of the productions, Joan of Lorraine, despite enthusiastic reviews, brought out only one-tenth of the student body.

Dalhousie, with superior stage and lighting equipment, and acting of "amateur excellence," fares rather better, with one-half to two-thirds of the students attending on student nights.

Bob Tovey, president of the Players' Guild of the University of Western Ontario, gave a discouraging report of drama on his campus. The acting, he claims, "as amateur acting, is amateur." He blames lack of dramatic atmosphere and general lack of interest on the campus for this condition. The stage available to the Guild is very small, with no dressing rooms and poor lighting facilities, "a very high-schoolish affair," he explained. Although Purple Patches, the annual show, is enthusiastically received by students and city officials alike, the drama productions are poorly attended.

Paradoxically, it is the smaller colleges which generate the greatest enthusiasm for dramatic productions. The Sock and Buskin Drama Club at Carleton College, equipped with a very good stage and actors who participate in the Canadian Repertory Theatre and the Ottawa Little Theatre as well as in campus productions, creates a good deal of interest, prompting the following editorial comment in the College newspaper:

'The Buskins deserve praise and encouragement for their full schedule of dramatic endeavours. If the other clubs on the campus showed as much interest in their work as this group, Carleton would be the most active club centre in the university field."

The University of Montreal, with only two productions in the last two years, has reached a high standard of excellence. "Fantasio" by Alfred de Musset, viewed by University of Toronto students on one of the Carabin weekends, sent the Toronto people home raving about the modernistic decor, which gave a three-dimensional effect, and the "impeccable manner" in which a three-act play was produced by a minimum of sets on a stage without curtains. A one-act adaptation of Oedipus Rex was enthusiastically received by the Montreal students, who designed and made all stage props and costumes. Concentrated effort is put into the production, with the actors of Oedipus Rex spending one week up north to get perfect precision.

The University of Alberta, with a drama department closely allied to their drama club, two theatres and excellent technical equipment, covers all aspects of dramatic art. A full program includes one-act and three-act plays, classics, Canadian and radio plays, with such ambitious projects as Madwoman of Chaillot, Anna Christie and Macbeth. Costumes and scenery are designed and made by the students, with ingenious plans for duplication of sets.

Saskatchewan, with a drama school, a small but adequate theatre, good stage and excellent lighting equipment, produces all their own scenery and costumes. Their usual six to eight-night stands, including Russian and Greek translations, are well supported on the campus. McMaster, with facilities which are "terrible, or worse" still manages to produce a three-act play and participate in the Inter-Varsity Drama League Festival.

St. Francis Xavier, another small college, specializes in modern three-act plays. Despite crowded rehearsal time, little or no previous training, and few productions, the enthusiasm and interest created in the student body is excellent, particularly musicals (e.g., Brigadoon), comedies and farces. Serious drama does not draw well, however, and fifteen to twenty percent of the students will not attend any production. An excellent auditorium in the basement of the college chapel possesses a large, rather disproportionately long stage, with good lighting equipment. All scenery and costumes are made by the students, as at most of the universities. Muslin covering is used here for sets since it is cheaper than canvas and adequate for the purpose. As is the case in most universities, there is a lack of construction and storage space for scenery.

Prices for campus productions usually range from 50 cents to one dollar, with the University of Ottawa, which gets an excellent student support, charging 25 to 40 cents.

The kinds of productions in the various universities is fairly constant, including one-act and three-act plays in English, French and German, Shakespeare and modern productions. Attempts at "theatre in the round," the arena-style productions in which the audience sits on all four sides of the stage, have been made at Toronto and Western. Silver Cord and First and Last (Galsworthy) have both been produced at Toronto, with enthusiastic receptions. The Western University Players' Guild did Exodus. Abstract plays are in vogue as well, with The Hungerers and No Exit creating furors at their respective universities.

In general, opportunities for original productions are good, but interest in them is lacking. At the University of Toronto, few plays are entered in the Robin Godfrey competition for the best student-written play. The winning entries are produced by the University College Players' Guild. Floor shows for dances at Carleton College are written by students, but a competition for student drama produced only one result. At Western, there is a standing Guild prize for any student-written, one-act play produced by the Guild, but interest has been poor, and the prize has never been awarded. Dalhousie has produced two original plays by students, and Alberta, like Toronto, accepts original radio scripts. '

Toronto and Alberta appear to be in the forefront in the attempt to produce Canadian plays. Several one-act plays have been done by the college societies of the University of Toronto, and Fortune My Foe was a successful Gill production last year. Another Robertson Davies play, At My Heart's Core had a successful two-week run at Alberta.

The University of Toronto Drama Committee, an organization which includes representatives from each of the college guilds, produces several bills of one-act plays each year. There are "invitation" evenings, in which plays are exchanged between colleges. Every large faculty and college produces at least one musical show, with the All-Varsity Revue, when it is produced, collecting talent from the entire campus. Student interest in the theatre is excellent, particularly for musicals and the three-act plays presented at Hart House Theatre.

Several universities participate in provincial, intercollegiate and Dominion Drama festivals. Western this year plays host to six universities in the Inter-Varsity Drama League Festival.

Newspaper coverage on the whole is good. Several universities have permanent critics covering all campus and important professional shows. St. Francis Xavier has even secured the assistance of the local radio station. Most of the papers print advances as well as critical reviews. Mt. Allison gives coverage almost amounting to publicity before the show, but "very rarely review — they consider students sufficiently qualified to make their own judgement." a view not shared by most other papers!

Welcome!

Tomorrow at noon in a short, simple ceremony, The University of Toronto will welcome two young people to this campus. Our welcome will by nature be a smaller one than much of the ballyhoo that will greet Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip as they travel across Canada.

The University is proud to play host to the Royal Couple. We wish that it were possible for them to stay longer, and perhaps meet some of the undergraduates of the university. Time, and an almost impossibly rigid schedule, does not permit this.

For those students who will be on the campus tomorrow, and for the many who can not be here, we want to add an undergraduate greeting to that being offered throughout the country. Such a happy occasion will long be remembered at the University.

Blooped and Happy

It's going to be a big weekend. On top of the Royal Visit, we are ushering in the 1951-52 football season, as the Western Mustangs come down for Toronto's first home game this year.

The boys from London, and particularly their fans, will find the city in a bit of an uproar. Many plans have been upset, but in spite of the inconviences we want to extend a royal welcome to Western.

Football, and all the things that go with it, marks a happy time in the undergraduate year. It's too early to have started worrying about one's academic work and the pleasant fall days spread a lazy feeling through the air. And with football, all the traditional spirit and fun that this University can generate comes rushing to the surface.

It has been a constant wonder to this paper that it seems to be only football that can really draw the various parts of the University together. College and faculty lines are forgotten as the Bloor Bowl fills up. And for a few brief hours we are a University.

It is not until after graduation, when the world begins to close around us, that the same understanding and expression of a University returns. As such, the experience is a useful and valuable one, for it brings to the surface the unity of the experience that the men and women of the University undergo. That unity, often forgotten in the heat and rash of undergraduate days, remains one of the greatest strengths of this institution.

The Blues, in spite of the injuries which have plagued Coach Masterson, go into tomorrow's game in good shape. And we hear that the Mustangs are likely to put up some stiff competition.

There is an inevitable bias that enters the picture when we look forward to the outcome of football games in which the Blues are playing. We expect they will win, gloriously and decisively.

With a good win from last week's game in Montreal behind them, we wish the Blues good luck tomorrow. For emphasis, we leave you to the cheers of 10,000-odd, blooped and happy undergraduates who will be cheering you on.

OUR READERS WRITE

Gumption Needed!

Editor, The Varsity:

Can you explain why the governing body of the inter-collegiate football league has apparently scrapped our distinctive Canadian football rules and practically adopted holus bolus the American game, even to the names of the positions of the players—guards, tackles, ends and even the forward pass.

This inter-collegiate league is composed of four entirely Canadian Universities and I see no reasons why they should adopt these American rules. The old Canadian game was admitted by the Americans themselves to be much better. It was a more open game, more running, passing and kicking and much better from the spectators' point of view.

Why should we submit to domination of the Americans, even in our sport. Surely we have more backbone and gumption enough to go back to our distinctive Canadian game, especially in our wholly Canadian league.

Crowds of the University staff and students started to gather before 9:00 o'clock on the lawn in front of Hart House, and along the elevated bank of the by-pass, till at twelve o'clock it looked like the picture at top left. The introductions as the royal couple left the car and entered Hart House are shown in the lower picture at left. Above we see them again in the Quadrange of Hart House.

'Twas one of those days when everything goes backwards, as the look on Johnny Metras and some of his boys shows. The Mustangs were being pushed backwards by the Blues, and even the camera was backwards. Next to Metras is big Ed Roman, stalwart freshman end, while the other unhelmeted man is Don Beatty, wingback. The other two, obviously linemen, bear facial adornments which illustrate well the kind of football that was played.

A Royal Weekend

Royal Visit Provides Impressive Pageantry

By PEARL PARNES

It was quite a weekend. The Mustangs went home in even less style than they had been ushered in on. But for well over 10,000 people on the university grounds, the football game ran only a poor second to another event.

To the excited crowds outside Hart House, and the select group which viewed the private ceremony within, inter-collegiate patriotism gave way to a far wider variety. The University of Toronto had put on its best bib and tucker to greet the objects of a nation-wide uproar.

A series of guards checked and rechecked my credentials as I entered Hart House, secure in my special Press badge and ticket to the Great Hall. A dignified, officious-looking mountie, making a splash of colour against the oak panelling and Gothic reserve of the Hall, ushered me to my position, where I stopped to take bearings.

Row on row of eminent members of the faculty crowded one another, jostling and shuffling for position in as dignified a manner as possible, but all as anxious to get a good view as the little girl I had seen outside peering between two student legs.

A special section just below the dais had been reserved for twenty newspaper men, including one reporter and one photographer from The Varsity. As one of the men from The Star said to me, it was worth all the fuss of reporting and even the glares of a few crowded individuals, to get "reserved standing-room" for the pageant.

The professors made an impressive picture in their many coloured robes. Members of the Students' Administrative Council peered out from behind their more favoured superiors. An aisle had been left clear from the north door of the Hall to the dais.

Registrar J. E. Evans gave us a briefing on the etiquette expected of us, putting as much stress on enthusiasm as the dignity of the academic assemblage would allow.

"Shall we curtsey?" suggested an eminent female professor.

"No," began the registrar, holding up his hand to quiet the applause of the male members of the staff. "Not that you could not do it beautifully, but those behind you may have a different idea of the manner and direction to be assumed."

During the five minute wait which followed, positions were held or bargained for. The cleared space before the dais was watched with much apprehension, except by one elderly professor who walked to the platform, gathered up his robe, stooped and carefully picked up a fluff of dust. He returned to his place amid applause.

Then an explosive silence spread over the room, and the royal procession entered. Led by Warden Ignatieff, the party proceeded slowly down the Hall, between two banks of applauding and sporadically cheering faculty-members. Following Leonard Smith, beadle of the University, who carried the mace, the royal pair advanced.

Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, Chancellor of the University, accompanied an attractive young lady in steel-blue taffeta. She walked gracefully though unsmiling, in contrast to the blond young man behind her. The Prince, escorted by the President, Sidney Smith, smiled broadly and seemed to enjoy the situation immensely. As he mounted the dais, the sun, peering into the Hall (along with shadows of figures outside the great windows) caught his hair. The Princess may be collecting patriotic hearts on her tour, but Prince Philip can score up at least a few feminine flutters which have nothing to do with royal homage.

At a signal from the Great Hall, the 48th Highlanders, stationed in the Quadrangle, burst into the National Anthem just as the royal couple reached the great leather chairs and turned to face the Hall. After six bars (only the King himself is entitled to the entire anthem), Elizabeth and Philip sat down.

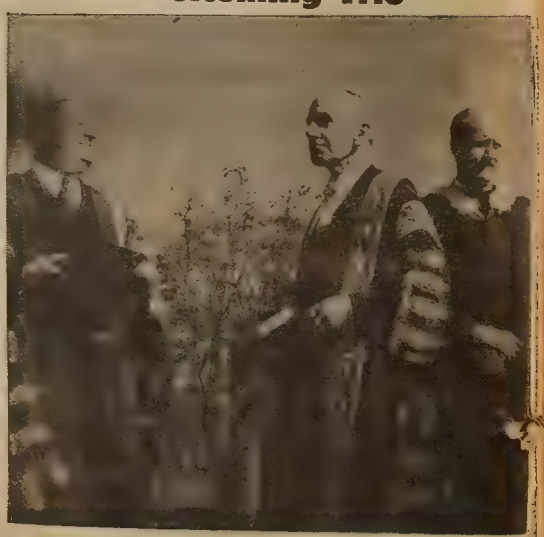
Carillons And Cheers Welcome Royal Pair

Amid mildly enthusiastic cheering of an estimated crowd of 18,000 and the peeling of carillons, a somewhat worn British princess and her handsome prince alighted from their sleek black convertible at Hart House early Saturday afternoon.

Eight scarlet-coated motorcycle RCMP Policemen, who have accompanied Elizabeth and Philip throughout the Canadian tour, immediately preceded the Royal limousine as the thirteen-car procession arrived on schedule at 12:03 p.m.

U of T staff and students, Western students, children and other citizens (their number estimated by two City police inspectors) began gathering before nine o'clock in front of the building and grew gradually until noon.

They brought old newspapers, pillows, rugs, camp chairs and portable radios for the long vigil, patiently waiting for the first roar of motorcycle engines.



Clad in his black and gold academic gown, University Chancellor Vincent Massey greeted the Royal couple on the steps, followed by President Sidney Smith and Hart House Warden Nicholas Ignatieff, while the crowd cheered spasmodically.

Armed forces officers, six RCMP men, and three official hosts, beadle Leonard Smith (carrying the gold mace), press representatives and photographers, University and City police, and three other unidentified people all mingled with the proceedings at the building entrance, which appeared to slightly bewilder the Princess and the Duke of Edinburgh.

Following the official greeting the University officials seemed indecisive as to the next move. A strong cry for a front view of the couple as they were ascending the steps resulted in a short period of mild confusion when none of the University dignitaries knew whe-

Top campus officials gathered in their scholastic robes Saturday for the University's reception of Canada's royal visitors. Chancellor Vincent Massey, President Sidney Smith and Hart House Warden Nicholas Ignatieff represented the University during the brief visit. In the 15 minutes allotted for the royal couple to see the University, Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh drove through the campus and inspected the Hart House quadrangle and Great Hall. Police estimated there were 18,000 in the throng who watched the procession in the University area.

...Blues Won Rugby Game

Cartwheels, Crusaders, Canine

Saturday was a great day for herding students. After several hours of being herded by members of the UNTD, COTC, the Air Force Reserve and the Blue and White Band, the students ran the gauntlet at Varsity stadium. Any student who could prome that he had a permit to attend lectures, had paid his athletic fees, and had purchased a book of tickets on which he had signed his name, address, and course could hope to see the game.

For the first time cries of "get your Orange Crush" were mixed with "Yea Team" as cold drinks, and hot dogs were sold in the student section. Many students had a dinner of hot dogs as crowds from another attraction jammed the restaurants before the game.

The student section was unusually quiet for a game in which Varsity was leading the Westerners throughout. Two drunks drained cans of beer to cries of "jug-a-lug" but there wasn't much else in the way of spectator participation. There were very few cries of "cartwheels". However one of the male cheerleaders (Varsity's forgotten men) said that there were fewer cries because of the increased number of cartwheels accompanying the yells. Perhaps student taste has swung away from upside-down co-eds.

Every rugby game has its animal hero at the Varsity bowl. In the past there have been squirrels, skunks, mules, and goats. This year it was a shaggy, black dog with a heart of gold and blue blood coursing through his veins—he ran on the field and tripped a Western player. Maybe he had heard the rumor that Johnny Metras didn't donate on the SPCA tag day.

Frazer Fairlie, occasionally a Trinity student, held a knight school on Saturday morning to train eight men in the intricacies of marching in armored suits. The group practised the Swiss straddle military march. Unfortunately, the Blue and White band set too fast a pace for this medieval step. At half time the Monarch productions (a plug) knights galloped around in support of the Red Feather campaign. Fairlie said that the original plans called for three models wearing red dresses and riding on a ten-ton fire truck. The fire truck was too heavy, and the models haven't been heard from. A speech by Syd Wax, president of the Students' Administrative Council, took their place.

And then of course there was Helen Mackie, a drum-majorette. Western might have the quantity but Varsity certainly has the quality. Helen added some new twists, not to mention curves, to the Hawaiian war chant. She was ably backed up by Jim Guthro and the Blue and White band who had just appeared before royalty — without their instruments.

The score was 16-7, for those who kept their eyes on Helen.

2nd Quarter Drive Highlights Victory Oneschuck Shines

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Coach Bob Masterson has built himself a football club. Highlighting their 16-7 victory over the Western Mustangs with a thrilling 108 yard touchdown march in the second quarter, and sparked by the brilliant play of Steve Oneschuck who won the hearts of the 24,423 fans in attendance, the Blues proved in no uncertain terms that they were the club to beat in Intercollegiate circles this year.

Relying on an efficient running attack that at times verged on the spectacular and air-tight pass defence that the Musangs failed to even dent until the fourth quarter, Varsity made defeating the Mustangs look like menial labour for the first three quarters of the game. Defensively, the Blue line was magnificent. They effectively bottled up the Mustang ground attack as they had done the week before to the Redmen, and then turned right around to open gaping holes in a Mustang front wall that was rated as the best that Western had produced in several seasons.

Unable to get out of their own territory in the first quarter, and already 3 points behind on a field goal by Jimmy "Sure-Foot" Bell, the Mustangs got their chance early in the second stanza when they picked up a Varsity fumble on the Blue 40-yard line. O'Hara carried twice for the Mustangs to bring the ball to the Varsity 24. Another first down for the Metrasmen put them only 16 yards from pay dirt. But then the Blue line rose to the occasion and held the Mustangs to 4 yards on the next two downs.

Western's attempt to get the three points back with a field goal was blocked. The Mustangs recovered, were penalized 25 yards and had their third down over again. Bud Obal, who did most of the booting for the visitors, got away a nice one that went into touch on the Varsity 2-yard line.

And then the fun began. Bewley skirted the left end for the Blues and made 13 yards behind some beautiful blocking. Again Bewley took the ball, this time on a pitch-out from quarterback Alec Lawson and picked up a first down. Bobby Dale took over and carried for 9 on his first try, then brought the crowd to its feet with an exhibition of razzle-dazzle running on an off-tackle play that was good for 32 yards to the Western 52.

Lawson put in his thinking cap, and with some beautiful deception in the Blue backfield, Al Haig galloped around the short end for 35 yards, putting the Blues in scoring position on the Western 17-yard line. Then, uncorking one of the three Blue passes of the game, Lawson pitched a perfect strike to end Hank Tamowski in the end zone for the major. 108 yards in six plays! Bell made the convert good and the score, Varsity 9, Western 0.

With Varsity dominating the line play, the Mustangs took to the air, tossing 26 passes in all during the game for a record of 11 completions. But with the Blue ends falling back on pass defence, 5 of the Mustang passes were intercepted. Varsity's Steve Oneschuck accounted for two of the interceptions and scored the second Blue major as a result of the first one.

Early in the third quarter, with the Mustangs in possession on the centre field stripe, Oneschuck nabbed a Henderson pass, ran it into the clear and 66 yards down the field for a touchdown. Jimmy Bell again kicked the extra point.

Then tempers began to flare and the Blues found themselves on the receiving end of a couple of stiff

Extra Height Asset In Crowd

"If you can just get to see them once," exclaimed a pretty co-ed to her companion. And that's about all she saw. The crowd on the island got only a fleeting glimpse of Their Royal Highnesses as they were greeted by the President, Chancellor, and Warden and rushed into Hart House.

Nine o'clock saw the first students struggling onto the campus to wait for the Princess' arrival at noon. From then until 12 o'clock they came in a steady stream, until there were about 5,000 in the students' island, and over 15,000 in the university area.

Most of them stood in the sun, talked to their neighbors, and jockeyed for better positions during the long wait. First overcoats, then jackets, came off as the day warmed up. One girl stretched out for a quick nap while she waited.

Spectators went everywhere to get a better view of the Princess. The more docile ones remained in the designated areas on the island in front of Hart House and (for the faculty and staff) on the bank to the east of Hart House. But there were opportunities no enterprising mountaineer could avoid. So they climbed everywhere there was a foothold. To the top of the observatory. On the observatory windows. On top of a press bus stationed near Soldiers' Tower. Up trees on Hart House terrace. And even up to the top of the memorial to the 1914-18 dead which runs south of the tower.

Every now and then some of the watchers would break out in The Blue and White, but no song ever completely caught the crowd's fancy. Somebody even started "Aupres de ma Blonde," but it didn't have any luck either. When Hart House carillon boomed out, it had complete supremacy.

Most of the students were worried about not being able to see the Royal couple when they finally arrived. "This is one of the few occasions I'm glad of my extra height," remarked one girl. And another one remarked "It's funny the way the tallest people always get in front."

"Do you think she'll turn around and wave?" asked another student. "It's our only hope."

A few people were prudent enough to bring along a periscope, but these items, so common during the previous royal visit, were very rare. Here and there throughout the crowd could be seen a camera held high overhead by its owner as he attempted to take a picture.

The royal visit brought out the color the university really sees. The gold robes of Chancellor Massey, the blue and ermine of the President, and the many-colored hoods of the faculty. The gold braid of the police inspectors, and the red coats of the mounties. The blue bunting and Canadian flags above the Hart House door. The motorcycles and speeding cars. And the bright new tie that Sam, the Hart House Hall Porter, was sporting.

When the Princess did arrive, a cry came from the crowd. But it was something less than enthusiastic. Everybody was too busy looking to really shout. And they were not, as were the faculty in the Great Hall, admonished to let down their reserve and cheer.

Drama, Round Table SAC Radio Program

The SAC Radio Committee will be divided into two separate workshops, it was announced Friday at a meeting of the committee. This year the dramatic section will be under Harry Giles, III UC, while Rocky Martino, Grad, will look after the Round Table.

Martino explained that the Committee had fifteen minutes on CJRT-FM before Christmas. CJRT-FM is the frequency modulation station operated by the Ryerson Institute of Technology.

"If the programs are good before Christmas then we have half an hour promised on CKFH or CHUM for the new year," Martino went on, but stressed the fact that this will depend upon the response received on CJRT-FM. He outlined the programs for the two workshops stating that those who wanted to do dramatic work should join one of the four dramatic clubs on the campus, as they and the Royal Conservatory Drama group will handle this part of the work. The dramatic section of the committee will include all those who want to act, write scripts, direct and produce. "But they have to belong to a drama club," Martino pointed out.

The Round Table will be handled by Martino plus a supporting group of people. The duties of the Round Table committee will be to pick topics for discussion, choose the speakers (who will be, Martino said, prominent personalities and students) and act in consultation with members of the staff. Martino declared that most of the work here would be derived from contacting people and then making them feel at home on the campus, once they had arrived.

"The group will choose a subject and the speakers a week ahead with alternates. The Round Table will consist of one public personality, a staff member and one student," Martino explained. "Harry Rasky of CKEY will act as moderator."

ther to usher them into Hart House immediately or remain outside.

Elizabeth halted and with Philip turned around, momentarily waving slightly in answer to the shouting of the crowd before entering the building. The scheduled three minute appearance occupied approximately fifty seconds.

Their disappearance into the building prompted a rush by a portion of the crowd on the U of T ushers, who struggled until finally they were successful in holding the throng back to the steps.

The Princess and Philip walked through the quadrangle, where the band of the 48th Highlanders played, to the Great Hall. Accompanied by the three official hosts and invited faculty members, they left Hart House by the East door.

Their appearance outside was joined by a rather weak version of the "Toronto" song. Vaguely smiling, Elizabeth and Philip approached the stone wall and waved slightly to the crowd, who then cheered and applauded.

Wishing goodbye to their hosts and thanking them, the royal couple shook hands and joined Ontario Lieut. Gov. Ray Lawson and Mrs. Lawson, who accompanied them along the road to the Parliament Buildings.

Army, Navy and Air Force servemen and university corps alternately lined the road, holding the throngs behind the ropes. During the morning, their arrival in front of the crowd resulted in violent vocal protests as their vision was thereby reduced.

A bevy of cameramen situated themselves on the Observatory roof; others stood on the stone walls in front of Hart House. Blurred faces peered through some University College windows to view the couple, while several eager students climbed to the top of a large press bus parked nearby.

The perfect cloudless and sunny day encouraged many to view the proceedings at the University grounds.

Just prior to their Hart House appearance, the Royal procession toured the front campus, which was partially circled by Army personnel.

Poor Turnout At Engineers' Fall Election

A very light vote turned out for the Engineering Society's fall by-elections Friday, at which Jim Allan, IV SPS, was elected the Society's first vice-president.

Only 37.5% of the eligible voters turned out Friday, according to Engineering Society President Doug Sherk, IV SPS, as compared to about 80% at the spring elections. Sherk said the election committee feels the low turnout was due to lack of vigorous campaigning before the election.

Other candidates elected were George Hayman, third year SAC rep; R. E. Turner, External Affairs rep; J. L. McFarlane, president of the Class of 5T5 and D. W. Sime, secretary-treasurer of the Class of 5T5.

J. T. Drummond was elected chairman of the Electrical Club by acclamation. Also acclaimed was E. H. Scott as secretary of the Society.

Royal Visit

"It is my very great privilege to offer a welcome from the University, from our hearts", the Chancellor said in his welcoming speech. "We have had the honour of receiving royalty before, and are honoured that you have found time in your crowded schedule." The Chancellor assured the royal couple that their visit would be remembered for many years to come, and the rich meaning it held would be cherished.

As Elizabeth rose to answer the speech, she reminded us very much of any girl of 25 about to address an august body of professors, and a little frightened by the prospect. She drew a white paper from her purse, and read, in a soft, musical voice, her tribute to the University of Toronto.

"I think that this university has indeed followed its own motto, 'Velut arbor aevo', for its roots are deeply and firmly set in the soil of Canada", she told its representatives.

Then, the formality over, Elizabeth was shown to a lectern on the dais, just a few feet from the spot where the cameramen and reporters were watching her every move. She flashed a smile as she saw a touch of home in the signatures of her father and mother on the open page of the book she was to sign. As she took the pen, Philip, standing a few paces from her, began to move his hand to the inside of his coat, but, reassured that the pen would work, changed his mind. When his turn came to sign the book, he grinned, made a remark to the President, laughed, and after examining the pen, added his own name.

To renewed applause, much craning of necks and the weeping of some visibly-moved matrons, the royal party stepped down from the platform and left Great Hall. It took one more minute to recover from the impressiveness of the short ceremony, and then the cream of the university surged forward, rushing to examine the signatures.

It took only three minutes, but the pageant had given an ample reward for the many man-hours which had gone into its planning. We could hear the cheers outside as the procession left Hart House, but we were far more interested in joining the scramble around the book. And two neat signatures and the date were visible souvenirs of a glimpse into the realm of kings.

Blues Win

penalties. Murray Hadlow was tossed out of the game. On the next play, Bewley bobbled the ball and the Mustangs recovered on the Blue 26. Unable to make yards, the Mustangs called on Obal to kick and he booted a long one to Oneschuck who was rouged for the first Mustang tally of the game.

Taking over on their own 25, the Blues started to roll again and had racked up 30 yards on the ground when Western recovered a Dale fumble on the Blue 50-yard line. The Mustangs marched to the Blue 11 and then gave Varsity the ball on another fumble.

After an exchange of kicks, the Blues roared right back into scoring position when Pete Hynbida snatched Church's pass out of the air and ran it 30 yards to the Western 10. But a poor snap cost the Blues 16 yards, and when Haig was thrown for a 7-yard loss on the next play, Oneschuck dropped back and kicked a point for the Blues.

The Mustangs took to the air with a vengeance in the last ten minutes of the final quarter, completing 7 passes in 10 plays. With 30 seconds to go, Farley carried over for the Mustangs from the Blue 7-yard line. Fracas converted. The temperature went up again and Al Brown was given the heave-ho along with McMurdo of the Mustangs. The final whistle found the Blues in possession on their own 16-yard line.

BABY BLUES TRAMPLE WESTERN

Go That Way Bill!

Harry Hyde, one member of a Varsity line that caused a lot of trouble for the Mustangs last Saturday is shown throwing a cross body block on Don Beatty of the Mustangs to clear the road for Bill McFarlane of the Blues.

It was this kind of blocking that made the Blue running attack Varsity's most potent weapon against the Mustangs. Harry came up from the Intermediates for Saturday's game and turned in a top performance. McFarlane rolled up a lot of yardage for the Blues in just the maner shown above.

Saturday's Heroes

By JACK STURMAN

The purple and white ogre has been destroyed. The stranglehold of Neanderthal football squads from Western in this league's post-war period has finally been crushed and the perennial miseries of Bob Masterson, (who was beginning to think that Varsity was a grid mentor's graveyard), have been eased considerably.

To the 23,000 and some odd denizens who took up positions on the sunny slopes of Varsity Stadium Saturday afternoon, it was more than a little obvious that the Blues were really dedicated to the Yates Cup mission.

The manner in which the Blues' line has galvanized itself into an end-to-end hunk of armour-plate is, to us at least, one of the more gratifying aspects of the current Varsity victory skein. Continuously punctured with injuries, the men up front, veterans and rookies alike, have still managed to give their backfield tremendous support on offense and come through in the defensive clutch too.

Freshman Blue, Bruce Jackson, erstwhile Goliath from East York Collegiate, made his best showing of the young season on Saturday. Jimmy Bell was his hard-hitting effective self. Hank Tamowski's defensive play was nothing short of immaculate, Jimmy Evans and Joe Harris were in for tackles that must have jarred the Mustank ball carriers loose from their necks.

Brainy Steve Oneschuk, the one-man radar screen on pass defence, contributed much to the lassoing, hog-tieing and shooing of the Mustangs. "Honest" Steve, as the crowd have good-naturedly dubbed him, proved to be the blow-torch of the Varsity backfield. His gifted running and his alertness reduced the Western aerial attack to shembles for the major portion of the game, much to the frustration of Western flinger Murray Henderson.

Half-time capers were lessened by the failure of the Western band of drum-majorettes to make an appearance on the sun-kist field. Story was that some of them got lost in the Royal shuffle. Helen Mackie the new Varsity twirler caught on with the crowd . . . many of them thought it was Hilka back out there. The Varsity band showed well in a Hawaiian War Chant routine that had the band dotted over the field in the shape of a swaying palm tree. Leave us have more of this stuff in the home-games to come Mr. Guthro.

Murray Hadlow's rhubarb with some Mustang players, which caused his banishment from the game in the last half, was not the only high-spirited outburst. Big Bruce Boa, a Western middle who was sitting on the bench, got lathered up about something and darted off onto the field in a wild rage only to be stopped by a cross-body from teammate Murray Henderson and a reprimand from Coach Metras.

Int. Soccer Blues Upset Guelph 3-0

Last Friday, the Intermediate squad of the Soccer Blues opened the new season with a 3-0 victory over the O.A.C. intermediates at Guelph.

Play was brisk from the opening whistle with the Baby Blues carrying the play into the O.A.C.'s end. Time after time the Varsity squad pressed goalward and were finally awarded their first goal from the foot of their fleet outside-right Al Bowler. Within minutes of his first effort this promising right footer got his second counter, a cross from the right wing which was deflected into the net by one of the defending backs. The third and final tally came late in the first half with Matt Derzai picking the right hand corner of the twine from a pile-up of players in front of the goal.

The second half saw the 'Aggies' press hard but were stopped at each play by the stalwart defense of the visiting Blues.

The junior addition of the Blues show definite promise from this, their first game. Stand-outs on the tea mwere Al Bowler at outside right, Don Rope, who played a solid game at centre-half, and Ted Kersey and Doug Quirk who made up the brick wall defense line.

The line-up: Anderson, Kersey, Quirk, McKinley, Rope, Rundle, Bowler, Derzai, Stainton, Ashburn, Elmer. Subs: Munday, Machut, Trolving.

Syl O'Hara of the Mustangs found little protection as he tried to go around end on this play last Saturday afternoon. In there to make the tackle are Pete Hynbida and another Blue, while Al Brown brings up the rear.

Fumbles Trouble Colts As Intermeds Win 14-7 In First League Battle

A strong line and a fumble happy Western backfield combined to give the Baby Blues an important 14-7 victory in their first game at London last Friday. The Intermediate Blues built up an 8-0 lead in the first half and finished off the scoring in the last seconds of the game when Terry Housley scored a major on a quick opener from the Colts' 6 yard line.

It was the old story of the team with the stronger line having the edge as the Blues blocked three Western kicks in the first half and another in the second. The Western backfield just couldn't hold on to the ball. They reached Blue territory only once in the first half and were stopped then by two successive fumbles.

Colt Terry Sumner was the goat, two of his fumbles resulting in Blue scores. On the first, Ted Lansky fell on it at the Western 22 and after the Blues failed to advance the ball on two downs, Bill Burley kicked a single point. A while later, Sumner dropped a Burley punt on the Western one yard line and it was recovered by Roy McMurtry. Two plays later, Doug Geekie took the ball over on a quarterback sneak and then moved back to convert his own major.

The Blues continued to overshadow the Western squad in the second quarter. About half way through, Al George broke through the Western line and blocked Wayne Burns' kick. The ball bounded back into the end zone and Burns managed to pick it up but was tackled by George to complete the scoring in the first half.

In the second half the Colts finally came to life, and again it was a fumble which resulted in the score. Western's Don Prowse picked up Fawcett's fumble on the Colts' 49. Western then marched down the field for a well deserved touchdown. Bill Swan took a pitch-out from quarterback Andy Maslak and galloped to the Toronto 36. Then the Colts took it over on a razzle dazzle play. Schomburg made a sensational leaping catch of Getty's pass on the five and lateralled to Maslak who went over standing up.

The Western scoring was finished when Inside Stan McIntee knocked the ball from Burley's hands and recovered it. The Colts were forced to kick on their third down and Fawcett was rouged by Swan.

In the dying minutes of the game the Blues staged a great fifty yard touchdown march, the highlight being a 20 yard Fitzhenry to Smith pass. Geekie and Fitzhenry combined to complete 8 out of 14 passes for the Blues. Housley and Fawcett did most of the ball carrying for Toronto and handled the job well.

Sportswoman

Trinity field at 1 o'clock means Women's Softball these fine free days. On Friday games were scheduled between PHE II's and St. Mike's and Vic I's and US I's.

PHE II's defaulted to the "double blue" leaving a clear field for the Vic-UC match.

UC scored heavily on the pitcher, tallying nine points in the first three innings of play. Sparked by a home run from the bat of Marg Rosewarne, the Vic nine struggled to boost their count. However the shrewd pitching of Marg Craw held the Vic girls in check. Final score 9 to 2 for UC.

Blue Soccerites Win First Contest

Last Friday the Senior Soccer Blues travelled to Guelph to open the Intercollegiate soccer season against O.A.C., and came home with a 7-4 victory.

The game was fast and thrill-packed as Varsity came from behind three times to tie the score, and then to go on and build up their three goal margin.

At the start of the game the Blues' defence was a little uncertain, and before they had settled down the Aggies' centre-forward Luisey broke through and slid the ball past the Blues' goalkeeper to go ahead 1-0. The Varsity forward line then started to click, and it was not long before Ken Jessop shot the equalizer from a pass by Manuel Atucha on the left wing.

The Aggies started to press again, and were awarded a free kick well outside the Varsity penalty area. Their left half back, Anderson, sent a high looping shot towards the goal that Bibby Lane, the Blues' goalkeeper failed to see properly, and the ball grazed the upright to skip into the net to put the Aggies in front 2-1.

The Blues quickly tied it up when Atucha again broke loose on the left wing, and sent a pass to Bobby Ross on the right wing who banged it into the net pronto. One of the O.A.C.'s players was injured on the play, but despite the Aggies' protests, the score was allowed, and again the game was tied at 2-2.

This seemed to spark the Blues' forward line, as they began to run circles around the O.A.C. defence, and Bob Antoni, and Ken Jessop combined to produce the Third Varsity goal. Again the Blues reckoned without Luisey, Guelph's starry centre forward, who once more broke loose, and tied the score at 3-3 to end the first half.

The second half was a different story, except for a few seconds at the beginning, when Luisey put the Aggies in the lead again on another break through 4-3. Then the steady Varsity pressure began to tell, as Bob Antoni scored two in a row to put the Blues in the lead. The Aggies' defence apart, as Bobby Ross added two more, and Bob Antoni ended the scoring with a nice header into the net.

Women Archers Cop Second Spot At Guelph Meet

Al was not Gold for Blue and White representatives over the past weekend. While the Senior Football Blues were knocking over the opposition, their sisters on the Varsity Women's Archery team didn't fare so well in Intercollegiate competition held at Guelph on Saturday. As usual in Women's Archery, the Blue and White from Toronto placed second out of the six colleges, losing out to the perennial champs, the Guelph Aggies of OAC.

The Aggies compiled a score of exactly 1600 points in winning the Championship, while the Varsity Squad amassed a total of 1252. The Varsity total came just one year late however, as this would have been good enough to take the Championship last year. Queen's, Western, McGill and McMaster completed the lineup in the runner-up positions, with Queen's amassing 1174 points to place third.

Jean Stackle of OAC copped the individual scoring honors of the Contest, shooting 474. Mary Macdonald led the Varsity scorers and was second in the individual scoring list, shooting 404, along with Catherine Pringle, also of Guelph.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Two worthwhile British films are on view right now. More than just British origin is common to the films; both attack, though with different emphasis, the problem of the unworldly scientist wrenched out of his laboratory and faced with the complex human world.

SEVEN DAYS TO NOON (at Shea's) turns this situation into a tight suspense thriller. NO HIGHWAY IN THE SKY (at Odeon-Hyland) is Frank Capra-ish, mixing suspense with situation comedy, where the Common Man finally triumphs against All.

SEVEN DAYS TO NOON finds a small, ordinary-looking professor (Barry Jones) loose in London with an atomic bomb. Demented after a prolonged battle with his conscience about the results and the motives of the atomic bomb research he is engaged in, the professor has sent an ultimatum to the Prime Minister that he will detonate the weapon in the heart of government if work on atomic weapons is not immediately stopped. The H-Hour is noon Sunday next. And in the seven days to noon, police officials and the military try to find the professor in the city of London as well as evacuating the danger area.

Barry Jones is extremely believable as the confused professor who wants to wake the world up to the danger of total annihilation. Shots of his little 60-year-old figure scuttling around the deserted streets of the evacuated night-time City while huge searchlights and burly soldiers search are cinema at its finest.

As the faded middle-aged blonde who shelters the professor, Olive Sloane is outstanding. Other competent principals are Andre Morell, Hugh Cross and Sheila Manahan, who look and act more like real people than movie stars.

Largest credit for the tidy impact of SEVEN DAYS TO NOON is due to the producing-directing of the Boulton twins, Roy and John, who also conceived the idea. The city of London, both crowded and starkly deserted, is the actor which steals the picture. And of special interest to most out-of-town students, the professor meets a landlady who is the archetype of so many professional landladies who hover around the university area, complete with fag dangling from lip, and innumerable cats.

NO HIGHWAY IN THE SKY is not a world-beater, and it is overshadowed by the excellence of SEVEN DAYS. But it is a satisfying film.

An Anglo-American work, Hollywoodians James Stewart, Marlene Dietrich and director Henry Koster head the 20th-Century-Fox production which was made in Britain. But the American stars are given solidity by the stout support of natives Glynis Johns, Jack Hawkins and many other familiar faces. It is this British help which gives NO HIGHWAY IN THE SKY a roundedness Hollywood probably could not have achieved.

James Stewart is an ivory-tower scientist in a research laboratory of an airline. He figures that the alloy used in the newest aircraft in operation can take just so much vibration; after a certain number of flying hours, the tail will disintegrate. To prove his thesis, he is sent to investigate a crash of one of the planes in question. He finds himself flying across the Atlantic in another liner of the same type which is in the danger zone of flying time.

As an absent-minded man whose life is consumed by his work and leaves no time for the human side (familiar stereotype this), Stewart does a good job. Dietrich has very little to do with what goes on, but adds a real sizzle of the old-tyme Glamour that Time magazine was in mourning about recently.

There hasn't been much ballyhoo about NO HIGHWAY IN THE SKY, and I wonder if the quiet advertising by the Hyland Theatre is not keeping away many customers who would thoroughly enjoy the film.

While SEVEN DAYS TO NOON can be recommended without reservation, Shea's regular organist, Al Bollington, is something else again. (In fairness to Mr. Bollington, I should say I have never been enthusiastic about his playing.) But after the harrowing suspense of the feature, we are in the mood for something soothing. Instead we get the Bollington bombast in a medley of British tunes. An organ can shake the theatre walls, and Mr. Bollington can't seem to forget that. I am sorry, but I got a headache.

After some thin bill-of-fare like the standard Warner Brothers musical, Mr. Bollington, some heavy bass and loud clangings of something or the other would be just fine. But not after a couple of hours of suspense, please. Much better a sing-song with slides.

MUSIC REVIEW

Guiomar Novaes

Toronto's musical season opened on Thursday evening with a recital by Brazilian pianist Guiomar Novaes. Mme. Novaes is not as well-known here as elsewhere; it is therefore not surprising that her program consisted mainly of reliable classics. The first part of the concert included the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, and the Capriccio on the Departure of a Brother, by Bach, the sonata "Les Adieux" by Beethoven, and the sonata in B minor (opus 58) by Chopin. To conclude, Mme. Novaes played a group of modern Brazilian compositions.

Mme. Novaes gives the impression of vast reserves of force in her playing. She plays louder passages with a relaxed, easily sustained mezzo-forte, and only very seldom calls on the full dynamic resources of the instrument. As a result, her playing has an intimacy and warmth seldom heard on the concert platform.

Her climaxes are subtly arranged, and often reached more by rhythmical than by dynamical changes. This sort of treatment suited the Beethover better than the Chopin, but was most strikingly successful in the contemporary Brazilian group. This consisted of a number of short descriptive pieces by Pinto and Villa-Lobos, which would have suffered from a rougher approach.

Mme Novaes' playing is not of the rabble-rousing sort that packs Massey Hall, but it gives a quieter kind of satisfaction in the more intimate atmosphere of Eaton Auditorium. Toronto will do well if all the concerts of the coming season are as enjoyable as this

Chris Helleiner.

Hardly Worth It...

Con-fession

Last Wednesday night a sinister, shadowy form stole across the campus. Slowly and with extreme caution it approached the "island" in front of Hart House.

Who was it? Someone furtively escaping from a secret love tryst behind the Medical Building? Was it someone arriving early, in order to make sure of a good viewpoint of the Princess? Or was it Sidney Smith looking for a place to bury the money from the new Dominion (Massey Commission) grants.

No, it was none of these. It was me—yes, me. And now, sobbing with emotion, I am ready to write my confession. . . . Yes, I am the one who broke into the University Bookstore. I couldn't help myself, an inner compulsion drove me to that ugly little building—I had to get inside!!!

Quietly and deftly I cased the situation. This would have to be a fast job. I managed to pick the locks of both main entrances, but was unable to get through the turnstiles and so was foiled.

I decided to try the back way. My entrance here was easily accomplished. I merely turned around one of the old cannons to the west of the building and loading it with shot (made up of hard apples bought in Hart House), I blasted out a gaping hole in the rear of the building.

Groping through the smoke I entered the Store and quickly made my way to the object of my desire. It is strange how, in periods of great emotional strain, one will notice things that never caught the eye before. For the first time in this building I noticed there were books around. And while I questioned their existence they questioned mine.

But back to the plot. With great speed and cunning I passed through the great maze of machines and at last with a few single operations had my hands on the object of my desire. Gurgling with fiendish laughter I slipped out of the store as quietly as I had come in, patted my trusty cannon and sped from the campus.

But honest, fellas, I didn't steal any money—I was just dying to get some cigarettes.

The Visit

Under a glare of publicity that has seldom been equalled in this country, Canada continues to welcome the Royal couple. Imagination, primed by an almost over-zealous press, has taken over the reins, and for the next month no move that Elizabeth and Philip make will miss the attention of a fascinated public.

When the Princess and her handsome husband arrived at The University of Toronto on Saturday morning, the first thing that struck observers was the all too obvious fact that this young woman seemed to be worn out.

This was to have been a holiday trip. Its keynote was to have been informality. Whether these ideas have remained uppermost in the minds of those who have planned the trip seems open to serious question. Press reports from Ottawa indicated that many of the ordinary people, whom the Princess expressed a special desire to meet, felt that in some vague kind of way they were being left out of things.

Here in Toronto they certainly saw the people, the vast crowds who gathered to watch them as they moved along the official routes. And the people saw them.

Yet somehow it doesn't seem quite right. And the clincher was the often repeated remark about how tired Elizabeth looked. It was so obvious that it even managed to make a headline in the downtown press.

The response to the visit has been tremendous. In difficult times we tend to regard symbols of stability and sanity such as the Crown represents with an intensity and interest that almost defies description. And when such symbols find their expression in personalities as impressive as those of Elizabeth and Philip, the people take them to their hearts with a sincerity that has depth and sympathy.

That is perhaps the main reason that we are so interested in their every move. This woman besides being our future Queen, is also a woman, and everything that we can learn of her, particularly while she is among us, will be lapped up by a news-conscious public. And the press corps, though harried, doesn't miss much.

Here in Toronto we had the feeling that too much was trying to be jammed into the schedule. Fifteen minutes was barely enough to get the couple through the routine that had been worked out for Hart House. There was too much whisking away to follow the plan. And those who had gathered may have felt that it was all over before it had really begun.

It was a memorable visit. A lot of the cynics have given up the ghost. But we hope that things begin to quiet down a bit and that more of the informality enters into the trip as the Princess and Duke move across the country. Symbols, unlike goldfish, thrive better when they are not too minutely exposed to the public eye.

Not For Knowledge

Stages of Ignorance

The Following Article, Reprinted from the Vancouver Daily Province, is by One of Canada's Outstanding Humorists. Nichol, Who Got His Start on The University of British Columbia's Undergratudate Paper, The Ubyssey, Has Published Several Volumes, Including "Sense and Nonsense", and "The Roving I".

By ERIC NICOL

Lectures began recently for 5,500 students at UBC, including 1,100 freshmen who walked into the wrong rooms.

The first couple of days of lectures have their own special charm. The complicated machinery of registration rumbles to a stop, and there you are sitting beside this guy with the teeth. Or, if you're lucky beside the girl with the sweater. You are never lucky.

The crisp autumn air is filled with the thin whistle of big frogs from little ponds all over the province, as they deflate in this strange, vast lake. For the first few days all the frogs are equal, the dumb frogs bright as the smart frogs, the ugly frogs thinking themselves mirrored in the handsome frogs.

These are the days of introduction to the new courses, new horizons. Wafted on a beckoning finger of bad smells, the scienceman enters his chosen career of making the worst smell ever.

The pretty girls will be taking psychology, the plain girls home economics.

In the pharmacy building future pharmacists are preparing to take drugs, and in the theological college divinity students plan to take up the Devil, Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Already the cafeteria is burbling with convivial knots of future lawyers and industrial executives, while alone in the botanical gardens, grazing sadly on his sandwiches, a future poet is seeing symbols in the compost.

Over in the fine new memorial gym, the athletes are eyeing each other's muscles speculatively, each confident of having a brain to boot and sure that the big hulk with the pin head couldn't have got into the university without a shoehorn.

The campus is alive and young again with all of them. There is the suspenseful buzz of the class as it waits for the first appearance of the professor, the front seats unpopular and occupied only by a smattering of the near-sighted, the shy and timid on the flanks, the back row solid with sceptics.

A dramatic moment, when the professor enters the classroom for the first time. The sudden silence. He walks to the lectern. If he steps on a piece of chalk now he's cooked. He doesn't. The class is sizing him up, taking him in through its very pores. Prince or rat? Pill or push-over? A whole year of this guy.

The professor savors the silence to the full. He will never get it again, quite, for the rest of the year. As soon as he opens his mouth the class will start discovering his weakness: he's human. He knows his subject, but his nose twitches when he talks. He's a sucker for an irrelevant question. He thinks he's funny, ha, ha, ha. And thus this doctor of philosophy or science, this mighty cerebrum, this scholar whose name has a noble retinue of letters of the alphabet, comes to be known to all but himself as "Old Beaky" or "Droopy Drawers."

The professor will impress the freshmen for slightly longer. Freshmen are ready to be impressed by anybody who knows for sure which side is up. Their sophistication ends at knowing the course to the washroom.

Sophomores, of course, know everything. The remaining three years of their course are merely a formality. Having been in the university library once, they know how to take out a book, in case they should want to read one in later life. Ask them anything.

Juniors, and especially seniors, have become aware of curious chinks in their omniscience which widen right up to the moment of graduation. While in the coffee shop, never again to be impressed by anything, lounges the post-graduate student. Generally speaking the difference between a post-graduate student and a freshman is that the post-graduate student knows he's ignorant. After the all he needs is a briefcase and he's ready to teach.

Some of the folks frown on these first days of university initiation, evidently thinking that these young people should munch their education as stolidly as cattle. The university represents not only the sum of human knowledge but indirectly the much larger sum of human ignorance. The kids that started lectures yesterday have to take a running jump into the large unknown. Let's give them a little room, here, seeing as we're just watching.

Sartorial Anarchy

Editor, The Varsity:

Provocative articles such as your editorial of Thursday on Hart House dress promote a healthy mental state on the university.

However the using of vague terminology and false statements do not aid in the development of a right mental attitude towards the problem of dress.

May I point out to you that the Standard of Dress Rule is not "the latest edict of the Board of Stewards". The rule has been in effect for at least 20 years and with the change in Warden the Rule was not carried out to the last letter.

The need for a campaign to remind the students has arisen out of the sartorial anarchy of certain individuals eating in the Great Hall during the last two years. The campaign was aimed at centering the Freshman's attention upon a more mature standard of behavior at the university as compared with high school.

You asked for the Board to show leadership. This I believe was done last year when committee members eating at the head table were ordered to wear a jacket and tie — However there has been NO EDICT ORDERING MEMBERS TO WEAR JACKET AND TIE. The Board has just given more light to its long standing REQUEST asking that members dress in conformity with the dignity of the House. The vast degree of discussion about jacket and tie has arisen, I believe, from conscience as to what the dignity of the House deserves.

I believe, as I think you do, Mr. Editor, that such a structure and tradition as Hart House does arouse a certain amount of spontaneous respect. The Board has been merely reminding members along what lines this respect can be shown. If the individual does not wish to show his respect, then the problem is the individual's and not the Board's.

It is pleasing to observe that our modest campaign directed mainly at the Freshmen has brought about a considerable improvement in the dress of our members.

Publicity Director of Hart House.

Cyclotron ?

In spite of popular rumor, this is not an experimental spaceship. Nor is it a cyclotron. It is just the boiler tank for the new heating plant the university is building south of Russell Street and west of St. George, across from Knox College. The boiler is 16 feet wide, 36 feet high and 40 feet long. It will produce 75,000 lbs. of steam per hour using pulverized fuel, which will start through a network of underground pipes at a temperature of 387 degrees Fahrenheit. Six men will manage the equipment which will have automatic controls and should be ready by next March. The old heating plant, located next to the Anatomy Building, is forty years old and is now considered outdated and inadequate for the heating requirements of the university. A 20 per cent increase in efficiency is expected with the installation of the new heating plant. Eventually electrical power for the entire University will be delivered to the new plant from which it will be distributed.

Bachelorhood OK Says St. Hilda's

Men still have a chance to remain bachelors.

Last night the St. Hilda's College Literary Institute defeated by a vote of 84-25 the resolution that "Men should be compelled to marry at the age of 25".

Miss Maclean (Grad), speaking for the affirmative, stated that the greatest good for the greatest number prevails in a fully married society. She painted a glowing future for Canada due to increased population resulting from compulsory marriages. "More marriages will produce more children, who will require more clothes and food, and the manufacturers and farmers will profit," she stated. Women would no longer need to concentrate on catching a man, but could spend their energies on raising a family.

Christie Russell, IV, considered that men were not mature enough for marriage at 25, though she doubted that they ever really grew up. "There are some men whom no woman should be forced to marry." She stated that women would lose immeasureably under the proposed system; career girls, beautiful secretaries and chorus lines would become things of the past, and the romance of life would be destroyed.

Miss Russell questioned the advisability of increasing the population since high schools in North York were already so overcrowded.

Miss Osler (Grad), stated that compulsion was not necessary, since most men were very susceptible to marriage at the stated age. She portrayed the happily married man at the height of his powers and his adaptability to curlers and diapers. "At 25 man has come through the valley of romance and is ready for the happily ever after," she said.

Lorna McDougall, II, sketched the horrors of a black market in choice quality wives, a shortage of wedding rings and a state control of marriage. Conscientious objectors against marriage would soon fill our Canadian north woods. Taxes would increase to pay for increased baby bonuses, housing developments and dependents' allowances.

Her final point brought many members across the floor to the side of the opposition. "We don't want marriage-conscious men," she said. "If they were thinking along the same lines as we are, all the fun would be gone."

Start Study In Air Law At McGill

Montreal (CUP) — Opening of the Institute of Air Law for law graduates from all over the world at McGill University this fall marks the second unique graduate school to begin operation at the Montreal university this fall. A short time ago President F. Cyril James announced the opening of an Institute of Islamic Studies, the first of its kind in North America.

Corpses, Beards Just Propaganda

By ERNEST SHULMAN

Contrary to popular opinion, a chess club is not a morgue without the corpses. It can be a lively place at times, especially when the deadpans are in a good mood. Take the Hart House Chess Club for example. Here the interested observer can have his misconceptions of what a chess game is and what its devotees are like, painlessly corrected.

In the good old days, two or three years ago, the characters who were accustomed to inhabit the chess room in Hart House gave to the place a distinct atmosphere, which has never since been equalled. However, this club with its long history and national reputation is still able to destroy the myths surrounding the royal game.

It is not true and never has been true that chess is just for old men. There is a story about a man with a long beard which used to overlap onto the board while he played his games. Through the use of lightning manoeuvres with pieces hidden behind the underbrush, he developed what is now known as the ambush attack. This tale does not indicate that older men have a superior grasp of strategy. In reality, young men of all countries make up a large proportion of the best players.

Another fallacy must be squelched. Anyone who believes that a great deal of thought goes into every chess game has just never been in the Hart House Chess Club at noon-hour. Not only is deep thinking unknown during that period, but it is also impossible. A certain degree of noise makes concentration difficult.

There are those who will say that chess takes a long time to play. They will point to the case of the man who sat at the board for three days before his opopnent discovered he was dead. That is simply propaganda. Most games in Hart House are played in less than half an hour. The odd game may take six or seven hours, but one must simply take a dull lecture in order to receive the sam impression of passing time.

Now we come to the cowardly accusation that chess is, after all, just a dull game. However those individuals resorting to this trickery in order to cover up their inability to understand the game, will be happy to know that kriegspiel has been invented to add variety to the normal method of playing. In kriegspiel, the players sit back to back with their own boards, andare never told what each other's moves are. There is a referee, keeping the position as it really is, who only announces what pieces are taken off and what pawn captures are possible. Blind decisions, however, do not occupy as important a position in regular chess.

On the whole, then, chess is not quite what most people imagine it to be.

Seek More Volunteers For COTC

The C.O.T.C. is still looking for men to fill their ranks. Captain Murphy stated that while the quota is about 200 this year, there have been from forty to fifty applications to date.

The courses offered this year by C.O.T.C. are in Military History, Military Geography and Organization and Administration in the army. These subjects are taught by members of the University faculty, and will not clash with the University timetable. Also, there is a twenty - week summer training course. This takes care of two-thirds of the hours of industrial training required by some faculties. However, this fall the C.O.T.C. is trying to have the summer training take care of the entire number of hours instead.

Lieutenant Townley said at the U.N.T.D. office that they have reached about two-thirds of their quota. About twenty-five more applicants are still needed.

There are courses available in Seamanship, Pilotage, Navigation, and Communication plus the regular naval lectures. Their summer course consists of fourteen weeks. Of these, six are spent at sea. Last year, cadets from the east coast sailed to England and those from the west coast to Hawaii. The remaining eight weeks are spent at the two shore bases, Halifax and Victoria.

The response to the R.C.A.F. has been excellent, Flight-Lieutenant Hewer stated. But, further applications will be considered.

This year a more interesting and practical programme than last year's is planned for the winter. Also drill will be included in the training.

Liberal, Political Science Clubs Open 1951-52 Political Season

The first full scale meeting of a University political club this season will be that of the University of Toronto Liberals tonight in the Junior Common Room of University College. Tonight's meeting will be in thhe form of an organization meeting and will consist of Movies and controversial discussions, starting at 8.00 p.m.

John Medcof, President of the University Liberal Club will lead off the meeting with an intensive outline of the year's Liberal progrom. He will outline the part of the Liberals in the coming Campus election and in the Mock Parliaments coming after it.

Movies from the National Film Board will be featured as relief from the more serious discussions. These will include 'The St. Laurent Story', 'The United Nations and Korea.' Another on Korea entitled 'Every Man's World' will run for a total of about forty minutes.

The highlight of the evening will be the pro and con discussions of Price Controls VS Credit Controls which will be led by John Medcof, III UC, and Ralph Sceane, III Vic. Said Medcof, in commenting on the issue:

"There is no question as the whether controls are needed, it is rather, a question of what kind of controls are needed. The cost of living has continued to rise, and as a result we must have restrictions of some kind. Unless credit controls work, we will have to resort to a system of controls such as we had during the war"

Considering the othe point of view, Ralph Sceane pointed out that if we are going to have any price controls, we must have complete control and rationing to make it work.

"Since their installation might endure for at least 10 years, the competitive business mind would disappear, and free enterprise would suffer a mortal blow."

E. B. JOLLIFFE

The leader of the CCF party in Ontario, Mr. E. B. Jolliffe, will be the guest speaker at the first Political Science Club meeting of the year. It will be held on Wednesday, Oct. 13th at 7:30 p.m. in Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College. The topic for the evening will be "Democracy in crisis."

Mr. Jolliffe has been leader of the CCF for nine years and in that time has brought his party in as the official opposition in the provincial house. Born in China, he was educated there, in Guelph Collegiate, and in Victoria College at the University of Toronto, and won a Rhodes Scholarship in 1931. He then went to England to study law at Christ Church Oxford and was called to the English Bar in 1934.

Returning to Canada that year, he attended Osgoode Hall, and was called to the Bar in 1936.

While in England, Mr. Jolliffe had joined the British Labour Party, and on his return to Canada he immediately transferred to the Canadian counterpart, the CCF party.

The CCF party at that time was quite untried, and only struggling to gani a foothold in the political arena. He served as a federal CCF member from the Toronto area for eight years prior to his election as leader of the CCF party in Ontario in 1942. Although defeated at the polls in 1945, he continued to gain power as a provincial leader. In 1948 the CCF party came back as the Official Opposition at Queen's Park, with Ted Jolliffe the leader, at the head of a group of 34 CCF members.

Debate Frats At UC Parl't

Four debaters from UC will debate the resolution that "fraternities are detrimental to higher education" when the UC Debating Parliament meets for the first time at 4 p.m. today in the Junior Common Room. The speakers will be Marion Hogarth, IV UC, and Doug Gibson, III UC, who are against the motion and Vern Turner, IV UC, and Ken Jarvis, IV UC, supporting the motion.

Gibson told The Varsity last night that he believed that fraternities on this campus fulfill a service for the university which could not be so efficiently met by any other system under the same conditions.

He said that for the individual the service is greatly magnified, lasting not only during his undergraduate years but throughout his entire life.

An opposite viewpoint was expressed by Ken Jarvis who said that the fraternity system drugs the springs of individuality.

If...

Reports On AVA & Brief By Lazure To Highlight Annual ISS Conference

Reports on All-Varsity Aid as handled by the International Student Service and a brief by Dennis Lazure (U of M) will highlight the annual conference of ISS to be held this weekend at McMaster University.

Delegates to the conference from almost every Canadian university will also give their own regional reports, and hear exclusive reports and the past year's activities. During the period from Friday afternoon to Sunday evening they will also plot with their votes the path that this organization is to follow during the next year.

Reports will be read on the seminar held in Quebec this summer and its conclusions, as well as the scholarship service which has allowed some 48 foreign students to study in Canada during the past three years. A summary of exchange work between North American universities will also be given.

A final crucial question will confront the delegates. Should the organization retain the name ISS or adopt the international name proposed at the international meeting last year, to become the World University Service?

Reports will be read on the seminar held in Quebec this summer and its conclusions, as well as the scholarship service which has allowed some 48 foreign students to study in Canada during the past three years. A summary of exchange work between North American universities will also be given.

ISS is the current name for the Canadian section of the World University Service, last year renamed internationally due to confusion with the Communist-sponsored International Union of Students (IUS).

ISS-WUS sponsors non-partisan relief work on an international scale, both by aiding local programs (such as Varsity AVA of last year) and by relief work of their own.

Among the activities are: scholarships for foreign and refugee students to Canadian universities, planning international visits such as that of the Finnish engineers here last year and the visit of Toronto men to Finland during the past summer, the promotion of local inter-understanding by such means as the Carabin weekends, the intraduction of foreign speakers bringing their points of view to Canadian campi, and the sponsorship of international seminars both here and abroad.

SAC Supplies Accommodation For Homeless

For the majority of students ring accommodation the Housing Service has had a successful year," said Charles H Dean, B.A., Secretary of the H ing Service. "But," he contin "the situation for married co is almost as bad as it has al been."

Most people renting rooms single men and women and the ployment Service has an abundance of such rooms. landlords restrict the numbe children they want in their h to one, while others prefer pe any children at all.

In spite of these difficulties married group is slowly be settled for the year and the jority of single students have satisfactorily placed.

This year the Employment S vice is working with the Frie Relations with Overseas Stude in finding accommodation for o seas students attending the versity of Toronto. In some c it has been difficult to find pl for them but landlords are pro to be more co-operative this ye

The Employment Service has ceived a great amount of publi on the radio and in the new pers. Radio stations CKEY, C CFRB, CHUM, CJRT, CKFH The Globe and Mail have sent their appeal to the public.

Vic Sponsors Contest To Find Modern Bob

Victoria College is sponsoring a contest to find a modern counterpart of Bob, the janitor who originated the idea of the Vic Bob.

Bob was janitor at Victoria College 79 years ago, when the college was still on The Old Ontario Strand. Since then his modest entertainment for the freshmen has grown until this year it will be a full-scale stage presentation, known as the Bob Revue.

The contest is open to all members enrolled in Victoria College who bear the name Bob. But contest officials add that if your great-uncle now deceased ever called you Bob, you're eligible.

All the entrants will have to dress in a manner which typifies the typical Vic Bob. The winner will chosen on the basis of personal originality. Bob officials stress that entrants must incur no expenses for this contest.

Applications for the contest must be turned in to the VCU Office before 5 p.m. Friday, Oct. 19. Judging will be at Alumni Hall in Vic on Wednesday, Oct. 24 at one o'clock.

VIC ELECTIONS

At the Victoria College by-elections held last Friday, Barbara Brown was elected as second year representative to the Women's Athletic Union and Pat Smith was elected social directress for the Music Club. Marg Kell and Ken Cork as members-at-large for the class of 5T4 in the VCU while Gord Weese is male athletic representative for the freshman year. Sheila Irwin was elected member-at-large for the class of 5T2 and Anne Weldon will represent the second year at the Debating Parliament.

MATHS FOR MISS

Varsity Viennese

From her window on the second floor of Whitney Hall, overlooking the U.C. Quadrangle a U.C. Freshie can survey a most interesting portion of a venerable Canadian institution of higher learning. This i. not her first year at a university, however, for this particular Freshie has already completed one year at the University of Vienna in Austria.

Elizabeth Kupelwieser is in Toronto for one year on a Rotary Club Fellowship, studying Maths, Physics and Chemistry. Though she coud have chosen any university in any foreign country in the world, Elizabeth, a petite brown-haired fraulein with sparkling hazel eyes, explains in her delightful accent, "I have heard a lot about Toronto, and wanted to come to Canada."

Elizabeth is from Salzburg, Austria, where her parents and two sisters are still living. She was studying chemistry at the University of Vienna, where her application to the Rotary Club was made, and accepted. Not only is she the only student on a Rotary Fellowship from Austria, but she is also the first person in Austria to ever win one. These scholarships were started in 1947, and since that time have sent approximately three-hundred students from all countries to universities in other countries. They cover complete tuition, cost of living, travelling, and incidental expenses for a full year, with the purpose of bringing back to the student's original country a fuller understanding of a foreign land and way of life.

In Vienna one can choose subjects more freely than in Toronto, since there are no prescribed courses. In the sciences, which are Elizabeth's strong point, there are a certain number of labs which must be attended, and problems which must be handed in, before the exams for a degree may be written. It is not compulsory to attend classes, or even to try examinations at the end of each year. If one wants to try them, they are oral, not written. The system is more like the American, in that the time is counted in semesters, or two terms per year.

Elizabeth will enter her fifth semester when she returns, and will have to complete eight or ten semesters for her degree. After graduation she intends to go into physics research on the formidable subject, "Physical Apparatus for Medical treatment".

Elizabeth is interested in skiing, music, and the theatre, as well as physics. The Rotary Club has given her an extra £200 for travelling in Canada, and she intends to take a long trip in May after the examinations. She has noticed that the people in Toronto have more money and dress better than the people in Vienna, where the cost of living is very high compared to the salaries.

Attention Social Directorate—rumour has it that, socially speaking, things are pretty quiet around the college. The Publicity Committee is planning a S.G.L.I.R.P.B. Benefit Dance a week this Friday—arrangements forthcoming.

The first Chapel service in the series of chapel services and lectures which are sponsored by the V.C.U. was held on Sunday night in the Vic Chapel. About 200 students came to hear DR. MOORE on "Creative Tension". DR. MOORE'S sermon defended the value of doubt as the only basis on which we can form a sincere belief. The service was simple and—according to the enthusiasm it aroused—successful. The next lecture in the series is scheduled for three weeks from now, and should live up to the high standard set on Sunday.

The Debating Parliament is sponsoring a series of talks on "How To Speak In Public" and "Debating Procedure" by Prof. McMullen . . . the first talk will be this Wednesday in Room 18 at Vic . . . the first main debate of the year will be held on Mon., Oct. 22nd., at 8 p.m. in Alumni Hall. Glad to see Vic Football Squad—cheered on by thousands of Vic students and a bevy of beautiful cheerleaders and are those cheerleaders full of spirit (John Lewis was there, too)—led by a charging line and a hard-hitting backfield—was able to eke out a win against the hapless U.C. Many McGill Failures Bring Drastic Action

Montreal (CUP) — Furthering its efforts to reduce the high percentage of academic failures among McGill students, particularly freshmen, the Student Executive Council has decided to organize a cultural committee that is to organize the cultural activities on the campus and supplement the academic work of the students. It also decided to cut the number of issues of The McGill Daily, student undergraduate paper, from five to four a week next term.

A decision to sponsor a "No Activities Week" in which the student union will be closed for all activities was adopted at the last council meeting, as the first part of the programme. It will occur at the end of the football season and, it is hoped, will give the students and opportunity to concentrate on their studies after the excitement of the football season is over.

The duties of the cultural committee are to include arranging non-technical addresses by guest speakers on such subjects as art, literature, music, politics and international affairs with the idea of "whetting the intellectual appetites of students not directly connected with the topic." It will also seek to arrange art shows, music soloist and theatre performances on the campus.

Students Hunt Capt. Kidd's Buried Hoard

Montreal, Oct. 12 (CUP)—An adventure-seeking former McGill student and a Toronto boy, Ian Rogers, will set out this month in search of Captain Kidd's buried treasure in the South China Seas.

Accompanied by twelve other adventurers, the lads will attempt to locate the sunken ship "Lamarna," then owned by a Greek sea captain. Parchment maps thought to have been smuggled out by Capt. Kidd just before his execution will be used in the search.

Capt. William Kidd, born in 1645, was commissioned by the British Government to fight pirates, but was alleged to have gone into the business himself. He was executed in May 1701.

Experts at the British Museum in London say the maps look like reasonable facsimiles of ones that might have been used when Kidd was alive nearly three centuries ago.

BEES

Science Notes

By JIM ANDERSON

To the bumble bee I feel inferior,
For he has a sting on his posterior.
Ogden Nash.

And that isn't all. The honey bee, which is a member of the order Hymenoptera, has long been a source of amazement to man, principally because of its high level of social organization. Further study has also demonstrated its extremely well developed senses of taste, smell, vision, and direction. Recent experiments on its methods of communication have shown that bees are able to communicate essential information to each other by means of an elaborate "language."

Roland Young's moving poem on the flea could not really apply to the bee as it does here:

And here's to the happy bounding bee,
You cannot tell the he from she.
The sexes look alike you see;
But she can tell and so can he.

The queen is the only functional female in the hive. She is a rather large nasty looking individual whose every waking moment is devoted to the laying of eggs. In this role, she is the mother of every bee in the colony. (Think of the staggering size of her baby bonuses!) After the eggs are laid, she assumes no further responsibility for them (Institute of Child Study please note) and they are abandoned to the care of the workers.

These workers are undeveloped females numbering from ten to sixty thousand in a hive who perform all the necessary labor including the gathering of food. They possess an apparatus for the removal of nectar from flowers, a honey stomach resembling a bird's crop for storage and chemical action, a pollen basket on their hind legs, and glands for the secretion of wax. While the bee is in the larval form it is first fed "bee jelly", a predigested food from the workers' stomachs. (ugh!) Later, they feed it upon "bee bread", a mixture of pollen and honey. The fate of the embryo bee depends on its diet, for if the larva is fed only the jelly, it will develop into a new queen.

The male, or drone, lives a happy life devoid of work. Herein lies a moral. His life span covers a whole season; the worker lives but six weeks.

When a colony wishes to divide, preparations are made for a new queen. When she has developed, her first thought is to massacre any cells containing a growing queen. This accomplished, she leads a swarm to their new home. The new queen mates with a drone who dies within a few minutes. Every occupation has its hazards.

While gathering their food from flowers, bees perform the essential task of cross pollination. Their systematic visiting of one kind of flower makes this possible, for pollen from one type of plant will not pollinate another type. The bee is guided to a specific flower by its sense of vision and smell. Their range of color vision is shifted to the shorter wave length end of the spectrum and they are able to recognize four colors: yellow, blue-green, blue, and ultraviolet. They are thus color blind to the longer wave length red light. Because of this, red flowers must be pollinated by butterflies or birds.

Their special sense organs for smell are situated on the terminal eight segments of their antennae. These specialized structures consist of nerve endings covered by a thin layer of cells which the molecules of odorous material are able to penetrate. The presence on the moveable antenna of touch as well as smell end organs results in a cooperation of these two senses. The bee thus "smells" the shape of objects. This two sense combination is similar to our use of the senses of vision and touch to form our impressions of the external world.

Perhaps the most interesting aspect of the conduct of bees is their ability to communicate with each other. Their "language" has been studied to learn how they are able to inform each other concerning the location of food sites. When a worker has discovered a rich source of nectar near the hive, he returns and performs what has been called a dance of alternating circles to the right and left. Other workers gather about him and by means of their antennae detect the odor which still clings to its body. They then set out and seek the source of the odor in the vicinity of the hive.

If the food source is located at a distance greater than one hundred yards from the colony, a more elaborate dance is done. It consists of two parts: a short straight movement accompanied by wagging of the abdomen, and a second set of alternating circles. Careful study has shown that the distance of the food source is communicated by the frequency of the circling movements. The number of cycles per minute decreases as the distance of the goal increases. This calculation made by the bee includes not only cross country distance, but also any variations in effort needed to surmount obstacles such as trees, ridges, and head winds. The direction of the food source is imparted to the other workers through the direction of the straight portion of the dance. When the hive surface is horizontal, this first movement is in the same direction as that of the feeding site. When the hive surface is vertical, this information is given in a soul shakingly mathematical manner. The bee performs the straight portion of the dance at the same angle to the perpendicular plane as the angle of the flight is to the sun in a horizontal plane. Their orientation is achieved through their compound eye which acts as an analyzer of the partly polarized light from the blue sky.

It is almost incredible to think of a bee rushing into its hive shouting "Gather around girls! There is a luscious patch of cyclamen four hundred and fifty yards from here at a bearing of 50 degrees."

In spite of all their intelligence, the bee is discussed principally for its sting. Workers possess a straight needle-like weapon which they use as protection against insects, birds, and me. The dreadful torment experienced is due to backward pointing stiff barbs on the stinger, and the injection of a poisonous substance. Anyone who has had a misunderstanding with a bee can sympathize with Archie the cockroach who wrote on Don Marquis' typewriter the following lament:

the honey bee is sad and cross and wicked as a weasel and when she perches on you boss she leaves a little measle.

Funds for these activities are raised among university students all over the world, with the wealthier nations taking up the load for the weaker. The quota for Toronto is usually about $7,000, most of this being raised by a levy included in the incidental fees, by a motion of the SAC, and the remainder coming from outside contributions and special events, including tag days and stunts such as the Treasure Hunt of last year.

Yoknapatawpha Revisited

equiem For A Nun—by William Faulkner. andom House, 1951. 286 pp. $3.75.

One thing about this review is that it will probbly differ from any other review of William aulkner's latest work that you have read. That is, you are in the habit of reading several reviews f the same book.

I am and have and can tell you that Requiem or A Nun is being hailed all around as a pretty important thing. Not only is it the twentieth and atest book by the 1950 Nobel Prize winner and sage f Oxford County, Miss., it is a regenerated sequel to the sensational Sanctuary. That, if you remember Sanctuary, is something. And more than that, one device used in Requiem, of a three-act play with lengthy introductions in streamy prose, fills in the history of Faulkner's mythical but well-known Yoknapatawpha County. So followers of Faulkner, through his novels and short stories, can find out more about where the Sutpens, and the Sartoris and the Greniers and the Stephenses all fit in.

So you get the idea from such experts and Faulkner authorities like Malcolm Cowley that Requiem is a pretty important thing. The advertising emphasizes the fact that this is the first Faulkner publication since the Nobel Prize, and I suppose that makes it something too.

But how does this novel hit a non-Faulkner (so to speak) reader? (That is, if you don't count "A Rose For Emily," and some other stories, and The Wild Palms, and Sanctuary.) Well, it's an interesting book. The introductory chapters are good writing, the style being almost stream-of-consciousness, and the prose only occasionally obscure.

A fragment from the second section, "The Golden Dome," gives an idea of the scope and of the sometimes vigorous writing in the introductions:

". . . because then came the Anglo-Saxon, the pioneer, the tall man, roaring with Protestant scripture and boiled whiskey, Bible and jug in one hand and (like as not) a native tomahawk in the other, brawling, turbulent not through viciousness but simply because of his over-revved glands; uxorious and polygamous: a married invincible bachelor, dragging his gravid wife and the rest of his mother-in-law's family behind him into the trackless, infested forset, spawning that child as like as not behind the barricade of a rifle-crotched log mapless leagues from nowhere and then getting her with another one before reaching his final itch-footed destination, and at the same time scattering his ebullient seed in a hundred dusky bellies through a thousand miles of wilderness: innocent and gullible, without bowels for avarice or compassion or forethought either, changing the face of the earth. . . ."

You can see that not only is the history of Yoknapatawpha County recounted but the past looms in vigorous segments of American growth. The past is important to the novel, and in the story told in the three-act play form. Temple Drake (the mistreated heroine of Sanctuary) finds her past overwhelms her, and only her complete submission to the punishment from her new-found feeling of social responsibility can lift her out of her void.

The Nun is Nancy Mannigoe, nurse of Temple (Drake) Stephens' children, woman of a sordid past, and murderess of the younger Stephens child. The story examines how this has all come about and shows the tragic inevitability of the past overwhelming the Stephens family of the present.

The device of the play-novel is interesting as an experiment. But it jars when the new Temple Drake, who in Sanctuary was a mechanical animal to whom things kept on happening, demonstrates not only a new responsibility but an erudition in her speech which doesn't fit. Perhaps this is not a valid literary criticism, but then should Requiem be judged for itself only or as part of the Yoknapatawpha series?

Requiem For A Nun is an interesting book, but it is not hard to put down. I only hope they never make a movie of this one.

Frank Moritsugu.

Ave Atque Vale

In the last five hundred years we have developed a curiously literary conception of what constitutes a man's life. It is natural that this should be so. Man's life is a mystery. . . . a mystery that no philosopher will face, unless the existentialists may recently be thought to have faced it. Philosophers take sides. Either a man's life is continuous and coherent, obedient to a single principle throughout, originating in a known cause and proceeding to a known destination. Or it is accidental and chaotic, and any apparent principle is no less so. Those are the two songs that philosophy sings. Theology sings the former, and common sense hesitates between the two. It is the natural tendency of lyrical poetry alone to sing the fragmentary song alone. The mind functions in categories and would like to believe them real. And the literary forms of biography, drama and fiction implement this natural wish. Even psychology with its defined general terms is less of a bed of Procrustes than the common forms of literature.

The writing and reading of fiction and biography give the mind an agreeable sense of coming to grips with reality and with the supreme reality of individual human life. But nothing could be more remote from the reality of a man's life than any version of it which could be written down. The mere writing gives form to things which had no form and substitutes an intellectual form for a form which once had reality. Every piece of writing is a dramatization. Even a chemical equation dramatizes the complicated mutual impact of substances. The equation is a brief synopsis. Certain common elements are abstracted and given balance and apposition. More is omitted than is included.

And this is true not only of shabby thought and cheap writing. It is only a little less true of the best of both. Biography is always tendentious and always untrue. Fiction and drama are further refinements of the biographical method. To praise no matter what play or novel for being "true to life" is to prove oneself a fool. The naturalists, the photographic realists, are the most crafty liars of all. It is only when we accept the lying persepctive as part of our material that we approach reality. Kafka was closer to reality than Zola. But what Kafka wrote was still fiction.

To simplify is to falsify. To embrace with a formula is to strangle. A country is not its map. And every man's written life is a literary fiction. . . . We can forecast often how a man of whom we know a little will behave in a given situation. And yet he remains mysterious. Even the personality which we know is something that is real only for us. It is a personality which is partly created and defined by our presence. In other company it is different. He is, as we say, a different man. He exists in a state of flux. He is a flow of existence. He is pure vibrancy. The personality which is continuous is also diffuse. It is hardly a personality at all. In solitude a man is diffuse. It is hardly a personality at all. In solitude a man is diffuse. He takes form in relation only to an external situation. His friends and enemies define him. In quite a real sense they create him. Only the poet and the artist, the mystic, have any personality in solitude. And that is because they are capable of defining themselves in relation to an imaginary world first defined by themselves. . . .

No Stop Lights For Williams

The Autobiography of William Carlos Williams published by Random House, 1951. 394 pages. $5.00.

Although Dr. Williams does not compose poetry while stop lights are changing like his fellow physician-poet, Merrill Moore, he can certainly match him for the consistency with which he has managed to bang out poetry during a busy professional career.

Determined early in life to write for no one but himself, Williams decided that the world was not well lost for Art's sake and took up medicine to protect himself against garrets and lice. "I would not 'die for art' but live for it grimly and work, work, work, beat the game and be free to write — write as I alone should write, for the sheer drunkenness of it . . ."

In his autobiography Dr. Williams has a few drunken moments when the reader can sit back and enjoy his delight in nature and people, but there are too many pages simply filled with comings and goings that are uninteresting to the reader and make him question the advantage of reading an author whose stubborn first principle is to write only for himself. We catch glimpses of Ezra Pound, W. B. Yeats, James Joyce and Marcel Duchamp but very little is offered concerning them that we haven't heard before. However, it is interesting to note that Williams expresses the same disappointment in T. S. Eliot that is described by Malcolm Cowley in his excellent book on the Twenties, "Exiles Return". American artists seem to have felt that Eliot betrayed them not only by rejecting American civilization, but by doing so in such an academic style. "Critically Eliot returned us to the classroom just at the moment when I felt that we were on the point of an escape to matters much closer to the essence of a new art form itself — rooted in the locality which should give it fruit," Dr. Williams writes, and we are caught in the cross-fire of two conflicting points of view. The limitations of undisciplined self-expression will be obvious to anyone who picks up Dr. Williams book and in this instance we wish that Dr. Williams had used a little more discipline on himself in his choice of what to put in and what to leave out. Yet that is probably the one thing he would refuse to do. Long live the Americans!

Victorian Doctor

The Versatile Victorian by Zachary Cope, published by Harvey & Blythe, London, 1951. $3.00.

This biography of Sir Henry Thompson, a famous surgeon of the Victorian era, will interest not only medical men, but also students of English social history. The book is second in the Masters of Medicine series, a series devoted to biographies of famous medical personalities.

In the Versatile Victorian we are fed with too much detail about the facts of Thompson's personal successes and failures, and his likes and dislikes, when the reader is apt to feel that Cope could have given us more background of the times in which Thompson lived.

What will interest the general reader is the occasional intimate glimpses of Victorian London contained in the quoted reminiscences of Thompson and certain of his contemporaries. The author gives us Thompson's own vivid sketch of a typical Victorian Sunday, cheerless to an extreme undreamt of even by Torontonians.

Because of Thompson's middle class background and his own personality, he is, on the whole a representative figure of the Victorian Era. He had its optimism, its Kiplingesque smugness, its way of thinking on ethical rather than religious lines, and its surprising mental alertness. In his old age the great surgeon looked back with pride upon a lifetime of an association with the "best people", a record of philanthropic and cultural activity and a brilliant career.

Cope's writing is undistinguished but always clear. There are shades of a high school composition of his limp closing sentence:—

Thompson was certainly a celebrated figure and one of the most versatile men of the Victorian era. Adequate is the word for this biography.

Atheism, Free Love, Communism

H. G. Wells by Antonina Vallentin, published by John Day Co., New York, $5.00.

Wells' personality eludes Madame Vallentin on page 77 as she records his first published work. In the remaining 240 pages our biographer does an excellent job of summarizing Wells' thought as illustrated by his written work. She does this job so accurately, never attempting to water his philosophy down for public consumption, that we can forgive her the absence of those personal anecdotes which bring a personality to life in biography.

Scientist, novelist, sociologist, educator, economist, historian, essayist and lecturer—H. G. Wells was all of these. Yet one can take courses in history, socioliogy, science and the modern novel without finding him required reading. In the latter case at least we console ourselves with the thought that he is one of a distinguished company. The most widely known personality of his era, he is one of the most ignored.

H. G. Wells was an atheist, communist sympathizer and an exponent of free love. He built his philosophy around the fact of biological evolution before this fact was accepted by more than a few advanced thinkers in England. Again, before World War II he anticipated the breach of the Russo-German alliance, and campaigned for a greater understanding between East and West. He pictured accurately the chaos that would follow the peace, 'the undeclared war which would follow the declared one' as he called it. Wells believed that we could do very little to change the present Russian government, but that we should be more anxious to try and understand and live alongside of it.

If you are too busy to read several of H. G. Wells' works on our society, then this biography will serve as second best to those who would like to know more about the life and opinions of the lively Mr. Wells.

Strategy and Tactics

Lloyd Percival, The Hockey Handbook, Copp Clark, 1951, 314 pp. $3.50.

For avid hockey addicts of the age when the urge to stickhandle and bodycheck still remains this thick handbook would be an ideal gift, either for a birthday or for Christmas.

Author Percival is the mentor of the CBC Sports College, and this book is a compilation of hockey research carried on by that organization over the last six years. Findings on skills and their different importance in hockey playing are enumerated in detail. Many photographs, diagrams, and tables illustrate the lessons.

Skating, Scoring Goals, Carrying the Puck are some of the elementary chapters. Later in the book strategy and tactics are thoroughly discussed, with many examples from top NHL combinations. The final section on "The Future" promises a future Hockey Handbook in which will be discussed the technique of breaking down the psychological barrier that prevents a player from realizing his full playing potential.

In recent years, several books on Big League Hockey have been published usually to catch the Christmas trade. Most of these have been substandard stuff, on the cheap novel or fan mag level. Lloyd Percival's Hockey Handbook, however, is of high calibre, and its pictures are to illustrate hockey skills, not merely to present bedroom wall pinups of hockey heroes.

Violent Expressions

House of Liars by Elsa Morante. George J. McLeod, 1951. $5.00.

House of Liars deals with the struggles of a Sicilian family. The authoress, Elsa Morante is the wife of Alberto Moravia, the modern Italian novelist, but her writing does not in the least betray his influence. This is Elsa Morante's first novel and is the product of four years' work.

The girl who narrates the story is a recluse who is trying to discover the root of her unhappiness by conjuring up a series of flashbacks about her parents and their early life together.

The Mother, Anna, cannot forgive her husband for not possessing wealth and background, and Anna's discontent permeates her whole attitude towards life. She feeds on her unhappiness as her daughter does after her in a way that is typical of Sicilians who spend years caught up in old daydreams or brooding about an incident until their feelings burst forth in violent expressions which are far in excess of the situation that originally incited them.

Elsa Morante's novel is interspersed with bits of poetry of which the closing ode to a cat is a good example:—

"My agonies and fancies
Die in your kisses and sweet laments,
So deeply you console me,
O cat of mine."

The strength of this novel lies in the facile way in which Miss Morante has clothed her modern perceptions in nineteenth century dress. She has a style that is both different and startling to an English reader, and we can only hope that the best of her has been retained in this translation.

Speaking Of Sport

Toronto 26—OAC 0
Toronto 16—Balmy Beach 11
Toronto 14—McMaster 6
Toronto 15—McGill 7

Undefeated in seven straight games. No, don't you have to print the paper in red ink yet, chief, but it's a good start. With a team like the one that beat Western on Saturday the reproduction rate of victories is pretty high. Queen's birth control measures shouldn't be too severe judging by their past performances this year, but Varsity goes to Western for the return game after that, and Western will be gunning for you-know-exactly-who, after last Saturday.

Western, in our opinion, was not as bad as they looked on the scoreboard. They were inside Varsity's fifteen three or four times, only to lose the ball on third down when the alert Varsity line drowned the passer on third down, or blocked a placement attempt.

Their passing was being done by the half-backs until the last quarter, and not being done very well, so Bob McMurdo took over in the last quarter, and pitched the Mustangs 85 yards to a touchdown all on passes. Asked Metras why he hadn't had McMurdo throwing all the game, mentioning that Bob had smothered the Intermediates here last year with his passing. He said "You've seen him pretty good? Well I've seen him pretty damn bad." Maybe McMurdo saves his best efforts for Varsity. If such is the case, the return game at London may be the crucial match of the season. (Plug for Western weekend. Maybe the Hotel London will let me back in now.)

We're reprinting below the statistics, which didn't print up legibly in yesterday's paper. The most striking fact in them was the superiority of the Varsity ground offence. Western gains were mostly little short ones, thanks to the Blues' secondary tackling, whereas our halfbacks ran for many long gains. Oneschuk, Dale and Bewley all gained over sixty yards from scrimmage.

The Senior Interfaculty Track Meet is tomorrow. Post entries are not being accepted this time, and since we feel there are still some good men not signed, here's a reminder that the list is in the Intramural Office.

Meds Outclass Vic 11-3 Taking Lacrosse Opener

Meds I, last year's intramural champions, played a hard checking, well organized game to beat Victoria seniors 11-3 in the opening game of the intramural lacrosse season. It was a very good, hard played game for an opener. The Victoria team was fast enough but their checking was sloppy, and though their attack was fast, it was poorly organized. The Medsmen, all but once, gave the impression of having things under control.

Gear, the only man returned from last year's Meds team, was the high scorer of the game with five points to his credit. He scored the only goal of the first quarter, running up the sideline and shooting the ball in the corner with a deadly accurate shot. Vic's checking looked weak for the first period, and they seemed to have difficulty getting going.

Shortly after the face off in the second quarter Gear scored again for Meds. The game began to open up, and the Vic team's checking was a lot closer. Ham scored a nice goal for Vic, and for the next few moments it looked as if the Vic team was going to take over. Rush scored another for Vic to tie it up. Then suddenly Gear whipped in from the wing off the face-off and rifled one in behind the Vic goalie to put the Medsmen ahead. Then Meds' Kilty and Vime scored two goals in quick succession to end the second quarter. Vic really came to life in this quarter. The whole team pepped up, but the big improvement was their checking.

Vic opened up the scoring in the third period with their last goal. Gear missed his check in front of the Meds goal and three men rushed in to swamp the goalie. After that it was Meds all the way. Vic seemed to slow down a bit, and the well organized attack of the medical men just rolled over them. Kilty scored two more and Sims scored one lone handed to make the score 9-3 for Meds at the end of the third quarter.

Meds were running away with the game. Gear scored one more and Thomson scored his only one to end it.

Gear was Meds' most deadly weapon, but Kilty, Vime and MacMillan, who played without a rest on defense, looked very good. Vic's best were Ham and Rush.

On the whole, though it was a very good game, the Meds team had too much class. Vic played hard but they lacked the scoring punch of Gear and the organization of the Meds team in general.

UC Bobblers Bow To Vic Losing Opening Game 12-5

By BRUCE NORTH

The Victoria Scarlet and Gold stumbled, bumbled and lucked their way through to a 12-5 victory over a fumbling University College crew yesterday afternoon on the back campus. It was a somewhat dull but wacky affair in which one UC man tackled his own teammate and both teams threw the ball away with abandon.

It was obvious that neither team had had enough practice yet to play a league game. The backs were unsure of themselves, both quarters calling for line plunges again and in a game which soon developed into the old standard of two bucks and a kick. However there was some vicious tackling and either team might have won.

Vic opened the scoring in the second quarter when UC fumbled Hevenor's kick on their own 37 and Moyer recovered. Goudie went off tackle for six and Lodge's pass into the flat was grounded. Hevenor then kicked into the end zone for one point.

The Redmen went ahead in the third quarter when Ed Richardson intercepted Lodge's pass on his own 35. Quarterback Patterson heaved a beautiful long strike to Jack McFarlane who carried down to the Vic 5. Left half Ralph Brown finished off the drive, going over right tackle for the lone UC major. Patterson's convert was wide.

Victoria soon came back. After gaining 2 first downs, their drive was momentarily stopped when another of Lodge's passes was intercepted. However on the next play a bad snap caused a UC backfielder to drop the ball. There was a mad scramble for the ball and somebody kicked it down the field. Wilson bounded ahead of the rest of the pack and fell on it behind the UC goal line for a touchdown. Wooton converted.

Late in the fourth quarter Victoria recovered a UC fumble on their 15 yard line. Bond went for 9 yards and another buck gained a first down. After Lodge and Hevenor were both smeared for no gain, Bond took a long pitch out and tore around the left end to go over the goal line standing up. Wooton's convert attempt failed.

Bond was a standout for the Scarlet and gold. Time and again he hit the UC line and was set back on his panties. But he kept coming back to be the only substantial ground gainer for the Vicsters. Patterson threw several nice passes for the Redmen but his long gains in the air were always annulled by fumbles in the backfield. George Hevenor kicked a nice game for Victoria but was hampered by several low snaps.

Pitching Sportshoes

Well, the cogs of the big intramural sports machine have started to churn in high gear again. SPS beat, or perhaps trounced, the Victoria Volley Ball team in two games. The scores were 15-1 and 15-6 respectively. They may have been good games, but they looked just a little one-sided.

On the field of soccah Dents handed out a 3-0 licking to Wycliffe College. The game was far from good soccer, both teams lacked inspiration, but the dentists deserved to win. The forward lines were slow and the shooting and passing were wild; it was just a matter of one team being worse than another. Wycliffe's Cheesman played a good gome, but getting points was like pulling teeth, and the Dentists are better at that.

Tokiwa and Hunt turned in the best performance for Dents. Tokiwa scored twice and Hunt once.

The other soccer score was a 0-0 tie between SPS III and Trinity B. It too was poor soccer.

The noon-hour lacrosse game is covered elsewhere, and we won't have the SPS I-St. Mike's A. score till tomorrow. Till to-morrow then.

Need New Blood For Boxing Class

Boxing classes have now started. There's daily coaching by Tony Canzano between 5 and 6 p.m. in the boxing room. All beginners who are tired of wife-beating, and beatings by any others, are welcome.

A tournament will be held in December for novices, and an open tournament in January will determine the members of the Intercollegiate team going to Queen's in February. Many of the old faces have gone, and there will be spots to fill on the team. Among the old faces still around the campus are Roberto Couceiro, Norm Green, Don Armstrong, Howard Greenly, Pete Petcoff, Nick Betz, and Don Schell.

With a few breaks this should be Varsity's year again. Last year they lost the title to McGill, after taking same from Queen's in 1950. New blood is still needed.

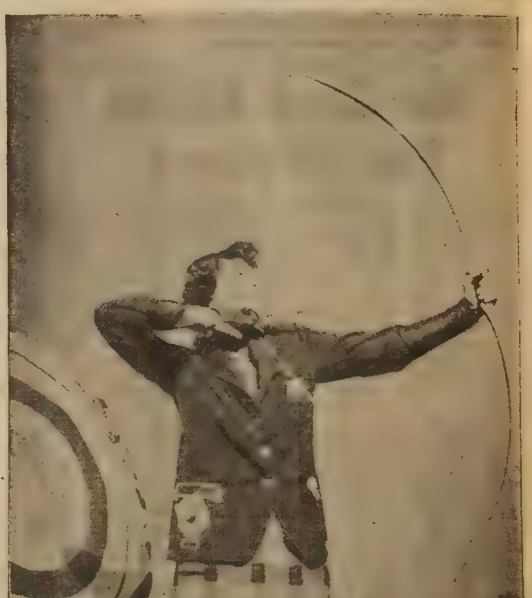
Basketball

It's basketball time once again around the campus. The teams have been chosen and the first game on the Intramural schedule are as follows:



Wednesday, Oct. 17 — 5:30, U.C. Sophs vs. Vic Sr. B's. 8:30 Vic Frosh B's vs. UC Frosh B's.

Thursday, Oct. 18 — 5:30, Vic Sr. Jr. A's vs. St. Hilda's Sr. 7:30, Vic Frosh A's vs. UC A's. 8:30, Vic Sophs vs. Meds.

Baseball

Yesterday Meds walloped St. Hilda's 15-2 in a rather one-sided baseball game. Irene Haines pitched a terrific game for Meds and also managed to hit a homerun. Sally Sarles played a major part in the Meds victory with her steady game on first base. On the St. Hilda's team Janet Bertram brought in the only two runs with her hit. Nancy Allen pitched for the losers.

TENNIS, ANYONE?

So you're too broke to go to Queen's next weekend? So what—for the price of nothing, you can attend an intercollegiate fracas that incorporates the spirit of the pigskin with the tone of the Eglinton Hunt Club. Friday morning at 9:30, shapely, athletic females representing Queen's, McGill, Western, McMaster and Toronto will initiate the annual tussle for the ladies' Intercollegiate Tennis Championship.

This bauble is presented to the ladies piling up the high est total of points—it's a round-robin arrangement. Singles and doubles will be run on Friday, with the finals taking place on Saturday. All games will be played on the St. Hilda's courts, west of the stadium on Devonshire Place. Spectators (and tennis whites are not essential!) are definitely welcome. Last year, Toronto and McGill tied for honors in the contest. The outcome of this year's tussle is anybody's guess. But you can bet your ATL that the Blue and White beauties will give all comers a run for their money. If you're not busy Friday and Saturday, drop over to the St. Hilda's courts, and add yours to the cheers on the sideline.

Campus Singing Star Sings At HH Concert

Miss Margo MacKinnon, soprano, will give the first recital of the Hart House series for 1951-52 at five o'clock today. Her program will consist of selections by Bach, Bizet, Gershwin, some French carols, and a number of Scottish folk songs, and should appeal to all members of the house.

Miss Margo MacKinnon

Miss MacKinnon came to Toronto in 1948, received her Licentiate Diploma from the Royal Conservatory of Music, and graduated with a Mus. Bac. While at this university she participated in the "All-Varsity Revues" of 1949 and 1950, and the U.C. production of "The Red Mill." Last spring she was soloist with University of Toronto symphony orchestra in a performance of St. Luke's Passion.

Recently Miss MacKinnon was enrolled in the Senior School of the Royal Conservatory of Music on a full scholarship. She won the coveted Rose Bowl in the 1950 Kiwanis Music Festival and in the Canadian National Exhibition she was awarded a 500 dollar scholarship. Last week she qualified as finalist in the C.B.C. coast to coast talent show "Opportunity Knocks."

Live Issues

The topic of last week's Hart House debate strikes us as something of an anachronism. While the Massey Commission concerns itself with "the plight of the humanities", we, at the University of Toronto, choose to discuss whether or not technical training for the professions has any place in the university.

While this may have been a burning question in Cardinal Newman's day, in the twentieth century in general, and on the North American continent in particular, the place of the professions in the university seems to have been fairly well settled.

On the other hand, there is considerable doubt in the minds of many students as to the purpose of humanities in a university education. Even those who are most enthused about the liberal arts have some difficulty in justifying, intelligently and convincingly, their raison d'etre. Indeed, it is sufficient to say that they feel a need to justify them.

It is becoming increasingly obvious that the conventional vindications of humanistic education are no longer sufficient. In the twentieth century, the Renaissance ideal holds increasingly less appeal. Leonardo da Vinci was a man of many talents, but accomplished little, is the modern dictum. Our Massey's Report is painfully aware of this—"There is a persistent illusion that what we call the humanities is mere educational embroidery, perhaps agreeable but certainly irrelevant."

But the Hart House Debates Committee chose to discuss the place of professional schools in the university—not, surely, an issue that can arouse a great deal of interest at the present time. A debater, we suppose, can debate about one thing as well as another. Possibly the acme of debating skill would be to turn the most pedantic question into a vital issue, capable of arousing the passions of the crowd. (We haven't heard that Hart House did this.)

Generally, however, it is safer to discuss closed issues than open ones. The Never-Never Land offers a fine opportunity for good, clean fun without the dangers of stepping into the mud of open controversy. But would it be too much of a shame if university students took themselves so seriously as to consider living questions?

Yet the Debates Committee might have considered that the question of whether professional schools have a place in the university an open one.

And what if they had been right? And what if the outcome of the debate had been to declare that the professional faculties had no place in the universities?

There would, of course, have been a wringing of hands and a gnashing of teeth in Simcoe Hall. The Board of Governors would have been collectively sick. And who would blame them? After building a new Chemistry Building in the best of Toronto architectural traditions, and a New Mechanical Engineering Building in a more modern vein their efforts would have been repudiated. They would have had to consider the best way of transforming those buildings into ones dedicated to a purpose more acceptable to the student body. But now we have entered a realm of fantasy.

Perhaps even the subjects of debates indicate the tendency of students today to bypass the real problems for the academic and "safe" ones. Is it because we are afraid of our inadequacy, our inability to grasp situations in which we are involved?

Those charged with choosing debate topics might well try tackling some live issues, the kind that are apt to bite back.

OUR READERS WRITE

Not So Small

Editor, The Varsity:

With reference to the rather verbose treatise on University Drama by your much-publicized Pearl Parnes, which appeared in Friday's Varsity, I should like to point out a rather large omission for one so seemingly well-versed in Inter-Varsity Drama.

I have not the slightest interest in drama. However, upon seeing her article I proceeded to peruse it with a feeling of loyalty to the Alma Mater that each and every one of us has — or should have.

Perhaps your reporter has never heard of Bishop's University. This, the smallest recognized university in the British Empire, is situated in Lennoxville, Quebec, three miles from Sherbrooke, one hundred and five miles from Montreal, in the heart of the Eastern Townships. Once an Anglican Theological College, now one of the oldest in Canada, this university has expanded to include faculties in Pure Science and Arts. There used to be a Faculty of Medicine.

With regard to drama I see no reason for the omission of Bishop's from the line-up of such universities as your reporter chose to include in her dissertation. May it be known that the Dramatic Society of Bishop's University is over one hundred years old. Bishop's, with an enrollment of 225 people, most of whom are men and 100 of whom are freshmen who have had little or no experience in dramatics, has for years continued to produce stage plays.

In the autumn there are presented annually, to the joy and full co-operation of the people of Sherbrooke and Lennoxville, the Minor Plays. These are a series of three short plays which are staged, stage-crewed, costumed and made a success by the freshmen and freshettes themselves. Further, let me explain the circumstances under which this is undertaken. Bishop's has had, up until one year ago, no stage or dressing rooms of any kind. The stage was a makeshift one set up in a gymnasium the size of the Bookstore. The dressing rooms were across the Campus in the Men's Residence. There was always a capacity crowd at both performances.

The Major Play, as the production of the year is called, takes place in the spring and features the best of the freshman acting crop as well as the stars of other years. This production of the year, until the acquisition of a new Auditorium as part of a two and a half million dollar expansion program which was completed one year ago, was staged in the Gymnasium-Auditorium of Bishop's College School about a half a mile away from the University. (Bishop's College School is comparable to Trinity College School which is possibly more familiar to people of Ontario.) The stage of the new auditorium, incidentally, is one of the best in Eastern Canada.

In addition to the two large dramatic functions which envelope the campus, as only a small campus can be enveloped, there is a series of radio plays presented over the neighboring English station CKTS of Sherbrooke. This series lasts about six weeks and is usually broadcast during the winter months.

Bishop's features in playwriting too. Last year one of the Minor Plays was written by a professor on the staff. It received wide acclaim with leading drama critics of Eastern Ontario and Quebec.

I see, by Miss Parnes' exposition, that mention has been made of the Inter-Varsity Drama League. May I enlighten her to the fact that Bishop's is nearly annually represented at this function which is so integral in the promotion of drama among university undergraduates. Perhaps it is the distance that makes Bishop's unknown to Miss Parnes. But no, she goes on to describe the progress and achievements of such universities as Mount Allison, University of Saskatchewan and St. Francois Xavier which are much more distant.

There is a saying that goes: Good things come in small packages — and Bishop's is small.

W. J. Assad, B.Sc., '50 (Bishop's)
I SPS.

Reader Assad's point is well taken: When The Varsity sent out the questionnaire from which the cross-country drama survey was made up, Bishop's didn't get one, mainly because they are not full members of Canadian University Press, through which such surveys are handled. Like the rest of Canadian University drama, that at Bishop's seems to be on an active footing.—The Editors.

On Book Reviews

Editor, The Varsity:

For the paltry sum of fifty cents The Varsity can purchase from the Bookstore a copy of "Writing" by Professor J. S. Morgan, Associate Professor of Social Work at this University. This is not a plug for Professor Morgan, merely a fervent hope that one of your book reviewers, at least, may stumble across the following passage in the book, and derive some knowledge of book reviewing from it.

"A book review . . . should contain some indication of the contents of the book under review; and, most important of all, should give a careful appraisal of the book, its purpose, its conclusion, its relation to other literature on the same subject, its style, and its effectiveness.

"Prefer . . . the familiar word to the far-fetched, the concrete word to the abstract, the single word to the circumlocution, the short word to the long."

I refer to the book review in last Wednesday's issue of The Varsity entitled "You And I And Life". I read this review three times in a vain effort to understand what the book was about, and what the reviewer thought of it.

Your reviewer writes ". . . it is unfortunate that the lines between dreaming, planning and imagining are not more precisely drawn." If the author of the book was in any measure as obscure as your reviewer, then he has attained to work of monumental vagueness.

It might be worth your readers' while if this reviewer would, in the future, after having given vent to his "literary" spleen and unintelligible abstractions, add postscrips telling us what it was all about.

BOOKSTORE

Troubles

Editor, The Varsity:

I am writing because of a serious complaint about the efficiency of the University Bookstore.

On October 2, I ordered a French text which is prescribed for the extension course which I am taking towards my PhD. I paid the full price of the book, and was told to return in two or three days to pick up the book, and was assured that it would then be available. I returned the following Thursday, and was told that it was not there yet but would be there tomorrow. Friday I was told that it would be there Monday definitely

I was there four times the next week, and each time was told that the book was on its way from the publishers and would be there the next day or the day after. All that week I missed much of the benefit of my French classes because the Bookstore could not provide the book they had promised.

Finally, on Friday, Oct. 12 they told me it had been out of stock all along, but would be available for me Monday. Monday, today, two weeks after I had ordered the book, they informed me that the order form had been lost, naturally by the printer, so the order had to be renewed. But it would be available "very probably" on Wednesday.

Since last week I could have obtained the book at other bookstores, but daily expected a copy from the University Bookstore. Every time I go there, I had to wait up to twenty minutes to find out that the book is still not available.

Today I asked for my money back. In spite of the large sums of money which they have on hand, they told me (after a ten-minute consultation with the manager) that I would have to go to another building for it, which, being new to this campus, I find it difficult to locate. I can already see myself sitting in that office, waiting perhaps twenty minutes again for the beginning of the final procedures, and all for $1.30, which I cannot afford to lose. Why could the money not have been refunded at the counter over which I originally handed it?

A Bookstore should be efficient, and if it is inefficient it is not serving the purpose for which it was created. I suggest that the Bookstore either brush up its management or close its doors.

Grad Studies.

Want Song

Editor, The Varsity:

An emengency has emerged! "Follow the Blues" is no longer with us. We are regular, enthusiastic, paying football fans. And as true-blue followers of the Blues, we want to hear our theme song. Last year the band had an inspiring arrangement, and we wonder why it has been omitted. All our votes go for the new Palm Tree routine, but "Let's Follow the Blues" again.

EXPRESSING AN OPINION

Will Receive Student Mandate On Russian Invitation Question

Shirley Endicott, IV Vic, said last night at a meeting of the External Affairs Commission that she feels that the National Federation of University Students has not done enough to stimulate discussion of the decision against inviting Soviet students to visit Canada. The Commission, by a vote of faculty representatives, defeated Miss Endicott's motion, that the University of Toronto delegates to the September NFCUS conference at London prepare a statement of the reasons of the conference, and the Toronto delegates in particular, for turning down the invitation to Soviet students in favour of Southeast Asian students.

Miss Endicott charged that the delegates to the conference had no clear mandate from the students they represented on the subject of the invitation. She asked that all sides of the issue be made clear to the students of the university, in order to make informed discussion possible.

Sid Wax, IV Meds, the chairman of the International Activities Commission of NFCUS, which would be the body to extend the invitation, said that the commission would be unable to give a definite statement of policy, as suggested by Omar Walmsley, grad, as its duties are only to carry out the mandate given to it by the London conference. Walmsley's proposal that the IAC take a poll of Canadian university opinion on the subject was also defeated by a faculty vote.

Wax said that, while the London conference had approved the principle of sending and receiving students on an International level, the delegates had decided that the difficulties ad problems of bringing Soviet students at this time would be too much for the present organization. On the other hand, he said, the delegates felt that their efforts could do the maximum good in the South East Asian area, and that the effort and money involved in the program should be used for constructive use where our democratic influence can have some effect.

The commission approved a motion put forward by Ian Montagnes, III U.C., that, before the final meeting of this year, each elected representative of the commission receive a clear mandate from his student organization on whether an invitation should be extended to Soviet students at the next NFCUS conference.

Forestry Club Opens Frolic To University

The Forestry Fall Frolic this year will be open to the whole University for the first time in its history. The Foresters' Club reached this decision as a result of the decreased enrollment in the faculty this year.

Bill Gregory, president of the Foresters Club said the main reason for the change is to counteract the tendency of many university students to regard forestry as a strictly isolationist group in the southwest corner of the campus. He said that each faculty should be strong in itself, yet each group on the campus should recognize its ties with the university as a whole.

Gregory said that Forestry, particularly after last year's athletic record, tended to drift away from the university. "We want people to realize what we are and how much fun we have," he added.

Fraternities Upheld In Debate Although Compared to Skunks

In a close debate which sometimes blazed into heated arguments about points of order, fraternities were successfully defended yesterday at the first debate of the University College Mock Parliament.

The resolution, "That fraternities are detrimental to higher education on the campus", was defeated 44-40 after a two-hour discussion in which the terms, "privilege" and "prejudice" played a prominent part, and in which President Smith was said to approve of the fraternity system.

Ken Jarvis, IV UC, opened the debate with the remark that debaters must be careful to avoid bringing personalities or emotions into the discussion "because the opposition was packed with good staunch fraternity members."

"Let us therefore examine what the average student needs, and what the fraternity supplies him," he continued. The student needs a place to live and eat, he said, and the fraternity does an excellent job of this.

However, he continued, a skunk has all the requirements of a good pet, except for that extra something which makes him unpopular. Jarvis then suggested that fraternities, like skunks, have a little extra something.

"Fraternities tend to restrict the number of friends a student has," Jarvis said, "instead of broadening his experience."

If the students are looking for a place to eat and live, he concluded, let them go to a private hotel.

First speaker for the opposition, Marion Hogarth, III UC, stated that for all practical purposes, the purposes of the ideal university (according to Newman) were the same as the purposes of the ideal fraternity.

The fraternities stressed a social consciousness of the community as a whole, and also stressed scholarship.

In a university the size of Toronto, Miss Hogarth continued, the only way to meet people is to join a small group. The fraternities did not restrict friends, since the members had a chance to meet all the alumni.

She also pointed out that the Pan-Hellenic Society was donating $700 worth of scholarships to this university, and three fraternities were contributing towards a cerebral palsy clinic.

Vern Turner, IV UC, the second speaker for the Government, remarked that at a university, the sons of the poor and the rich should be able to mingle, and the only distinction should be one of degree of intelligence. "However," he pointed out, "fraternities immediately bring in the distinction of class."

"The university is an entity in itself," Turner continued. "It offers every kind of activity, and students should devote all their time to it. However, fraternities detract from the university activities and deprive their members of a broadening experience."

Today there are too few leaders and too many sheep, Turner said. "The fraternity is the best shepherd of them all," he added.

Doug Gibson, III UC, said that fraternities give a cross-section of all society. "Anything bad that can be found in fraternities can be found anywhere else in the community."

University officials are very grateful to fraternities because of the residence facilities they provide, Gibson said. He added at another point in the discussion that President Smith approves of fraternities.

Fraternities do not discriminate against the poor, he continued. Indeed, it was cheaper to live at fraternities than in residence.

Liberals Approve Credit Controls

The University of Toronto Liberal Club last night approved the federal government's imposition of credit controls on consumer buying by a vote of twenty-six to six. This meeting of the Liberal Club in the Junior Common Room of University College which saw a record attendance for an opening meeting.

The meeting consisted of a heated discussion of the recent imposition of credit controls by the federal government. John Medcof opened the discussion by supporting the cause of price control, which later found little support among those present.

Medcof introduced a motion to the effect that 'If the cost of living was not effectively checked by the present controls by about February next year, it would be necessary to impose a different set of controls.'

In introducing this motion, John Medcoff IV UC, admitted that in this emergency, there had to be controls of some kind. "Whether they are credit controls or not, they must be controls that are going to work," he said. "Unless they work soon, we must try something else, and that is none other than price controls."

In rebutting the statement, Ralph Scane, III Vic, pointed out that Canada is trying to control an economic crisis, with sound economic controls.

"Despite the fact that we are in a pseudo-wartime economy, we do not need wartime controls," he emphasized. "Price controls without complete control are like a cushion which springs up in another place when you push on it."

"Price controls involve control of everything, including wages, allocation of material and rationing," he said. "Since we are in a position where a cold war may last a couple of decades, price controls would have to last that long too. In that time business men would have lost all incentive to free enterprise."

In conclusion he pointed out that free enterprise was Democracy's last line of defence, and that if it was gone, comlete socialism would be around the corner.

Follow Blues Has New Air Friday Night

A new version of "Follow the Blues" will be heard at the Stadium Show this year as part of the Homecoming Week-end. The annual show is to be presented on Friday evening, October 26 at Varsity Stadium.

The song, well known to fans of the Varsity Blues, will be re-written by its composer Susie Davidson of CKFH and heard for the first time at the Stadium Show. Seventy-five choral singers are needed for the performance and all interested are aswed to contact Bruce Snell on Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the JCR, University College. This chorus is to sing the revised edition of "Follow the Blues" as a tribute to the Varsity Blues.

Bob Masterson will introduce the Varsity football team to the audience during the show.

The theme of the Stadium Show this year is a big secret which the Blue and White Society refuses to disclose at this date. The main attraction of the production will be the appearance of special visitors obtained with difficulty and at great expense to the Blue and White Society.

At the show, which will consist of straight variety, there will be everything from tumblers to singers. The cheerleaders will also be present.

Replace Roamaround By Gala HH Dance

The Blue and White Society are planning on holding what should be the biggest dance of the year in Hart House a week next Saturday. The whole of Hart House will be open for the grads and undergrads atending the dance during the Home-coming Weekend. This dance will replace the Roamarounds of previous years and there will be six orchestras in Hart House for the evening. The Blue and White Society are planning on having orchestras in the upper and lower gyms, the east common room, the debates room, the music room and a cabaret-style band in the lunch room in the basement.

Both the Art Gallery and the Lee collection will be open for the evening, with demonstrations of painting planned in the art gallery. The Amateur Radio Club will be sending and receiving messages in the map room and anyone wishing to send a message to his, or her, hometown can have the club relay their message.

Tickets will be on sale starting Monday at Hart House, UC, SPS, Vic, St. Mike's, Trinity and Meds. The cost will be $2.00 a couple. Graduates will be able to buy tickets at the Alumnae office on St. George St.

A list of events will be printed on the dance tickets and in addition there will be guides from the Blue and White Society in Hart House. A big undergraduate show is planned for the lower gym during intermission.

Vic Lectures On Debating For Debaters

"Gala crowds are expected to throng to Vic this Wednesday at 4 p.m. to hear Professor McMullen of Emmanuel College deliver the first of a series of lectures on 'How to Speak in Public' and 'Debating Procedure'," the V.C.U. said to-day. Students from all faculties, including Skule, are invited to attend.

Professor McMullen has lectured before on Public Speaking to second year Engineering and Business.

The purpose of these talks is to introduce the Victoria Debating Parliament's first main debate of the year, entitled, "Resolved: that Britain needs a Conservative government".

Applications Open For Student Jobs

Student applications for jobs are now being accepted by the SAC Employment Office in Hart House. About 250 students have now registered and the registration is increasing steadily.

"Several firms have telephoned asking for part-time student employees," said Charles Iliffe-Dean, B.A., Secretary of the Employment Service, "and I have contacted several interested parties but it is still a little early in the year for the majority of people to phone in asking for student help."

Students have requested jobs for the afternoon, evening, part-time and particularly for Saturday. Of the requests received for student employees the majority of jobs are for things the students have indicated in their application forms. Among those received have been applications from the T.T.C. to place advertisements in the street cars, window washers, and jobs in offices. Some boys have even been investigating jobs for baby sitters.

Applicants may bh found in thhe Employment Office on the second floor of Hart House.

SAC MEET

The regular meeting of the Students Administrative Council will be held tonight in the Board Room of the Mining Building at 7 o'clock. This is open to all students.

Federal Aid Thorny Issue In Politics Past & Present

Reprinted from The Manitoban

Canadians with a sense of history must be appalled at the seemingly unanimity with which Canadian politicians have greeted the Massey Commission's report on direct federal aid to universities.

Our politicians appear to have forgotten about the acrimony and bitterness which has in the past characterized every attempt by the federal government to deal with the field of education.

No single issue in our history has so effectively hampered our development as a united nation.

Accepted

Yet, convinced by statistics of the need of the universities, on the one hand, and of the ability of the federal parliament to pay, on the other, members of all political groups have accepted the idea of direct federal subsidies to the universities.

Much of the danger of federal aid to our national development has been overlooked by reason of a confusion in the public discussion of the constitutional aspect of the question.

It has been said that federal aid is contrary to the constitution because, by the British North America Act, education is expressly reserved exclusively to the field of provincial jurisdiction, and federal subsidies are an infringement of this exclusive jurisdiction.

Stated thus, the constitutional argument against federal aid has failed to carry conviction. In the first place, nobody much cares if the B.N.A. act is technically and theoratically violated. In the second place, it is very doubtful if federal aid is ultra vires the Dominion parliament.

Actually, by the B.N.A. act, the federal government and parliament have wide powers over education. Besides the power of subsidization, they have power to disallow any provincial statute having to do with education and they have power to pass remedial orders and even legislation in order to protect minority educational rights and privileges.

But our Canadian constitution is much more than the written document known as the British North America act. Many of its most essential principles are based on policy declarations, agreements, and even mere customs and practices.

One of these constitutional principles that has in the last 50 years of our history guided the statesmanship of our country is based not on the B.N.A. act, or any other statute, but upon the settlement which Canada and Manitoba worked out in 1897 and 1898.

This principle is that the federal government will in no way touch the field of education, even where it has by virtue of the B.N.A. act full power to act in that field.

That is the policy which Laurier determined upon in 1898 as the only possible way of removing from the national sphere the bitter religious disputes over subsidization of religious education.

Since 1898 Canadian governments of every political persuasion have scrupulously avoided any kind of interference with education. They have refrained from exercising their undoubted powers in order to free our nation from the disharmony and disunity of religious quarrels.

School of Question

Canadians sometimes forget that the Manitoba school question and allied issues were in essence financial questions. There was never any question of the right of Catholics in Manitoba to maintain their own school and teachers in their own way. The only "right" of which Catholics in Manitoba have been deprived is their right to share in the revenues obtained by the public taxation.

It happened that many people in Manitoba, and in Canada, felt that public funds should not be used for sectarian purposes, whereas many others felt that religious schools had a natural right to participate in the proceeds of general taxation.

Transferred from the Manitoba field to the Dominion by virtue of Sir Charles Tupper's remedial legislation in 1896, this difference of opinion almost wrecked the unity of Canada and cetainly ruined the unity of at least one major political party.

It is sheer wishfulness to suppose that these differences of opinion have suddenly ceased in Canada. It is all very well to find all Canadians agreed on the desirability of federal aid to education. Does anyone really believe that there will not be public controversy over who is to receive the federal subsidies?

If Catholic universities and colleges are to share in the grants, what will be said by those who oppose public subsidies to religious institutions? On the other hand, if they are excluded, who expects the Catholics to be silent while the non-Catholic schools are given an extra edge over theirs by public subsidies out of tax money to which they contribute?

Before voting for direct federal subsidies to universities, members of parliament would do well to consider the answers to these questions. The settlement of the Manitoba school question should not be lightly disturbed if it is hoped to keep religious acrimony out of the field of federal politics.

STUDENT UNION PLOT

All seems serene in this picture of the student union site, but last Saturday morning it was much different. An estimated crowd of 18,000 persons, students, staff and ordinary people crammed every available corner of the area to catch a glimpse of Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh. The royal couple entered the campus under the new bridge in the foreground and after circling front campus entered the west door of Hart House. Moments later they reappeared at the East door of the House and walked over to the Parliament buildings.

At other times during the school year this area, designated for the new student union, gets very little use. In the early autumn and late spring, groups of sun-loving students can be seen, stretched out on the grass eating their lunch; and occasionally reading a book.

Guarding the student union site are two ancient cannons, situated behind the bookstore and a University of Toronto policeman, who from his station under the bridge prevents unauthorized automobiles from entering the campus.

Aid To Jamaica Is Postponed By University "Foreign Office"

The External Affairs Commission last night accepted a report to be given to the SAC as the Commission's recommendations to the matter of aid to rehabilitation of University College in Jamaica. This question was referred to the commission at the first session of the SAC this year, when G. K. Searle appealed to the council for aid to his university.

The report, based on information given Peter Alley, IV Trin, by Searle, concludes that it is impossible to reach any fair decision on the matter until more information is available. Searle will forward the necessary information to the commission from Jamaica.

Alley pointed out that at present the Jamaican university is not satisfactorily organized in a reconstruction program to get help fro m the International Student Service, and this would make it very difficult for this university to give any material aid, as relief campaigns on the campus are conducted under the auspices of ISS. Alley said that he had indicated to Searle that the matter would be greatly facilitated if a student-faculty committee on rehabilitation were formed at University College.

The Foreign Office also approved the choice of four delegates to the ISS conference at McMaster this weekend, ad gave them clear mandates on two of the questions to be discussed. They recommended that the delegates press for a relief campaign on a national basis, if this should prove to be practical. They also instructed the delegates to vote for the resolution that ISS refuse to continue working on summer exchanges with the International Relief Fund unless the method of selection of students be guaranteed.

The University Entrance Information Committee chairman reported to the commission that the committee were already making contacts to get information for the booklet they plan to publish by the end of this year. This booklet will contain information on the costs of being a student, possibilities of financial aid in the form of bursaries and scholarships, as well as job opportunities at the various universities in Ontario.

Bloor United Offers Club For Students

The Campus club will re-open at Bloor United Church after a student service on Sunday night, Oct. 21 when President Sidney Smith will assist the minister. The Campus Club was started last year for students at the U. of T., Normal School, Ryerson and for nurses training at the different hospitals.

The Club was formed in November, 1950, when Bloor Street United Church undertook to introduce a program for students after the evening service. The main purpose of the club is stated to be to give students an opportunity to get together to hear outstanding speakers and singers. The members of the club also participate in discussion groups and see movie

Last year's program included Professor William Boyd of the pathology department, Principal A. B. B. Moore of Victoria University, Wilson MacDonald, the noted Canadian poet, and Lois Marshall, a soprano. Miss Marshall will sing at the opening of the club and Eric Treadwell will lead a sing-song. The club plans on having Professor Joslyn Rogers of the Chemistry Department and Ontario Provincial Analyst speaking at the second meeting.

In Hollywood, the wise guys are viewing Joseph Mankiewicz with suspicion. They can't figure the guy out because he's got a formula where he makes films about "taboo" subjects where bright talk takes more footage than snappy action, and yet the films are making money.

It may discomfit the wise boys among the Dream Merchants, but it is a good thing for those of us who look for films that make some appeal to adult interests. Mankiewicz's latest, PEOPLE WILL TALK (at the University), is just as good as the award-laden ALL ABOUT EVE. I think I will see PEOPLE WILL TALK again.

This film is one of a series put out by Mankiewicz under the lavish and unrestricting hand of top 20th Century-Fox man, Darryl Zanuck. It started with A LETTER TO THREE WIVES (remember the Paul Douglas-Linda Darnell sequences?), and then came ALL ABOUT EVE, and NO WAY OUT. This last picture was composed of effective suspence and violence, but the others shone because of the bright Mankiewicz script.

In a Mankiewicz film, his characters talk and talk and talk. The parallel, and it is easy to draw inasmuch as three of the Old Man's plays have been filmed, is to Bernard Shaw. We go to hear the talk, and relish the bright talk and the (pardon the expression) message.

PEOPLE WILL TALK concerns the brilliant Dr. Noah Praetorius (Cary Grantish but engaging enough) and his philosophy of life. The doctor marries a pregnant girl (Jeanne Crain) thereby giving some of our Mrs. Grundys the heaves. He is cross-examined by an obvious colleague (Hume Cronyn is a little hammy but the temptation must have been irresistible), and he survives charges of quackery and dubious associations.

The story is not that logical; the brooding presence of Sunderson (Finlay Currie being as craggy as can be) helps the suspense along, but seems rather stagey. But this is of little importance. People talk the way we wished more people would talk. Some of the talk is on the clever cocktail chatter level. But more of it is subtle and intelligent and adult.

Dr. Praetorius says his job is to "make sick people well." As might be expected, his methods sometimes conflict with the orthodoxy and the conservatism of the medical profession. And in this way, Mankiewicz suggests that although orthodoxy and conservatism are essential to sound medical practise, they are not the end-all and be-all. That is why the film is dedicated to "the patient."

Mankiewicz' talent as a writer abounds throughout the film, and his talent as a director shows in his making Jeanne Crain seem convincing in a difficult role. And the use of Walter Slezak as a sympathetic professor is an astute move; Slezak must be quite tired of being pirate villains and such like.

There are some good double bills at the neighborhood theatres right now. ON THE RIVIERA and FOURTEEN HOURS is a well-balanced and satisfying program (Famous Players). The Lewis Milestone war movie about Italy, SALERNO BEACHHEAD (A Walk In The Sun) is at the Metro with RAWHIDE. Dore Schary's TERESA is second-running with HERE COMES THE GROOM at the Tivoli and Capitol. And at the Radio City is the powerful program of two Powell and Pressburger specialties: BLACK NARCISSUS and STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN. STAIRWAY is a better film, but NARCISSUS is a disturbing moodpiece, with one startling closeup that will make you jump six inches off your seat.

Peace

Editor, The Varsity:

Many rumors are flying about the campus concerning the past, present and future of the U. of T. Peace Council. To the best of my knowledge and belief the following are a true account.

The control of the Council changed hands in a perfectly constitutional fashion last spring, many students being dissatisfied with the manner in which the problem of peace had been approached. The legality of the change cannot be challenged since the Caput, after hearing both sides of the question, confirmed the change.

It was not until Sunday, Oct. 7th that I was promised the books of organization and they reached me via the Hall Porter's desk at Hart House so that I have no way of knowing from whence they came. I was informed that no minutes of meetings were kept and that there was no minute book.

It appears that the organization was run in a fashion which, to be as generous as possible, might be called haphazard.

Most of the meetings to be held this year will be open meetings to which speakers will be invited to talk on ways and means of progressing towards world peace. Although political considerations are, in some countries, of prime importance when this problem is considered it is felt that a broad program, viewing all possibilities dispassionately, might be initiated.

We have invited a speaker from the Toronto World Federalists for a meeting to be held at 1 p.m. on Wednesday, October 24th. The meeting will be open but enrolment in the Council can be made at that time. Watch for place, as yet undetermined.

I would remind the student body that it is their responsibility, by vocal attendance, to see that a true reflection of student opinion is forthcoming from their own clubs and activities.

Denis Bishop,
President,
U. of T. Peace Council.

Foreign Office Explains AVA

Editor, The Varsity:

In your article on the International Student Service Conference to be held this week-end at McMaster your concluding statement was erroneous. You said regarding the raising of funds:

"The quota for Toronto is usually about $7,000, most of this being raised by a levy included in the incidental fees, by a motion of the S.A.C., and the remainder coming from outside contributions and special events, including tag-days and stunts such as the Treasure Hunt last year."

This is not at all the case. In general the campaign objective on this campus has been one dollar per student, and it was in line with this that All-Varsity Aid last year set its objective at $10,000. Only at U.B.C. is money for ISS raised by a levy voted by the Students Council. At all other Canadian universities money is raised by campaigns soliciting voluntary contributions. The money so raised is used partly to support the National and International offices, and the remainder to support a material relief programme and the Exchange and DP Scholarship plan. The National Office in turn devotes much of its efforts to raising additional money for relief from private and corporate sources. In addition the national office raises other money from non-university sources for the summer seminars, from which money is paid, most of the administrative time spent in raising it. The International Office is maintained to discover and designate needy areas and to administer the relief funds in those areas, so that national groups do not duplicate each other's work.

Thus, like all good money, the dollar given to I.S.S. by the students in response to the campaign begets brothers.

AVA last year fulfilled directly a specific part of the programme of action drawn up by the international office of I.S.S. now called World University Service; and part of the money it raised was granted to Canadian I.S.S. for disposal at its determination. This division was made to accommodate two aims—one to have an objective which could be easily publicized, and the other to keep the National Office supplied with the wherewithal for its functions of raising more money and keeping the local committees in touch with international distribution facilities.

We hope this clears up any confusion or misunderstanding your error has caused.

The Executive,
The External Affairs Commission.

Hart House Recitals

The 1951-52 Hart House music recitals will start this afternoon at 5.10 p.m. in the music room when Miss Margo MacKinnon, a recent graduate, will return to sing selections from Bach, Bizet, and Gershwin. The Wednesday concerts will be alternately one o'clock concerts in the East Common Room and five o'clock concerts in the Music Room.

Four Wednesday five o'clock concerts are planned before Christmas and four are planned for the second term.

Miss Mackinnon took part in the "All-Varsity Revues" of 1949 and 1950 and was in the University college Music Club production of the "Red Mill". Last spring she was a soloist with the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra in a performance of "The St. Luke Passion".

Need Light And Beacon

Editor, The Varsity:

A letter appeared recently in your columns over the signature of Mr. E. Engelbert. In it he related two specific examples of human discourtesy and proceeded to elaborate using the words "these men". What men, Mr. Engelbert? The perpetrators of violence and discreditors of a great and honorable profession, or the Keenleysides? What is your point?

If you are denouncing the latter I feel that your conclusions can hardly go unchallenged. Should you, in a spirit of indignation, be chastising the former, I wholeheartedly agree.

It seems that non-conformity is a characteristic common to students of secondary institutions. Later we learn through the processes of social imitation and maturation that life is easier if we assume the color of our surroundings.

And trends may occur when thought or action is funnelled into paths provided by pressure groups and social or political manipulators.

Amid all this, it is indeed heartening to note that some men, and we speak of the educated men referred to by Mr. Engelbert, have the courage to rise above the sea of conformism and diplomatic reticence. A well-timed shock is required to make us aware of the malpractices flourishing in, and deceiving, complacency derived from, an established pattern.

In other words we need more than a light (universities), we need a beacon (Keenleysides) to point the way.

D. Grant Newton,
II UC.

Editor Fired

Chicago (Exchange)—The editor of the University of Chicago's student newspaper, the Maroon, was fired on October 5 by the University officials. Publication of the Maroon was suspended indefinitely.

This action follows closely on the heels of a threat by the United States Congress of a congressional investigation of alleged Communist activity on the Chicago campus. The undergraduate paper editor is still in Europe after attending the East Berlin youth rally.

Grads Have Own Organization

Editor, The Varsity:

On behalf of a number of members of the Graduate School I should like to use The Varsity's correspondence columns to draw to the attention of the approximately 1200 graduate students on the campus that a Graduate Student Union exists of which they are all automatically members. Its first Monday afternoon tea was held on October 15, when about 40 people were present.

These teas are held regularly on Monday afternoons and we feel that many graduate students would benefit by attending them. Aside from the enjoyment to be derived, a more concrete dividend was suggested by the secretary of the School, who informed us that more than one graduate student has remarked to him, "Oh yes, I met my wife at a Graduate Union tea". It is highly likely that the same has occurred with the sexes reversed.

Nominations are now being called for to fill the four offices on the executive. They must be filled by noon of Thursday, Oct. 18th. Each nomination must have three sponsors. The constitution of the Graduate Union allows as wide a program af activities as its members may desire; only initiative, and energy are required. Elections will be held next Mondey afternoon at four o'clock at the Graduate School on Hoskin Ave.

Harold B. Attin,
Grad Studies.

Small Wage Hike To McGill Profs

Montreal, Oct. 12 (CUP) — Moderate salary and wage increases to members of the McGill University staff were announced yesterday by Dr. F. Cyril James, McGill Principal.

He pointed out that with the federal government's grant to education, which this year will amount to over $500,000, McGill will be in the black for the first time since VE Day. Earlier, Dr. James had said McGill's deficit for the coming session would be $505,000.

"Salaries at the universities of Alberta and Toronto have also risen in recent months as a result of increased provincial grants, while the scale of salaries at universities in the United States is still higher," he stated.

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

We intercepted a vicious rumour flying around the campus yesterday to the effect that the Blues had won the Yates Cup. Whether this particular character was merely mistaken in point of time and thought that last Saturday's tussle with the Mustangs was the playoff game or whether he feels that the Blues are a cinch to win the pennant now that they have downed both McGill and Western, is pretty hard to say.

What we can say without any hesitation is that our friend is a long way off the beaten track on both counts. We would hate to create an impression of pessimism (the exact opposite is probably far more typical of a college newspaper sport department), but anyone who thinks the Blues are a shoo-in for the championship have got another think coming.

Just offhand, we can think of three factors that influence our opinion. The first of them is Queen's. It is a bit of Intercollegiate history that the Gaels count their football season as a success if they defeat the Blues even once and lose all the other games. For some strange reason, we have become their traditional rivals and they make no bones about it. And let us not forget that Queen's was the only team to defeat last year's champs twice. Giant killers?

The second reason is our dear old friend John P. Metras. While in our heart, as in the hearts of every died-in-the-wool Varsity fan, there is little love for the Mustang mentor, there is, nevertheless, a great deal of healthy respect. Metras has pulled the cat out of the bag on more than one occasion in the past.

The third, and probably the most valid consideration is what we hear from our little inner man. We have been looking on this Intercollegiate play for too many seasons to be at all sure that everything goes according to schedule.

Let's look at it this way. As far as can be gathered from league play so far, the Blues have the most powerful club in the Intercollegiate loop. Their chances of winning the coveted Yates hardware look brighter than anyone else's. And let's leave it at that.

We have stood on the sidelines during two Intramural football games this week and cannot help but remarking on the difference between them. The Trinity-St. Mike's game was a good one to watch, with spirit and some excellent football for this stage of the Intramural schedule.

On the other hand, the Vic-UC fame played Monday afternoon was far from an exhibition of good football. Both Victoria's majors were scored directly as a result of fumbles, and there was little of the smooth play that was evident in much of the game yesterday afternoon. Perhaps the difficulty is nothing more than inadequate pre-season practice, but if Trinity and St. Mike's can turn the trick it seems that someone has been a little slow getting his job done as far as the others are concerned.

The trouble with this last-minute training business is that the conditioning is the thing most neglected, wth injuries, and serious ones, the natural result.

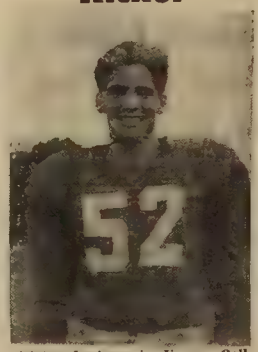
Pitching Sportshoes

By BEAUREGARD YUMPF

There were three contests in soccer yesterday afternoon. In the lunch hour game, Trinity A blanked Sr. Vic 2-0 on two goals by Rowan in the first half. In the four o'clock tilt, Knox trimmed Wycliffe 5-0. Self led the winners with three tallies with Welch and Moore adding singletons. In another late match, Pre-Meds took on Architecture, with the Medsmen carrying off a 1-0 decision of a first half tally by Don McDonald.

In volleyball, Pre-Meds took St. Mike's twice. The II year Doctors took the Irish B team in two straight, and the I year Medicos took the Double Blue C squad 15-8 and 15-2. Forestry got a fighting Dent B team winning 15-8, 15-7, 15-6. First year Meds had trouble in the first game with UC III, being extended to a 20-18 count before coming out on top, but in the second the Medsmen came through 15-5.

In night V-ball action Knox took UC IV 15-0 and 15-6, while Emmanuel had little trouble beating Wycliffe A 15-4 and 15-7.



SPS were forced to default a noon hour lacrosse contest to Meds II when they could not produce a fully equipped goal tender by game time. In another boxla action, UC whipped Trinity A 13-3. Dutch Young was top man for the Redmen with five goals and teammate Longhouse netted four. Bryan got two for the losers.

In the late game on the lacrosse front, Forestry edged Dents 6-4 in a penalty-packed contest. A total of ten sentences were handed out by the referee, four to the winners and six to the losers. The Woodsmen were ahead 6-2 going into the last session, and held off a determined Dent drive. Clark was top scorer, netting three for the winners, while Deacoff of Forestry and Diefenbaker of Dents had two apiece.

Correction

The Women's Intercollegiate Tennis Tournament will be held on Friday, Oct. 19 and Saturday, Oct. 20 at the Toronto Tennis Club, and not at the St. Hilda's courts as reported in yesterday's paper. Students will be admitted free to watch these matches.

Kicker

Pictured above is Jimmy Bell, whose sure-footed place kicking has sparked the Blues in their two league games. Against both Western and McGill Jimmy got one field goal in one attempt, and made both converts good, and these ten points place him second only to teammate Steve Oneschuck in the Intercollegiate scoring. Jimmy has shown well again this year as a defensive end, turning in some good tackles especially in the McGill game.

Sr. Interfac Track Meet Today At 3:15

The Senior Interfaculty track meet today will start at 3:15 at the stadium. The final entries have been taken, and there is a good number entered in all events, though none are what you could call crowded.

The late start means that the events will have to be crammed into a space of two hours. This will be hard on athletes entered in two events, but the Intercollegiate meet is only one week away, and everyone needs a good hard workout. The officials will have to get things going bang-bang-bang to keep up to the schedule that has been set.

There will also be two races held over from last year's junior meet, the 440 and 880. These will be run immediately before the senior races, which will pretty well rule out anyone running both senior and junior in these events.

If the weather keeps up as well as it has, times should be good. Favorites in the sprints are Doug Wilson, a postgrad, transferring from Western, who is ineligible for Senior Intercollegiate; Mike Zuberec; Don Fawcett, who won the junior 100, and Larry Yeigh, who won the junior 220. Eric Kofmel and Al Varga (a transfer from McMaster) in the 440, Murray Gaziuk in the 880, and Herb Tilson, Chuck Wortman and George McMullin in the mile and three mile. Bazos and Ojala in the hurdles, Henderson and Vrzesneviski in the javelin, Endel Tulving in the discus, and Bernie Deuchars in the shot, will be other names to watch.

One thing's sure: with 27,000 seats in the stadium there'll be no shortage of good seats.

Sportswoman

The Vic I baseball team suffered a major blow Tuesday afternoon when the PHE I team defeated them 14-5. The teamwork displayed by PHE was evident in the first inning when they allowed no Vic runs at all. While the Vic team pulled themselves together in the third and last inning, only allowing three runs, the PHE players actually won the game in the second with eight runs. Donna Housson pitched for the winning team.

An even more one-sided game was going on at the same time in the S.W. corner of Trinity field when St. Hilda's walked away with a score of 15-3 against PHE II's. Lacking a short-stop and one fielder, PHE was no match for the hard-hitting Saints, whose pitcher Joan Stirling put a fast spin on the ball thus preventing any long field hits by PHE.

Last Quarter Point Gives Trinity Win In Season Opener

By FRANK QUINLAN

Fumbles and some overenthusiastic line play led to the downfall of St. Mike's yesterday as they lost a 7-6 heartbreaker to an alert Trinity team in the opening game of the season for both sides. All the scoring in the game came as a result of bobbles; the diference was that the Buttery Boys only fumbled once.

The contest was bitterly fought and tempers flared more than once. It took only a couple of minutes of the game to elapse before one player from each side was put out for fighting. Rough play on the line was a hindrance to the Mikemen in particular as their last ditch stand to pull the game out of the fire was stopped dead when a long pass was called back for elbowing.

Trinity struck first late in the second quarter after taking over the ball on their own 25. They made 15 yards when the Double Blue were penalized for piling-on. Thomas took a pass to put his team on the Irish 40, and two plays later Trinity kicked to Miller of St. Mike's who let the ball slip through his hands. The Red and Black recovered on the one-yard line and Lawson bulled over on the next play to put his teammates out in front. Andison's kick was good to give Trinity a 6-0 half-time lead.

The third quarter saw Trinity suffer an attack of fumblitis and muff a kick on their 12 yard line. Dave Winters split the Trinity line for five and then spun around end for the touchdown. Heughen's successful convert deadlocked the game at 6-all.

The Mikemen really turned on the heat the next time they got their hands on the ball. After Miller took a Trinity punt on his own 45, Jim Coglan, a threat all day, burst through to the Red and Black 35. Russel and Winters alternated in carrying the ball, bringing it down to the 22. Coglan raced around the left end for another first down but the referee's horn sounded again to frustrate the Double Blue. A holding penalty was called, the run nullified, and St. Mike's set back ten yards.

That break was all a fighting Trinity twelve needed. St. Mike's punted twice over their line but each time the boys in Black managed to get the ball out. They kicked out of danger on their first play. With the ball resting on the Irish 45, Andison rifled a pass to Meredith on the 30. Lanky end Corcoran snagged another pass to place the Buttery Boys in scoring position on the 12. The St. Mike's line held for two plays so Trinity booted the pigskin over to Hoskin Ave. for the all-important deciding point.

With time running out St. Mike's made a desperate bid for victory. Miller and Wiant combined for a first down. After two futile plays, Miller heaved a long pass to Jerry Decker who made a sensational catch with three opposing players breathing down his neck. However an elbowing penalty was called on St. Mike's and the pass was disallowed. That was the clincher, and a few seconds later the game was over.

The play was pretty even throughout. The winners were better in the air while the losers had the stronger ground attack. Like most evenly-matched contests the breaks decided the outcome, and the triumphant Buttery Boys were able to capitalize on their opportunities.

VARSITY SPORTS

Soccer Blues Take On OAC This Afternoon

Both the Senior and Intermediate Soccer Blues renew their rivalry with the Guelph Aggies in two soccer matches to be played at 3:00 o'clock this afternoon on the front campus.

The Big Blues will be out after their second straight win over OAC, having beaten them 7-4 in the away-game last Friday. The team will be the same as that fielded at Guelph, as the Blues came through without any injuries.

The man to stop on the Aggies squad has proved to be Louisy, their starry centre-forward. He has racked up a total of eight goals in the two games that OAC have played, scoring five against Western, and three against the Blues last Friday. Doug Moffat, Varsity's centre-half will have his hands full stopping him, but if checked closely, Louisy should not cause too much trouble. If the rest of the squad play as they did on Friday, the Blues should repeat their win.

The Intermediates will also field the same team as last Friday. The Little Blues do not expect too much trouble with the OAC seconds as they shut them out 3-0 last week. The Intermediates' defence is particularly strong, and takes quite a bit of denting. The forward line is fast and the combination of Mat Derzai, and Al Bowler on the right wing give the attacking line a bit of scoring punch.

Catcher

Hank Tamowski is playing his first season with the Blue team after spending last year with the Intermediates, playing on the half line. This year he has been moved over to end and is working well in that position. In Saturday's game he caught Lawson's pass in the Western zone, to cap off a spectacular downfield march, giving the Blues their first touch of the contest.

College Too Much To Bear For Bear

Kingston—(CUP)—Observers at Queen's University here report a new supporter for the Golden Gaels this fall. The Queen's Journal learned that a bear cub, scheduled to live an uneventful north woods existence, had been apprehended and was being forwarded to Kingston shortly by resourceful supporters of the Gaels.

Last session's bear was apparently unable to settle down after a gay college career. He refused to eat and sleep at regular intervals throughout the winter and his behaviour became incorrigible. Returned to his Mosshead Lodge home near Mattawa, Ontario, a sharp stick accidently became lodged between his neck and collar and his otherwise happy life was ended by a shot.

Get The Point?

Let's not take this game too seriously!

Coed Finds Smith College Staid But Most Enjoyable

—By CHRISTIE BUSSELL (Trin.) and CAROL MacKINNON (Vic.)

"But it's a girls' college!" exclaims the Toronto co-ed in considering the exchange with Smith College. We who have been exchange students think that a year at Smith is well worth the loss of the male element at Varsity, for a year anyway. We found a new life, a new atmosphere, bicycling to classes along the shady walks, wearing blue jeans or peddle pushers, enjoying the freedom of discussions in an all-feminine classroom, or even suffering from the New England morality of a 10:15 curfew.

Is Smith a finishing school for wealthy society girls? Quite the contrary, informality in classes, manners and clothing is the style. Discussion groups over beer and sandwiches in the professor's home, the library where students browse in the stacks instead of standing in line, and Paradise Pond in the center of the campus for canoeing on a spring day create an easy atmosphere there. In the Smith community, where all are Arts students, using the same library, living in similar residences (and all doing household chores in them) there is little opportunity for social or intellectual snobbery.

Another critic of American education asked if we had enjoyed our holiday at Smith last year. True, the Smith student has fewer courses than the Arts student at Toronto, but less skimming is possible. Frequent tests require a continual upkeep on every subject, and lessen the final exam fever. Call it spoon-feeding if you will. A great many Toronto students could profit from a dose of it.

A real difference in Smith's educational program is the degree to which specialization is required. All students must major in one or two subjects but are never forced to study one field to the exclusion of almost all others. Because course regulations are not so rigid as at Toronto, the Smith student can shop around for the best professors. A couple of lecturers we had at Smith were themselves worth the whole year away from Toronto.

Smith College defines an education on broad outlines. By her fourth year the average Smith student has sampled a great variety of subjects, including probably one or two courses in art and music. There is little talk of student apathy, because the students take a real interest in campus and cultural activities outside their field of study. At a series of three scholarly lectures on the subject of the Problem of Existence an audience of 400 attended from a college of 2,000. Dramatic productions and concerts, including Sir Thomas Beecham and the Royal Philharmonic, were well attended. Partly, of course, this is owing to the fact that Smith is a self-contained community; the town of Northampton offers few distractions to the college student.

One distraction which neither the College nor town offers is a resident male population. However, only seven miles separate Smith from Amherst College and the University of Massachusetts, and the road is a much-travelled one. The aim of a really socially-minded Smith girl is to get away on as many week-ends as possible to Harvard, Yale and Princeton, but Amherst is the old stand-by for casual dating.

The majority of Canadians think of American college students as rowdy, cliquey and immature. The opposite is true of Smith girls. We were impressed with Smith's responsible student government. Electioneering was conducted on a basis far superior to the Toronto method of posting placards on the trees along Philosophers' Walk. At Smith there was little of the rah-rah atmosphere that we so associate with American colleges. It is in fact to supply that very lack that seven Smith girls have enrolled this year as exchange students at Toronto. Lady Godiva Band, give them your best!

CUP BRIEFS

Ottawa—(CUP)—All league competition in football has been abolished while the future of other sports activities at Carleton College remains doubtful, as a result of the withdrawal of a $4,000 grant by the university authorities for athletic activities. In addition the college will have to get along without an athletic director or assistant.

A meeting last spring to decide how to continue sports activities according to the money available ended in the decision to drop football, the major expense in the past, but to try and maintain the other sports. Carleton professors will undertake the leadership in various activities to be continued.

Hockey, with its budget sliced by more than half, swimming, track, golf and skiing will be maintained. Basketball retains the largest slice of the budget. Carleton maintains two teams, one intercollegiate, the other city intermediate.

Total athletic income this year amounts to $2,750, drawn entirely from students' fees and gate receipts. Though the total budget was set to allow a surplus of $131, it is expected that smaller enrollment and unforseen expenses will result in a deficit of about $150, the Carleton, undergraduate newspaper reported.

Kingston, Oct. 12—(CUP—The Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, Chancellor of the University of Toronto, will receive the Honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (LL.D.) from Queen's University this Friday, along with ten other prominent Canadians and one American.

The installation of Dr. A. W. Mackintosh as the twelfth principal of Queen's is also scheduled that afternoon.

Kingston—(CUP)—A university unit for coeds who want to become officers in the women's branch of the navy will be recruited at Queen's University, the women's society president announced last week.

The unit will be similar to the University Naval Training Division for men.

BEAR, GIRLS

...And Knights

Big game hunters, wild Indians, mediaeval knights on horseback, in pairs or by dozens, no stunt is too great for the boys in the Blue and White Society's Department of Organized Mayhem! Whether it be a parade, a lunch hour gathering on the front Campus, or half time at a football game, these are the fellows who always spark the event by showing up in outlandish or ridiculous costumes.

Calculated to appear on the surface entirely un-rehearsed and dis-organized so that anything can happen, many of these zany goings-on are planned down to the last detail on paper, and require up to two weeks of spade-work and chasing around for props.

For instance, last year for the Queen's game, the Department heard that the Gaels' mascot was a real live bear-cub, and decided at once that the appropriate stunt to produce at the game would be a bear hunt! But a group of just plain bear hunters was not enough, so for variety they produced a collection of big game hunters, of many types. There was a British Colonel from Bengal, a Daniel Boone from the backwoods, a Commando with his pet Bazooka gun, and an Indian guide, laden with enough stores for a small army. For this stunt fireworks, guns of the period, a pup tent, buckskins, a home-made stovepipe Bazooka that really fired and dozens of other articles were needed. No wonder it took a week of planning and searching to put it on.

In planning the stunts, the mayhem men attempt, of course, to make them characteristic of the spirit of the day.

For example, their latest presentation, just last Saturday, at the Western game, saluted the royal visitors by producing a guard of mediaeval earls and barons, complete with chain mail, and bright heraldic tunics. They were apparently Royal retainers who became lost during the tour of Hart House. In addition to their own antics the knights stepped into the breach at half-time sporting spirited chargers in aid of the Red Feather Campaign.

A great deal has probably been said about the place these stunts occupy at football games, and whether they are really necessary. The Blue and White Society believes they contribute greatly to the cultivation of the right 'Spirits' at the games. For this reason a portion of the Society's annual budget is put aside for the creation of weird and wonderful doings on the gridiron, by people other than the players. For half the fun comes from getting the fans into that ripperty-rapperty frame of mind to which these stunts along with the band and cheerleaders contribute.

Many people wonder just what type of student willingly takes part week after week in these maniacal goings-on. Actually, the stuntmen represent all courses and Faculties; from first year Trinity, to Fourth year Maths and Physics, from Pre-Meds to Honour English. And not only males have taken part either. In a recent playoff two of the wooly animal suits used were adequately filled by members of the fairer sex, one being the Woman's Editor of The Varsity!

And so with Homecoming weekend just around the corner, you can be sure the Department of Organized Mayhem is busy these nights around its boiling cauldron of ideas, like the witches in Macbeth, cooking up new ingenious madness to spring on its unsuspecting public.

A Visit, Again

The question of Soviet students visiting Canada came up again last night at the External Affairs Commission meeting.

And there were some disturbing aspects about it. Most of the discussion stemmed from well known Communist students, like Shirley Endicott, head of the campus Labor Progressive Party group. And most of the answers that group received from the External Affairs people weren't answers at all — they were evasions.

The inference presented by the External Affairs Commission was that the whole matter of the Toronto stand on the Soviet student question at the recent NFCUS Conference held in London has been well and adequately presented to the campus. A request (in the form of a resolution presented by Miss Endicott) that a clear statement giving reasons for Toronto's vote against such a visit was defeated.

Although a resolution stating that the matter will be looked into before the final External Affairs meeting next spring was accepted, the feeling of the meeting seemed to be: Let's try and forget it.

The fact remains that there has been no public explanation of the reasons for the Toronto stand, outside a general list of reasons presented in an editorial in this paper. These were Conference reasons as we understood them, and had perhaps nothing to do with the attitudes of Toronto representatives.

The disturbing thing about last night's meeting is that the questions must come, it appears, from the Communists, or their sympathisers. And when this happens, no clear cut reasons, no solid argument is advanced to support the Toronto stand, but vague things about "money, etc.," are bandied about.

It may well be that the Toronto delegates had good and sufficient reason for voting on this issue as they did. If so, they should be only too glad to bring those reasons out into the public view, where they can be discussed.

If on the other hand the reasons were not so sound, then perhaps it would be best to keep them from being widely known. There is nothing like the glare of publicity to show up the flaws in argument.

We feel that the NFCUS Conference as a whole, made a big mistake in not asking the Soviet students to come to Canada. They had nothing really to lose, beyond the usual battle with the narrow thinking we are developing on issues which concern communism in any way.

Certainly in a representative organization like the National Federation of Canadian University Students, controversial issues such as the Soviet visit should be taken to the student body at large. Although the NFCUS Conference makes claim to be representative, there is no guarantee that it is infallible. Perhaps it has made its own fears those of the Canadian student, and unjustly so.

In any case, it would be encouraging to be able to note that when such a matter is brought up in open meetings, the answers are firm and definite, and adequate to answer questions asked. This should be true no matter who brings the matter up.

Sid Wax, chairman of the Council, and head of the NFCUS foreign arm for this year, made it clear last night that NFCUS is not abandoning the idea of East-West contact, for it is going ahead with plans to meet the representatives of the International Union of Students to work out, if possible, some of the problems between us. No matter what the outcome of such a meeting, it has little to do with Soviet students visiting Canada.

That issue still needs to be discussed in public.

THE CHURCH IN EUROPE

The Empty Pew

Back From a Summer's Study in a Dockland Settlement in East-end London, England, The Writer Looks At Religion in London, Paris, Cologne and Rome.

By WILLIAM GLENESK

Outside Vivian Van Damm's Windmill Theatre in Piccadilly Circus, the Londoner's eye is caught by the blaze of a neon sign: "WE NEVER CLOSE." And the show goes on, with the West End balconies filled to the rafters in these post-war years.

But the pews of the cathedral, the central hall and the parish church are gathering local dust these days as the Londoner goes to the cinema, the corner pub, or stays at home. He says:

"In the city we need no bells:
Let them waken the suburbs.

"I journeyed to the suburbs, and there I was told:

We toil for six days, on the seventh we must motor
To Hindhead, or Maidenhead.
If the weather is foul we stay at home and read the papers . . .
And the Church does not seem to be wanted
In country or in suburb; and in the town
Only for important weddings."

Poet T. E. Eliot's words rang true as looked around at the empty pews in the east-end London church, where thirty persons were scattered in rows that will hold a thousand. It was like a cell-group meeting in Massey Hall. In another service in a makeshift chapel, as the incense burned I saw with a shock that of those present, forty were women, and only two were men. And the majority were middle-aged or old. The inference is clear.

In England, religion is living on borrowed time. Thirty years ago Christianity was in the blood of the dominant nations. At least the ruling powers sang "God Of Our Fathers" or engraved their coinage "In God We Trust," and pretended respect from Christian sanctions. And the King ruled by the grace of God.

Rudyard Kipling wrote of a region east of Suez where "there ain't no Ten Commandments and a man can haise a thirst." But between the time of Kipling and our time, the frontier of the Ten Commandments has retreated from the Suez to the Rhine. There is no common moral appeal in the consulates of Europe, and where "The nations used to be sure of themselves; to-day they are in terror of themselves." The empty pew in England points at a rampant agnostic epidemic on the Continent which Jean Paul Sartre painted in bold strokes in Le Diable et le Bon Dieu.

A spiritual vacuum hugs Paris in its 2000th Anniversary Year. A widespread hostility to the clergy faces the cause of religion at every turn. Like the problem in Russia in 1917, where God, the Church and the Czar were one in the eyes of the people, in France the cathedrals have emptied as men saw the Church as a tool of the bourgeoisie. The vast mass of the workers, the proletariat, sees the priest as an enemy of the people, and gives him a wide berth.

An experiment to buck this antipathy is under way in the midst of the Montmartre slums. Founded in 1943 by the late Abbe Gaudin, the Roman Catholic Paris Mission has 25 priests who doffed their robes to work in industry, each in a slum area on his own. I saw in the Byzantine towers of the Sacre Coeur Cathedral a symbol of the gulf between the common man and the opulence and irrelevance of his Church. I saw in the Paris Mission a sign that these priests meant business in taking God into the assembly line. As France faces the force of futility, saddened in the 19th Century because she could no longer believe in God, that sadness creeps deeper in this 20th Century when she finds she can no longer believe in man. The priests of the Paris Mission have their Faith on the front lines as they seek out the God in man.

Rome is another story. In the Eternal City in June I stared hard at the pagan conditions rearing their heads in the abject poverty, crime and glitter along the Tiber's banks. Yet en route to an audience with the Pope, the magnificence of St. Peter's and the ornate gilt of the Vatican seemed in stark irony to its Founder's dictum: "Feed my sheep." The hungry are not fed in Rome.

In three days at a CYO youth hostel, the Hermann Josef Haus in downtown Cologne, I saw religion turned to reality in the post-war ruins. A stone's throw from the twin towers of the Cathedral, the hostel looks like a modern YMCA, was built by the boys with financial aid from the Church. Thus in spite of the threat of the Soviet 200 kilometres west, of low wages and long hours, crumbling walls on all sides, and the splitting of Germany into East and West, these boys face the future with lifted eyes. Religion is no opiate of the people in this city. It is their life.

In an age where science of ends lies buried in the science of means, where a spiritual thrombosis strikes the old world mind, the time is ripe for a prophet. Like the voice crying in the wilderness, T. S. Eliot puts the question: "Has the Church failed mankind, or has mankind failed the Church?" And what of the empty pew?

OUR READERS WRITE

Oh, Brother!

Editor, The Varsity:

You know, we have seen too much. No country is absolutely good, and none is absolutely bad, and when people think of the present, they tend to focus their attention on defects and when they think of the past, they see everything through rosy glasses. This is why we sometimes raise objections against aspects of the Canadian way of life.

But we Europeans from behind the Iron Curtain got a reminder just now.

We saw people and kids, and they were all cheering and waving the flag. There is nothing unusual about it to me.

But today when I think of it, that instead of the hammer and sickle I saw Union Jacks and instead of Joe's repelling moustache I saw Princess Elizabeth's sympathetic face in the papers.

. . . Oh brother, am I ever happy!

Dull Book

Editor, The Varsity:

Last weekend it was my misfortune to take home a volume of Chinese philosophy. Since it was not a very new book, I had hopes of many interesting hours. Imagine my disillusion when I opened it.

All the pages were immaculately clean; and I could find no leads as to worthwhile pages because not a single page-corner had been turned down. I could only infer that everything was important — there was no ink-underlined selection of passages to help me and every single page was in place. There was not even the comic relief of deeply-gouged pencil comments in any margins. Nor was my progress enlivened by little squibs of encouragement or disdain addressed to the editor of the book.

More Letters On Page 5

I have learned my lesson. From now on, and only with the welfare of suffering fellow-readers in mind, I shall do my best to make each volume that passes through my hands into something unique. I only hope that subsequent readers of this library book fully appreciate these indelible changes in its present dull format.

ENUMERATORS' RECORD FORM

(To be used in Urban Electoral Districts)

The following name will appear on the list of persons entitled to vote at the forthcoming election of a member to the Assembly, in Polling Subdivision No. 28 of the Electoral District of South York.

These two slips entitle persons not of age to vote in the forthcoming election. The top one reads: in Polling Subdivision No. "57" of the Electoral District of St. Andrew. Name: "Crawford, Male"; Address: "408 Huron St."; Occupation: "Student"; "Esther Sweig," Enumerator; "Anne Paplan," Enumerator. The second one reads: in Polling Subdivision No. "28" of the Electoral District of South York. Name: "Krehm, Adele"; Address: "355 Lauder Ave."; Occupation: "Student"; "Margaret Williams," Enumerator; "Lillian" (surname illegible).

To vote in the forthcoming provincial election you must fulfill the following qualifications:

(1) You must be 21 years of age.
(2) You must be a Canadian citizen or a British subject.
(3) You must have resided in Ontario for six months.
(4) You must have resided in the electoral district in which you are registered at the time of the writ of election. (In this case, Oct. 6.)

It is somewhat surprising to find that in the comparatively small population of The Varsity staff two persons who are now registered voters, who do not fulfill these qualifications. They are both under twenty-one.

One staffer, Mal Crawford, lives in a rooming house. When the enumerators came around he was not in: the landlady did not know his age, but felt he was twenty-one, and a slip was left for him. Under the regulations the enumerators should have called at least once again to find out whether he was in fact twenty-one. They did not do so.

The other staffer, Adele Krehm, was home when the enumerators called. She indicated that she wasn't twenty-one, was left a slip anyway a few days later.

Enumerators jobs are political patronage. Half of the names of appointees for enumerators are supplied by the government, the other half by the opposition. As far as possible they are mixed, in teams of two. They are paid $32 for their work up to 250 names, get eight cents a name after that. They have three days in which to do their job.

Apparently some enumerators are not doing their job well. Certainly those whose names get on the voters list who are not qualified to vote will not exercise their franschise.

Yet a serious breach of the Voters' List Act has occurred. If such a breach was unintentional it should be corrected. If there are any other reasons, those charged with preparing the voters' list should take the appropriate action.

Embryo Freshman Reception Shown SAC By Arts College

Last night the Students' Administrative Council tabled a plan for the beginnings of a university-wide freshman orientation program. However, the four Arts colleges which are sponsoring the program say they have it all figured out and will continue with it.

The plan calls for a set of invitation tea dances at each of the four colleges during the latter part of this term. If these dances prove a satisfactory method of introducing freshmen from the different colleges, the program will be gradually extended to include other faculties.

The Arts Colleges asked the SAC for money to cover mailing and publicity costs for the dances. The cost of the dances themselves would be handled by the colleges. The matter was tabled until representatives of the colleges could meet with the SAC Extra-Curricular Affairs Co-ordinating Committee to discuss details of the money needed.

The plan is the outcome of a meeting held last spring between representatives of the colleges and faculties to discuss ways and means of an integrated freshman reception for the fall. No accord was reached at the meeting because there were no concrete plans offered, according to Dave Rose, President of the University College Literary and Athletic Society.

Since that meeting, University, Victoria, Trinity and St. Michael's Colleges conceived this plan.

The proposed program of dances is intentionally proposed on a small scale as an experiment. It has been planned in the hope that a university-wide perspective would be fostered.

Graeme Ferguson, Vic, complained that the dances did not achieve the primary purpose of the original scheme, which was (through a series of lectures and discussions) to encourage student-faculty discussion of such questions as the purpose of a university and the place of students in it.

Paul Forestell, St. Mike's, explained that the dances would really be "lots of chairs and little dancing", and that facuty and students would have a chance to meet at them.

"There is already a program of interfaculty exchange at dances," pointed out Doug Sherk, SPS. "We had co-eds from two Arts colleges at the Engineering freshman dance," he continued.

The four colleges also presented recommendations for freshman receptions in following years. They warned that the question of a university-wide program must be approached slowly. "Next year", they said, "perhaps, one or two other faculties might be included. When the results of this are apparent and have proved rewarding, the program might be further implemented to include more faculties."

They also warned against a university-wide freshman orientation reception program which would interfere with the already existing freshman facilities as they already exist in the various faculties and colleges.

WUA Vote Only 35% Elect Five

A 35 per cent vote was recorded at the Women's Undergraduate Association's by-elections yesterday, although there was a good turnout of voters from the Freshman class. Jean Martin, I Soc. and Phil., was elected president of the first year.

Anne Innis, I Honour Science, Carolyn Schmidt, I Modern, and Catherine May, I M.P. and C., were elected to the first year executive while Sally Hogg, III Eng., was elected as secretary of the WUA.

The UC Lit Fall by-elections are today from 11:00 a.m. until 2:15 p.m. in the Junior Common Room. Herbert Noble and William Rudd have been nominated for the position of assistant secretary-treasurer.

Grant Gibson, Wilfred Kelly, Joseph Scanlon and Marvin Siegel are running for 1st year president, while Thomas Daly and H. Wickett have been nominated for 1st year Literary director. The only other 1st year office being contested is secretary-treasurer, for which Ron-

United Nation Campus Club Meets Today

The University of Toronto's United Nations Club is holding its first formal meeting today in Room 11 of Trinity College at 4:00 p.m. This club is a newcomer to the campus, and is based on successful experience of similar groups at the University of British Columbia and others.

Michael Hind-Smith, former U.B.C. officer, said it was found that students have an interest in learning the fundamentals of international organization. "They have a desire to play a more concrete part in promoting this world laboratory of co-operation", he said.

The first item of business will be discussion of the draft Constitution prepared by the steering committee, John Tinker III Law, chairman of the committee stated. This will be followed by election of officers and presentation of a tentative program for discussion by the meeting-at-large.

An interesting section of the program will be devoted to preparing a model Security Council and Assembly. The experience gained in presenting the viewpoint of other nations under a UN atmosphere has been found to be a dramatic way of making the problems of the world's people real and vital to students isolated on the campus. A trip to UN Headquarters in New York in co-operation with the International Relations Club is also planned.

Staff Notice

There will be a general meeting of all Varsity staff members in Room 11, UC, at 1:00 p.m. today. This meeting is for editors, night editors, reporters, sports and make-up staffs and any other staff members in special departments who are regular contributors to The Varsity. This is a special meeting and members of the staff should make sure that they are present.

Early Year Book Had Pin-ups Plus

"A $5 shoe for $3.50." The "Mandolin, Banjo and Guitar Club." Such were the prospects offered to the students of the University of Toronto in the first issue of Torontonensis. The dateline reads 1898.

Of course, as prices rose and "Victorian" became less of an age and more of a memory, the aspect of Torontonensis changed, but the first few issues have all the qualities of a good satire. A satire complete with background, in the form of floral "wallpaper" in delicate shades of brown for the flyleaf.

Today, Torontonensis is an up and coming publication of the SAC that hopes to become a year book for the whole university instead of just the graduating year. Along with the traditional pictures of graduates, clubs, and fraternities, there will be photographs of campus life to form a diary of the year's extra-curricular events.

But the first few years of Torontonensis saw its pages filled with a hodgepodge of sentiment as well as fact. The women graduates of 1898 "The Fair Ones of '98"—by a happy coincidence, 52 in number, were coyly classed as Diamonds, Clubs, Hearts, or Spades, under the heading of a dainty translation from Virgil—"A thing of moods and fancies is a woman."

This first issue also contained a photograph of the "Physical Laboratory," apparently equipped mainly with mirrors and balances, a short story about a campus romance during examinations entitled "A Man and a Girl and a Book" by B. K. Sandwell, (editor emeritus of Saturday Night), and an advertisement for the "Whiteley Exerciser," featuring a photograph of a discreetly draped Amazon. Vying with each other there were ads for the Upper Canada Tract Society and Hiram Walker.

The issue of 1903, carried away by the coed aspect of university life, made a long step in the direction of the Varga Calendar. Scattered through its pages are full length, if somewhat idealized, drawings of the "Gentle Sex," highlighted by verses that may have inspired Edgar Guest. One of these, "The Summer Girl," shows a Gibson girl, clad in a long skirt, red jacket, and ascot, tennis racquet in gloved hand. She inspired the following lyric:

"The summer girl once won
my heart
With grace beyond the reach of art,
But when she cruelly pilted
me,
I thought life aye must winter be."

The Hockey Girl" is not quite up to Gibson standards. In fact, her discreet skirt, blue and white sweater, and stylish night cap could inspire a semi-limerick:

"Hove you heard of the girl who plays hockey?
She can certainly sling lots of slang.
While her English is what is called rocky,
Yet to hearts she can bring a love pang."

They must have been campaigning for a student union even then. There is a suitably Dickensonian cartoon of President James Lowden approaching a soup tureen labeled "Ontario Treasury." The caption? "Oliver Twist Lowden asks for more."

However, the people to really suffer were the graduating stu-

SAC At A Glance

In what may well be the most machine-like meeting in their history the Students' Administrative Council last night:

—covered minutes, correspondence, reports of six committees and eight items of new business in a little over two hours.

—ratified the choice of Jean de Margerie and Syd Wax, President and Chairman of the International Affairs Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students respectively at the Canadian delegates to an international conference of student unions to be held in Edinburgh in January.

—decided to hold a Feather Fair in support of the Red Feather Community Chest Drive, in pite of a Council decision last year not to hold the Fair.

—heard that as of Oct. 9 the SAC Book Exchange had already exceeded total sales for last year, and had done over $9,400 worth of business.

—heard that the University Orchestra would be able "to get by" if Convocation Hall could be reserved for practice once before their concert, to be held Dec. 9.

—decided that tea would be served at the opening of the Carnegie Record Collection on Oct. 22 in the Faculty Lounge of the Mechanical Building.

—on the request of Engineering rep. Doug Sherk changed the minutes to read Engineering Faculty, instead of SPS, since the name had been changed 28 years ago.

—appointed Lois Graham, Nursing, as Music Commissioner.

—after a five-minute recess to meet each other, appointed George Hayman, III SPS, Chairman of the Blue and White Society, and Doug White, Emmanuel, Chairman of the Radio Committee.

—approved the expenditure of $250 for the expenses of the Rochester Glee Club, which will be taking part in the Blue and White Night in Hart House November 10.

—were requested by All-Varsity Revue Commissioner Politi, Dents, to stir up enthusiasm in their colleges and faculty for AVR work.

—were told by SAC President Syd Wax that Laval University has invited 10 or 15 Toronto students to help celebrate its 100th anniversary next February.

—empowered the Political Science Club to act in the capacity of organizer of the Mock Parliament.

—were requested at the end of the meeting by Associate Secretary-Treasurer Miss Parkes to tidy their places and put their cigarette butts in the ash trays so they would leave the room neat.

Chuck Hanley, UC, is seen above speaking at last night's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council. Hanley, Chairman of the University of Toronto Debating Union, delivered a report which recommended, among other things, that the Political Science Club organize the Mock Parliament, a job formerly done by the various political clubs under chairmanship of the Debates Commissioner.

Reopen HH Sing Song Friday Select Wide Range of Songs

The Hart House Sing Song will begin the 1951-52 season this Friday at 1:30 in the East Common Room.

The Sing Song, almost as old as Hart House itself, was inaugurated in 1919-20 by Ross Workman and Professor J. W. Melson, B.A.Sc., Professor of Civil Engineering, Surveying and Geodesy at the University of Toronto. The Sing Song was and is still intended to be an informal gathering, set aside from the more formal atmosphere that is present in the Glee Club and Sunday Concerts.

Workman, a graduate of S.P.S., will be back again this year leading the Sing Song with his "finger shadows," while Professor Melson although not as active in the Sing Songs as he was in former years still finds time to drop in occasionally and take part.

Pat McClory will be behind the lantern operating the lantern slides and the pianist for this year is Jim Hall, in 2nd year Meds.

Once the progra mis more advanced the Sing Song will be held on Tuesday and Thursday of each week.

Songs range from the Old Ballads and Camp Songs to Current Hits and Musicals. 'Oklahoma' ranks high on the list in popularity. The selections vary each day and there are some 1,300-1,500 slides to choose from with the list continually growing as the requests for each song increases.

The Sing Songs are conducted in the darkened Common Room. The song is projected onto the screen and Workman's aforementioned 'finger shadows' appear at the bottom of the screen to guide the students as they sing.

These informal sessions of singing are much approved of by the students. The room is always crowded and there is an overflow into the hall.

Only men are allowed and one does not need to be a Mario Lanza to attend. As long as he can open his mouth and make noises he is welcome.

Remember: the first session is Friday at 1:30 in the East Common Room.

Barbara Browne, new Editor of The Varsity, is seen above handing the books to Jack Gray, retiring editor, so that he can resume work to patch up his intellectual integrity. Jack is handing the keys of office to Barb. Jack Gray recently tendered his resignation as editor to the Students' Administrative Council because he was conditioned in some of his subjects last year.

New Varsity Editor Is Barbara Browne

The new editor-in-chief of The Varsity is Barbara Browne, III UC, following the resignation of Jack Gray. Gray's resignation was accepted at the first meeting of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) two weeks ago, because he was an occasional student. Miss Browne was appointed editor at last night's meeting of the SAC.

Previous to her appointment, she was Managing Editor of The Varsity. Her position is now filled by Elinor Strangways, IV UC, the former Makeup Editor.

The appointments were made unanimously after a report of the Publications Committee, which met last Monday. Up till that time, no applications had been made for the editorship of The Varsity, although the position had been advertised for two weeks.

At the Publications Committee Meeting, Miss Browne explained the absence of applications by the fact that no one on The Varsity really wanted the position.

Gray pointed out that the only person who could take on the position was Miss Browne, and that she did not want it.

He nominated Miss Browne to accept the position of editor of The Varsity, if she were willing to do so, and she accepted it.

The Council accepted Gray's resignation on the principle that he was no longer an undergraduate, and that he could no longer therefore take part in an extra-curricular activity. Gray failed to remove conditions on two supplemental examinations last summer. "We don't let football players play if they haven't made their years", was the analogy given.

This leaves The Varsity with a female Editor, Managing Editor, and Feature Editor, in the top five positions, not including the vacant Makeup editorship. Cracked SAC President Syd Wax, "The Varsity is turning into a matriarchy."

Teachers Needed Israelite Declares

By B. H. CHETKOW

"Dr. Cherrick, how do you think Israel will solve her seemingly unlessening economic difficulties?" I asked innocently.

"Young man," the world director of the Hebrew University's Department of Organization and Information grinningly retorted, "the Talmud says that since Biblical times prophecy has been reserved for children and fools. I have outgrown the first condition, and I have no intention of qualifying for the second."

The renowned Jewish orator, brought to Toronto by the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University, was nevertheless a considerable source of information. He pointed out Israel's crying need, due to her unprecedented immigration, for teachers of all kinds. He also quoted statistics to show that in the recent national elections 80 percent of the population showed pro-Western orientation.

In reply to the pointed question "Do you think Israel sincerely wants a peace with the neighboring Arab states?" Dr. Cherrick replied "emphatically yes." He explained that Israel still possessed as much undeveloped land as it had developed, and that political peace would promote much needed Middle Eastern trade. "Incidentally," he added, "Arabs in Israel are full citizens, vote in elections, and have representatives in the Parliament."

Dr. Cherrick hoped that the discussions of the Palestine Conciliation Committee, now meeting in Paris, would be successful.

When asked specifically about the Hebrew University, Dr. Cherrick was frank. Yearly fees are approximately $150; but living conditions are difficult and require about $100 per month. That Israelis were unable to use their Mount Scopus campus facilities (the only — and therefore strategic — road lies in irreconcilable Arab hands) makes improvised conditions in the city of Jerusalem very difficult indeed.

The Department of English has expanded enormously in the last two years. Even though five new instructors were hired, English lectures were always overcrowded.

"But remember," Dr. Cherrick smiled significantly, "if you want to study in Israel, you had better learn the nation's language. Without a knowledge of Hebrew you will have all kinds of difficulties."

MASTHEAD MEETING

The regular meeting of the masthead will be held in the editorial offices at 5:00 p.m. today. All editors should make a special effort to attend this meeting.

U.K. Election History Club Panel Topic

"The Tories have to be careful not to take the dentures out of people's mouths," said Professor F. Underhill at the first meeting of the U of T Modern History Club, last night. Professor Underhill was chairing a panel discussion at the Women's Union, on the subject of the United Kinedom today and the prospects of both major parties in the general election next week.

Professor B. Wilkinson, the first speaker, said that he was not going to prophesy the results of the election but just attempt to give his impressions of the England he saw last summer. Liberty, equality and fraternity, he said, were the three headings under which he would like to examine socialism in Britain.

Under the heading of equality, Professor Wilkinson said that in some cases people were making more money than they could spend because of rationing.

Mr. G. Bennett said that he had found that morale had lifted to a considerable extent in Britain. The festival had much to do with it, he stated, but chiefly the grumbling of the English people was something peculiar to the English way of life. Mr. Bennett said the chief worry of the Labour government was the disunity of the trade unions. "Perhaps," said Mr. Bennett, "it would be well if the Tories did win and then the unions would know who the enemy was."

The third speaker, Mr. E. G. Turner, is a newcomer to the History department from Scotland. He said that he had the advantage of examining the British picture from a different perspective north of the border. However, Mr. Turner stated that the present foreign situation will, he feels, settle the election issue.

More Successful Using Ultrasonics To Treat Cancer

The many applications of ultrasonics were discussed by Dr. D. G. Ivey at the first meeting of the year of the Mathematics and Physics Society. He cited the collapse of the walls of Jericho when the trumpets of the Israelites sounded as the first use of the energy in a sound wave. They can be used in place of X-rays in locating flaws in manufactured products and in treating deep-seated cancers, where they actually focus better and do less damage to the surrounding material.

Poli Sci Politician

Mr. E. B. Jolliffe, Provincial leader of the CCF, is seen here with John Fairley, IV Vic, at the opening meeting of the Political Science Club. Mr. Jolliffe spoke on Democracy in Crisis. A graduate of Victoria College and a Rhodes Scholar, Mr. Jolliffe has been Opposition Leader in the Ontario Legislature since 1942. He is a noted authority on Labor Law. Mr. Jolliffe last night noted that the greatest political interest is shown in countries where political freedom is curtailed. Stealing the Stone of Scone appears to be the pinnacle of political fervor reached in a democracy.

C.U.P. Says...

(Reprinted from The Manitoban)

Two well-known campus personalities received a surprise Tuesday afternoon. Co-chairmen of Freshman week Pat Reid and Izzy Asper visited the civic auditorium to check last minute details for the Royal Rendezvous.

While there, they decided to see the stagehands regarding lighting.

Being informed that they could find the stagehand backstage, they went in search of him. Upon arriving backstage they encountered a shabbily dressed, elderly man whom they "naturally assumed to be the stagehand."

Accosting this janitor-like fellow they said "We'd like to have you look after lighting for the Friday dance." The surprised man blurted out "But I . . ."

"Oh yes, we know you've been told about it " the eager chairmen interrupted, "but we thought we'd just remind you." The F-week coordinators continued exuberantly, telling of their plans over the insistent protestations of the "stage hand."

Finally, when they had stopped for breath, the confused man said in a predominantly French accent:

"I'm sorry, you must have the wrong person. I won't be here Friday night. You see, my name is Charles Boyer and we leave tonight after the show!"

Jolliffe Deplores Apathy Wants More Democracy

Class Yawns At Vic Prof For Practice

Yesterday everyone in a class at Vic yawned, and the lecturer was pleased. Professor G. A. McMullen started the first of a series of lectures on public speaking and debating procedure by asking the class for relaxed, spontaneous yawns while they leaned back in their seats and stretched.

Next Prof. McMullen had the class practise laughing and asked for a recital of "Hail, hail the gang's all here." The class also heard about the bloomin' blasted sparrow and but, bit, bake, boop, bat.

The Victoria College Debating Parliament has asked Prof McMullen to conduct a series of lectures on Wednesdays at 4:00 p.m. The lectures will include public speaking and voice exercises, some of which have already been quoted. He also intends to spend some time on semantics — and vocabularies.

Prof. McMullen told the class yesterday that a student has many vocabularies. He has a different vocabulary for Church, sports and the class room. Prof. McMullen warned about using technical or long words where a simple word would do.

However the highlight of the lecture for most of the students was the discovery of the way the tongue touches the teeth when one says "k-k-k-katy beautiful Katy." The class also let the empty spaces in their noses ("not the head") reverberate as they hummed mmm and said on a misty moisty morning, or ah-moon of my delight.

Any student wishing to recite Shakespeare — "dead, dead, dead for a ducat, dead" or let their "feet grip the floor and feel the resonance", should go to Room 18 in Vic next week when Prof. McMullen will clench his teeth and snarl at the class in the interest of better debates.

Public apathy and indifference are replacing the barbaric methods and extreme views natural to political parties in the past, Mr. E. B. Jolliffe, Provincial leader of the CCF, told the opening meeting of the Political Science Club last night in St. Hilda's. This public apathy arising from an unfounded sense of security constitutes the main danger to democracy, he said.

Democracy will only function perfectly when more people give more thought and more service to politics, Mr. Jolliffe stated.

A fundamental weakness in the operation of democracy is that a vast majority of citizens are undemocratically minded and that our economic system is "undemocratic, with the power concentrated in irresponsible groups.

The alternative forms of government, totalitarionism and autocracy, are corrupt, wasteful, stupid and even less efficient than democracy, Mr. Jolliffe said.

Democracy demands more from its beneficiaries than most Canadians are willing to give: witness the pitifully small vote polled in Canadian elections, and the great difficulty of political parties to secure candidates.

The electorate may be considered as a jury, Mr. Jolliffe explained, and a jury is expected to pay attention to the evidence presented. An informed, sceptical public is necessary. If we expect to enjoy the benefits of democracy we must be prepared to think, and think intelligently.

Fewer than 1 percent of the Canadian electorate pay party dues. The political organization so important in modern government cannot function when adequate financing is lacking. If funds do not come from the people they will be accepted from industrial concerns. Such funds are usually donated with strings attached. The popular opinion that the party should "just have" the money currently held is symbolic of the mass ignorance of the facts of politics so prevalent.

A member of the executive estimated the attendance to be about 80.

Another Corpse!

"Riders to the Sea," a one-act Irish tragedy, is scheduled as evening entertainment at Hart House Theatre this Saturday, October 20. In the scene above, taken from the play, we see two co-eds in a state of wonder. The actors are Charlotte Holmes (l), as the daughter; Maureen Irvine, as the mother, and on the floor as the dead son, Jack Robson.

Mahogany Around The Bath

For their autumn presentation this year, the University Alumnae Dramatic Club have chosen DEAR OCTOPUS, a pre-war British drawing-room comedy by Dodie Smith. The play uses the device of a golden wedding celebration in order to examine the structure of the family in much the same manner as that used in last season's I KNOW MY LOVE. But while S. N. Behrman was able to capitalize on the ability of the aunts to appear at every stage of life, Miss Smith presents us with a large family group with members of every age. The outlook and memories of these people provide the author's picture of life — from the bright green of the teens to the horrible brown of the forties in a graceful acceptance of old age. And pervading the whole play is the family — an adaptable framework which bends but never breaks.

This family finds its cohesive force in the personality of its matriarch, superbly played by Christina Templeton, who brings a rich natural charm and the confidence of long experience to her role. The warmth of her portrayal is perhaps emphasized by the subdued, yet tender, playing of W. H. Brodie as her husband.

In the leading male role, Arthur House displays a degree of awkwardness at times. However his toast to the family marks the high-point of the play, which seems rather marred by the anticlimax of the proposal which follows. Edith Orde Tuff is charming as his fiancee.

Much of the evening's entertainment springs from capable, experienced performances by Ruth Johnson, Eleanor Beecroft, Frances Halpenny and Douglas Ney who appear in well-written stereotyped roles. Less successful are Elizabeth Gray and Charles Winter who seem stilted as a mother and her son. Marion Jones shows considerable ability as the woman with a past, but her lines never allow her to reach her full stature as an actress.

While William Needles' direction has failed to alleviate the artificiality of the rapid entrances and exits, he has drawn some excellent performances from a large cast, with unusual success in the case of the children. Judy Morris and Michele Landsberg give creditable performances as tiresome little girls while Bill Davis maintains an extremely natural air.

While a beautiful dining-room table and several other pieces accurately suggest tradition, it is only in the nursery set that the group has authentically caught the flavor of a house with "mahogany around the bath and pictures of the holy land".

DEAR OCTOPUS contains no evident plot, but rather a contrived series of conversations. The dialogue, while it provides a few strong laughs, moves with a placid, almost stodgy, dignity. Indeed the revival of such a shallow work is disappointing in the group who last year dared to tackle Shaw's meaty KING CHARLES.

Malcolm MacKinnon.

'Property Is Condemned' Is First Of One-Acters

This Saturday, October 20, when some of the more frivolous amongst us are cavorting in Kingston, some of the actors in our midst will be venturing their all in front of the lights in Hart House Theatre for the first time this year. The occasion is the first of five nights of one-act plays to be presented during the year under the sponsorship of the UTDC (University of Toronto Drama Committee). On November 13 and 14 there will be a group of five or six plays, and there will be two more bills of one-acters on the 7th and 8th of January.

These one-act plays provide a real opportunity for the students who are interested. They are the only completely student productions on the campus; they allow more people to take part in them than does a longer play, and, since there are not as many lines to learn, not as many rehearsals to attend and, judging by past bills of one-act plays, the standard is not set as high as it might be, they do not put such a heavy burden on the student.

Of special note is the fact that these plays are picked and directed by students; for it will be accepted no doubt that youth is usually far more daring and venturesome than crabbed age. In the past this boldness has contributed often to inadequate productions, but at the same time these inadequate shows have usually been the most interesting and the most fun for actors and audience.

Last year people had a chance to see their first Christopher Fry play—THOR WITH ANGELS, on a bill with Shaw's impossible DON JUAN IN HELL. Some people may remember two years ago when Jean Paul Sartre's NO EXIT was banned from Hart House Theatre and the Women's Union.

For this Saturday's bill of plays THIS PROPERTY IS CONDEMNED looks the most interesting. It is an early piece by the author of A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE and THE GLASS MENAGERIE — Tennessee Williams — and is the offering of the Vic Dramatic Society. Also listed are J. M. Singe's old reliable RIDERS TO THE SEA done by the UC Players Guild and COME TRUE by Mazo de la Roche, presented by the Trinity Drama Club.

The UTDC which sponsors these plays is a co-ordinating group made up of members of the various college drama clubs, and it is, I believe, the only organization of its kind on the campus. Through pooling the resources and several talents of the clubs, the UTDC gives students a chance to act on Hart House stage, and they provide a good evening's entertainment for the theatre-goers. On top of that they have formed a liaison between Hart House Theatre and the drama clubs to their mutual advantage. (Mr. Gill, the director, can reach the talent in the clubs and the UTDC have utilized Mr. Gill's wide knowledge of the theatre.)

What is perhaps not as well known about these nights of one-act plays is the private adjudication arranged by the UTDC following the performances. An authority on the theatre is asked to criticize the acting and directing in the plays as freely as he wishes and give advice to the performers. In the past, with such people as Lister Sinclair and Herbert Whittaker criticizing, these sessions have been the most enjoyable part of the evening. On Saturday John Drainie, radio-actor and Chairman of the new Jupiter Theatre, will act as adjudicator. It is our hope to slip a Varsity critic into this closed session and bring out an inside report. The only worry is that Varsity drama critics, being something of a breed apart from common men, will likely stand out even in a crowd of actors and actresses.

MARGO MACKINNON

Male Spectators Squirm

A justifiably enthusiastic audience heard Margo MacKinnon, soprano, (accompanied at the piano by John Coveart) give the first recital in the Hart House Wednesday afternoon series yesterday. For Miss MacKinnon's voice is spectacular — powerful, rich, and of a peculiarly dark quality for a soprano.

Miss MacKinnon is a sophisticated singer, and sophistication was certainly what was required for her Bizet group, for instance. Carmen may have been a completely uninhibited child of nature, but Bizet's music depicts her as a showy stage-gipsy. Miss MacKinnon's singing of two arias from "Carmen" was wild and very unreserved, but in an evidently stagy manner, entirely appropriate to the music. The all-male audience squirmed visibly.

Sophistication, on the other hand, is definitely what is least desirable in folk songs. Her group of French and Scottish folk songs was unfortunately sung in a manner more appropriate to the operatic stage than to the countryside where they originated. The two Hebridean songs of mourning, for instance, are not dramatic things—more especially not with the wonderfully appropriate Kennedy - Frazer accompaniments. This group turned out to be ten minutes of magnificent vocal display of rather cheap emotion, without any of the characteristic freshness of songs of the people.

Also included on the program were two arias by Bach. It is perhaps an unfortunate convention that places this trying sort of music at the beginning of a recital. At any rate, Miss MacKinnon's voice had neither the volume nor the beauty of tone it attained later in the recital, and in "My heart rejoiceth" from the Magnificat, she entirely missed the lofty exaltation of the piece.

The recital concluded by two songs by Gershwin — "Summer Time," and "Love Walked In," which formed a splendid conclusion to the recital. Miss MacKinnon's experience as a night-club singer stood her in good stead, and she can sing this sort of thing with greater ease and much less self-conscious embarrassment than many another singer.

Miss MacKinnon is a wonderful entertainer and we may hope for many more appearances by her on the campus.

UC Wins Interfac Track Meet Again; SPS Takes Junior

UC won the Rowell Trophy as Interfaculty track champions for the third year in a row yesterday, placing four firsts, five seconds, five thirds, and two fourths, for a total of 45½ points. However, SPS took the Junior title from the arts college by placing a first and a fourth in the 880, which was held over from the Junior Meet last week till yesterday because of the bleachers on the track. SPS scored a two-point margin over UC to win 41-39, and tied for second with Victoria at 28 points in the Senior meet.

The individual star was Bob Bazos, by a country mile. Bazos was a halfback with the Blues last year till forced out of body contact sport with a displaced vertebra. Big (6'4", 195 pounds) Bob got firsts in the discus, 120-yard high hurdles, and 220-yard low hurdles, seconds in the javelin and the shot putt, and a tie for third with Endel Tulving in the high jump to score a total of 22½ points. Runner up was Ron Carr, with 13 points for winning the high jump and broad jump, and scoring second in the pole vault.

Another double winner was Eric Kofmel, who took the 220 and 440, but the top honours for courageous performance go to Herb Tilson, who came second in the mile, and won the 3-mile only about half an hour afterward in good time, 16:03.2, and by a comfortable margin. Both are tough races, and the meet, which was packed into about two hours, made running two races of any length a gruelling performance indeed.

All the times and distances look as though they should be good enough to win in the intercollegiate meet next week, except possibly for the sprints, the jumps, and the shot putt.

The distance events were very encouraging, Wortman's mile in 4:36 and Tilson's three mile in 16:03 not being very far off the intercollegiate records. Bazos' marks in the hurdles, 16.4 and 28.1, and his discus throw of 131'6½" (another near-record) are sure point-getters (and he can do better).

Vrzesnevski, Bazos, and Henderson were all close in the javelin, and judging by past competition, all of them could win the intercollegiate. Henderson, who was third, won the event in last year's Intercollegiate meet. Ron Carr, who won the high jump and broad jump, has done better than he did yesterday, as has Bob Westlake, who won the shot putt. Both are good bets for wins next week on past performances. Rawlinson's pole vault of 9'1" is a creditable performance too.

Skule Downs Doctors 8-0 Varga Standout For Meds

Coach Dave Munro said two weeks ago that he had no great hopes for his S.P.S. fo ball squad this season but you couldn't have proved it by the game they turned in the back campus yesterday as they whitewashed Meds 8-0. The team was alert and wo ing hard against a Med team that showed a few flashes of brilliance through ove ineptitude.

The game started off on a spectacular note that was never regained. Skule took Meds kick-off and had a touchdown in six plays. From his own 25 Bea Lewis got a a long forward to Beatty deep in Meds territory. Two running plays and two plunges it up and Carr went through centre handilyfor the TD. Prendergast converted.

For the rest of the quarter, play settled into the pattern that was pretty well maintained. The Skule line went through to squelch most of the Meds plays before they started and threw up an effective defence for their own plays.

Starting the second half, Kerr kicked off to Meds. Varga went for nothing the Capiland for two and they kicked. Lewis got a first down on two plays and then booted behind the Meds line to Wilks who was rouged for a single point. Meds took the ball in their 25 but lost it on another fumble. Carr took a pitchout and dragged his way for twenty yards and paving the way for Lewis to kick his second rouge of the quarter. Meds were held to no gain on thein 25 and S.P.S. took over again at the end of the third quarter.

Prendergast kicked to the Meds five. Between some Meds plays and two holding penalties Skule was pushed back almost to centre. Then Prendergast set out on one of the prettiest runs of the game, sidestepping and hurdling almost pay dirt. Nothing decisive occu from then on with the play back and forth and never out Meds territory. In the final mo Skule were threatening again Lewis ran back a kick ten yards penetrated deep in enemy gro on an end sweep and hand-off time ran out.

To sum up; Meds showed a l of practice and cohesion. Their tacks just weren't coming off their line was little help, being of big holes. The engineers quite strong down the line. and Lewis ran for consistent g Prendergast, down from the Blues, shone for Skule. He reeled some big gains and lifted some kicks. It was anything but a th man show too. If there was leadlight for Meds at all, it was kicking and running of Va There was the usual quota of f bles and weird plays. Skule fered in the penalty departm mostly on infractions like ho and offsides that are easily av able.

The Ladies' Intercollegiate Tennis Championships will be played on Friday and Saturday mornings at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club on Rowanwood Ave., not at St. Hilda's as was previously announced. The following will defend Toronto's claim to the title: Joan Mulveney, II UC; Betty Thompson, IV UC; Ann Thomson, II UC; and Daphne Cross, IV Trinity. Matches start at 9:30 both mornings, and spectators are very welcome. Bring your Varsity spirit to the club either or both mornings, and cheer the girls to victory.

Pitching Sportshoes

One soccer game was played yesterday at noon. Jr. SPS and St. Mike's B 1-1. The first half was scoreless. In the second Barwick counted for Skule and Brennan for St. Mike's.

At noon Trinity B took the first game from SPS V 15-10 but the Skulemen came back to win the last two 15-3 and 15-9.

In lacrosse St. Mike's B were hard-pressed to get a 3-2 win over Vic II. For St. Mike's, Heffer scored twice and Harrington had one. Halbert got both goals for Vic.

Baseball

In the first two of the women's baseball games scheduled yesterday, POT was defeated 5-2 by the Victoria College squad. Meds took over the game by default when the PHE III squad failed to appear for the game.

Ken Wagner Out Fired By Obeck

Coach Vic Obeck of the McGill Redmen announced yesterday that Ken Wagner, hard-driving halfback with the Redmen for the past two seasons, has been dropped from the McGill team for breaking training rules.

Wagner did not make the trip to Kingston with the team last Saturday because, as the McGill mentor put it, he was not "digging in at practices". Obeck stated that "it is not the first time a player has been fired for smoking, and there is absolutely no chance of his being reinstated."

Commenting on the firing of Wagner, one U. of T. official stated that there is a no-smoking rule at Varsity as well, but to date there has been no trouble enforcing it. "Unconditional dismissal seems rather harsh," he stated, and added that there must have been other circumstances which would motivate a coach to fire a top player of Wagner's calibre.

Wagner was one of the chief factors in McGill's victory over the Blues in Toronto last fall and has been a top track and football for the Redmen for several seasc 6'2" and 200 pounds, Wagner start out in the fullback spot at McG and then was switched to left h when Doy Deshields was held e ible for Intercollegiate football.

A SPORTS PROFILE

Steve Oneschuk

By IRWIN GUTTMAN

"That boy is just great offensively and defensively".

The comment was from a proud Varsity coach in answer to a query from Hec Creighton, of peferee fame, about "this boy Oneschuck". And Bob Masterson's quick reply just re-echoed the current sentiments of University of Toronto football fans with regard to "Ones Steve" Oneschuk.

Stephen Oneschuk, to give his correct name, comes to Toronto from that colorful sports-minded town of St. Catharines, Ontario. His elementary education was received at the Prince of Wales and Victoria public schools. Steve then attended the St. Catharines Collegiate Institute, where for four years he took their technology course, but then switched over and obtained his Senior Matriculation in two years.

Steve played a little football in public school and in his first year at High School played in the school's Intramural league. But it was not until second year that he played in an organized league, gaining a berth on the School's junior team. Steve started out as an end in football, mostly because he wanted to follow in the footsteps of an older brother, who was also an end on the team when he attended St. Catharines Collegiate.

But Coach Jim McNulty decided to try Oneschuk out at fullback, thus being able to utilize his speed and throwing ability to best advantage. Steve clicked and has played out of the fullback spot since then. The converted fullback did a lot of kicking and passing that year for McNulty's team.

STEVE ONESCHUK

Jim McNulty has had a pronounced influence on the young life of Fullback Steve. Besides being his football coach, Jim became a fast friend of Steve's, and in fact, it was he who persuaded Oneschuk to switch from his Tech. course and matriculate, so that he could go to University. As Jim is a U. of T. graduate and a friend of Bob Masterson's, it was natural that the college Steve picked out was in Toronto.

As to that inevitable question, what was your greatest thrill in football, we'll let Steve tell it: "It was in a crucial game against the Niagara Falls Football team, and St. Catherines beat them 13-1, and I scored twelve of those points, by going over for two touchdowns and converting both of them, I got the first one by an end run of twenty-five yards, but the second one was the one that I will never forget. In high school we played from a double wing formation, and the ball came on a direct snap to me for a plunge, and 65 yards later I was over for a touchdown."

That was Steve's first big football thrill, but "it's kind of just continued from there", he says modestly. But Steve's record cannot be hidden. For although he failed to mention it, Steve was a standout in the 1950 Red Feather Tournament, leading his team to the Championship of this tournament. Nor will Varsity football fans forget his stellar offensive and defensive play in the first two Intercollegiate games of this season, which saw him score two touchdowns, boot a single, and play spectacularly on defense, especially so on pass defence. Not bad for a player just fresh out of High School ranks.

After Varsity, Oneschuk hopes to become a high school coach and Physical Education Instructor preferably back home in St. Kitts. Steve is also interested in lacrosse and basketball.

As to the teams he has met up with so far, Steve rated McGill the toughest, but with Western you have "to duck more elbows — it's a wonder more fellows didn't get injured the way they played."

But no matter what way opposing lines play, it will take quite a bit of doing to stop Varsity's favorite, fleet "Ones Steve" Oneschuk.

Soccer Team Down Aggies By 5-1 Count

The Soccer Blues keep in th winning streak yesterday noon on the front campus w they handed out a 5-1 defeat to Ontario Agricultural College ior Team.

The opening portion of the ga was a dull affair. Gradually pace quickened, and though it er reached bright soccer, it far from being a completely game.

Late in the first half, Bob tonio placed a shot which had Aggies keeper beaten. seemed to be what the Blues waiting for and from here on completely dominated the every player making valuable tributions.

The farmers however, threw a couple of thorns. Louisy McWatt, who made a valu combination, soon were serio attacking the Blues' defe Louisy after some fine tack and beautiful dribbling ma shot on goal, which ricoch from the cross-bar and back play. The ball remained in Blues' defence zone, and Phil Singer made the equalis

It was from here that the took over. On a strong right- shot, Manuel Atucha added contribution and the best mom of the game followed. The scoring-machine had been and goals followed on a pro tion-line basis. Tom Broadh made sure of a penalty kick the Blues were away 3-1.

The forward line was "clicki Newt Reid and Bobby Ross added to the tally sheet and Blues had done it again—5-1.

Int. Soccerites Upset Guelph 3-1 Bowler Scores 2

The Baby Soccer Blues followed the lead of their big brothers yesterday afternoon and downed the Intermediate Aggie team by a score of 3-1.

Each team scored a single counter in the first half, Al Bowler stretching the twine for the Blues and Steve Done counting for the visitors. O.A.C. pressed hard in the second half, but lacked finish in the forward line, and Varsity took the lead midway through the half on a goal by Harold Ashbourne.

The Blues missed several chances to score when they had the ball right in front of the Aggie net, but finally Al Bowler booted home the final Varsity goal on a lovely pass from Russell.

Dean and Urquhart were the best that the Aggies had to offer.

...Since lichens are closely related to both algae and fungi it is, there... difficult to classify them as one or the other in the plant kingdom. ...not a simple parasitism of the two classes of plants that causes this ... association, it is, rather, a symbiosis or union of the two species ...rm one. ...Though lichens are a very old part of the vegetable kingdom, yet ...mbiotic plants they necessarily date to a time subsequent to the ... of their component symbionts.

...It is thought that certain algae which had become aerial, and lived ...ry land, united with fungi to form lichens. It is fairly definite that ...fungus has combined with several different algae to form one lichen, ...result being polyphyletic in origin.

...In general, this union gives a plant, the lichen, a much longer life ... either of its components. It persists through greater climatic ...ges, and can exist in a greater numbers of places than either of ...other.

Collect Money Next 3 Days SAC Warning

There are only three more days left this year for students to collect their Book Exchange money, and buy second-hand texts, said S.A.C. official W. Pridham.

Last week $5000 was paid out to students who were lined far out into the driveway of 119 St. George St. and as much as $44 was paid to one student, he said. He added that there was still $4000 to be paid out, and any money which was not picked up this week would be held over until next year, when it could be claimed.

Books which were not sold could be left with the S.A.C. Book Exchange until next year when they would be put on sale again, but for those who did not wish to leave their books in over the year, there would be a special student to help them locate their unsold texts, the S.A.C. official said.

Pridham advised that all second-term books be bought now because the Book Exchange will not re-open until next fall, and there are still some second-term books on sale.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Coming in with a whoop and a holler about how terrific a picture A PLACE IN THE SUN is doesn't show much originality on my part. Critics are almost unanimous in their ecstatic glee about this George Stevens creation. And how right they are.

As you undoubtedly know, A PLACE IN THE SUN (at the Imperial) is a film version of Theodore Dreiser's An American Tragedy. It is the second one in fact, the first one in 1931 made Dreiser so mad because it distorted his story the way he saw it that he wanted to have the film scrapped.

Perhaps Dreier would not have liked this version either, but as a film it is completely satisfying. The usual Hollywood practise when approaching a novel is to retain the title and some of the principal characters and then sew it up in an obvious variation of the American dream and the oft-contrived happy ending. But producer-director George Stevens has dared to be different here.

It would seem that Stevens didn't much care for the reactions of the popcorn eaters and the fan magazine addicts. In presenting his synthesis of the Dreiser story, he has used subtlety, magnificent camera art, and directorial brilliance matching that of Carol Reed in THE FALLEN IDOL.

The story, cut out of the turgid Dreiser prose, has the young ambitious hero (Montgomery Clift in his best role) caught in a net of circumstances and social pressures. He desperately wants to enter the class of the society pages, and yet when he gets his chance, through the love of a beautiful and spoiled socialite (Elizabeth Taylor), he is blocked by his factory girl love. She (Shelley Winters) is pregnant.

Her insistence on their marriage, his growing decision to dispose of her by drowning, her accidental drowning, and the trial for murder are depicted with subtlety and full understanding. The love scene closeup of Miss Taylor and Clift so predominantly featured in the advertising is a wonderful and touching sequence. And the use of the closeups later to explain the young man's thoughts when he is captured by justice is extraordinarily effective.

George Stevens uses simple touches, making them effective and significant. There are many beautiful shots, and yet each one is important to the action, not, as usual, a clip from a travelog.

One of the most frightening scenes is when the young man, overwhelmed by guilt, flees in terror from policemen through a forest. As we see his dim, dark form stumbling and gasping its way through the bushes and branches, we feel a sense of recognition: we taste again those times when we have fled in absolute fear from some nameless terror.

It is the breathtakingly beautiful Elizabeth Taylor's performance that puts the final seal of genius on director Stevens' work. It has been the custom after Miss Taylor has grown up beautiful to content the camera with lovely but empty lingering on her face. But here Miss Taylor acts her part perfectly, and she seems a real person for a change. In her final scene in the death cell, Miss Taylor would touch even the deepest cynic.

In all fairness, it should be reported that some clunk and his babe directly in front of us, weren't particularly interested in A PLACE IN THE SUN. Both of these cretins kept on going out for a smoke or something else. Perhaps a Jungle Jim opus or the latest episode in the history of the Bowery Boys would have satisfied them.

But it must be said that with A PLACE IN THE SUN, and with A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE and others coming up, we critics won't be able to sneer at Hollywood as easily as we used to.

Swan Song

The Varsity rarely has an opportunity to talk about itself. As we change editors it seems appropriate to outline a few of the principles that guide this paper.

There was a suggestion in discussions which led up to the appointment of the new editor that The Varsity, by and large, was an expendable element on the campus. Such a view of course, sends any good staffer into a froth. Even the hint of such a view causes his ulcer to do a triple flip.

Those who are responsible for the conduct of extra-curricular affairs, existing in the somewhat dreamy never-never land of student politics, might well ponder the place of a publication such as The Varsity on this campus. It has become a tremendous job in the course of the seventy years in which it has published. It keeps as many as 150 student volunteers working about sixteen hours a day. And the top jobs on the paper demand a great deal from anyone who must also try to maintain his intellectual integrity. (Intellectual integrity has been defined as: "The ability to pass examinations in May", by the Students' Administrative Council representative from University College, Charles Hanley.)

Men and women work on this paper for many reasons. Perhaps the most important of these is because they feel that education consists to a large degree in making oneself aware of the ways in which ideas can be presented to the world, particularly under the hectic modern systems we live in. Expression, its technique and practice, looms very large in the mind of anyone who not only wants to think, but wants also to be able to communicate that thinking.

There are undoubtedly those who are of the opinion that work on The Varsity is a sure way to glory and fame, in a limited undergraduate sense. Such may be the case, but the amount of work that it takes, the constant meeting of a deadline that arrives with the regularity of the sun, the inability to put anything off until tomorrow because tomorrow will be too late, this represents a grind and a responsibility that few undergraduates are willing to accept.

One staff member once put it this way: "After you have sweated blood on an organization, devoted every possible minute to it, given up a scholarship, and sacrificed all other interests for it, you don't like to hear that it was done for ambition." That particular staff member had been accused of over-ambition, and he was justifiably upset about the accusation.

Senior jobs on this paper are paid. But it is in no sense a commercial transaction: The pay remains low. And as far as we can see, the majority of those who work on the paper aren't particularly interested in the fame and glory angle. Most of them consider it education, in one sense of the term. It is not the kind of education for which academic standing is given. And it is not easy education.

Miss Barbara Browne, the new editor of The Varsity, and the staff that will work with her, have taken on one of the heaviest of undergraduate responsibilities. Their job is service, their aim as interesting and as valuable a Varsity each morning as can be produced. The job that they have done to date proves that they are well qualified for their task.

One of the warmest memories that any editor of The Varsity, no matter how short his term, takes with him is of the staff that made it possible for him to be editor. Without them he is nothing, and there is no paper. There has been, and will continue to be, under Miss Browne, an excellent Varsity staff.

We wish them a good, controversial year.

OUR READERS WRITE

No Dirty Saints

Editor, The Varsity:

I have been rather interested in the discussions relating to the topic of "proper male dress" in the campus. The whole matter of course reverts back to that little burlesque in the Garden of Eden. Had Adam and Eve not fallen, this discussion need never have arisen; and incidentally many of the people would have lost their purpose in living. However, since all Torontonians are forced to dress themselves in what Jack Wells fondly calls regalia, this naturally becomes a valid problem — what is suitable dress for the campus? Naturally we will assume that all students have met the primary requirements they learned from the Junior Red Cross — cleanliness and neatness — regardless of what they wear.

I don't agree with the statement, that an educated man should have among his criteria that of a standard dress. It may be, and usually is, a result but not a necessary one. G. K. Chesterton says somewhere: "a saint can afford to be dirty but a reducer has to be clean". An educated man usually does not wear a suit coat or tie because he is educated, but for other expendient reasons. One might be a rule regarding dress.

There is a danger though, when outside FORCES attempt to impose a decorum upon others. True it may be for the best — perhaps giving a feeling of solidarity and maturity, but the point should be arrived at unobtrusively or else it should be a departure for humorous incident.

For example, you may find campus martyrs dodging from class to class in raglan jackets, secret societies devoted to preventing the extinction of the cravatless male, undercover police details for the apprehension of students wearing clothes containing more than two colours of the spectrum, calibration studios established to determine the ratio between cuff and knee dimensions of every student's trousers. This last official will have the memory of a James Farley so that he won't by mistake apprehend the odd prof with baggy tweeds who falls unwittingly into the fatal classification.

Campus gallants will have new thrilling anecdotes of their "narrow brushes" with the authorities, instead of their usual beginning — "God! was I drunk last night—"

Then again, a rule may be a real hardship on an honest goodness dilettante who dresses bizarrely for the effect he creates, not for the sake of breaking rules as our gallant does.

Accordingly I would believe that it would do no harm if the university had the effect of modifying the average student's attitude to the accepted mean — which might be so to dress that you do not feel conscious of what particular clothes you are wearing. (Still leaves leeway for genuine geniuses; and please note I do not say — conscious that he is not wearing clothe.) I don't think that any definite rule would be advisable.

Yours truly,
John H. Warkentin

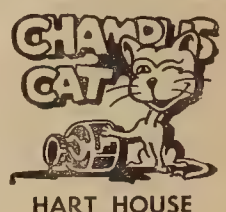
A Trade School?

Editor, The Varsity:

The writer of the editorial "Live Issues" seems to be labouring under the misconception that the recent debate in Hart House dealt with some buried old nineteenth century question on whether or not professional training belonged to our educational system. Had he taken the trouble to acquaint himself with what was said at the debate — had he even read the report on the debate published in this newspaper — he could hardly have written such an editorial as he did.



The recent debate was concerned with such questions as these: is the danger that the presence of professional training in the university will crowd out the liberal arts (thus depriving the members of our society of any opportunity to obtain a sense of values thus preventing them from ever attempting to find the way out of the present mess the world is in) so severe as to necessitate the divorce of university and trade school? or is is so necessary to ensure the professional man some liberal education that we do not dare divorce the two fields of education and must therefore find some other way of meeting the danger that liberal education will disappear under our present system?

I believe that these questions are live issues. I believe that they are problems that we must face. And I believe that therefore the recent debate in Hart House was significant.

Editorial writers in The Varsity can perform a very valuable service in criticizing actions and groups on the campus, and they should make sure that their criticism is warranted. I feel that they have tended to be somewhat irresponsible this year. I am speaking personally, and not in any way on behalf of the Debates Committee—that the criticism of the Hart House Debates Committee was quite unwarranted.

May I suggest that, if The Varsity wishes to retain the confidence and respect of the students of this university, it make sure that its editorials exhibit the intelligence and sense of responsibility that, in the past, it has sought to develop throughout the campus.

HART HOUSE TEMPEST

In the true spirit of journalism I have prepared a series of bulletins to illustrate the popular controversy in Hart House concerning the deportment and dress of its members. In these days of stress, no thinking person, no comprehensive mind, no critical intellect can rest unclouded and unconcerned in the shadow of this dire moral issue. I have delved into both the past and future in the hope that even our women readers may appreciate this vital problem.

Bulletin 1: The Board of Stewards in Hart House requests that students wear a jacket while engaged in the building.

Bulletin 2: Writers protest new ruling in The Varsity and the controversy is on.

Bulletin 3: Whole campus divided into opposing factions, Warden and Varsity editor growl on same page.

Bulletin 4: In order to satisfy the prevailing austerity, Hart House officials allow more women into the House. Female reporters of The Varsity are being admitted and women will be put in charge of the swim periods.

Bulletin 5: Student refused permission to use the Music Room in order to practice on his mouth organ. Student claims unfair discrimination because he was wearing a sweater.

Bulletin 6: An informal Wednesday afternoon recital is announced in Hart House. Lilli St. Cyr, well known strip artist, is to perform. All members are to appear properly dressed and no optical instruments are allowed.

Bulletin 7: Warden patiently explains to students that the wearing of a jacket is compulsory — i.e., that it goes with the meal. Student claims that the jacket comes a la carte like the dessert.

Bulletin 8: Hart House publishes an ad in The Varsity asking for new Hall Porter. The new type are to be heavier and more robust in order to double as bouncers.

Bulletin 9: Students not properly attired will be compelled to choose the expensive meat plate in the Great Hall. This insidious plan will drive them into poverty during the first term, thus ensuring their absence in the second.

Bulletin 10: A group of students threatens to storm Hart House in shirt sleeves if the price of a single banana or half grapefruit is kept at ten cents.

Bulletin 11: Student, when questioned as to why he was sleeping on a couch in the common room, replies that there is not sufficient light to read properly and that the heat and humidity would put anyone to sleep. For naughty words, student is required to wash out his mouth with Tuck Shop coffee.

Bulletin 12: All members of Hart House sporting rolled up trousers will be required to wear socks.

Bulletin 13: Students properly attired will be allowed to stand for the regular time of only twenty minutes in the Great Hall dinner line. Others will be required to stand twice as long.

Bulletin 14: Shoes must be worn in Hart House. Exceptions will be made where religion is offended.

Bulletin 15: Waldo——?, honour students, reports seeing Warden in shirt sleeves in his outer office. Rumors that he has photographs, for proof, are now circulating.

Bulletin 16: Warden retaliates — claims that he was seen while changing from one jacket to another — threatens to sue.

Final Bulletin: Austerity reaches a new height and the final privilege of Toronto students has been denied. In order to uphold the dignity of Hart House members waiting in line will not be allowed to manipulate their yoyos in the Great Hall.

AVR Takes Form Help Still Wanted

After a year's absence, the All-Varsity Revue is returning to the campus. Producer Jim Guthro, I.O.C.E., said yesterday that the AVR has a permanent rehearsal place in one of the rooms at the football stadium, and that the show is being assembled. The theme for the show is being developed into scripts, musical sequences and choral presentations with definite continuity.

Guthro said that scripts have been written by several graduates but that these will not be accepted until undergraduate script writers have submitted their efforts. He felt that the scripts did not have to be in polished form when handed in and that undergrad writers should not feel that there efforts were not of a high enough calibre. Several sequences have been developed but many more are needed. Guthro said that any undergrad starting a script should see him to find out what the theme of the show is before starting to write.

An ad will be placed in The Varsity soon for a student dance director, choral director, stage manager, and an assistant producer-director.

In the past the All Varsity Revue has been the big student show of the year. Usually it consisted of the best routines from the college shows plus new material. This year's production will be a completely new show with original material.

Vic "Girl"

"Dora" McCord, a Victoria College Freshman, had dinner at Wymilwood last night. Dressed for his part in the "Miss Burwash" Contest, part of the Annual Stunt Night of Vic men's residences, McCord kept his sexadentity secret until dinner at the girls' residence was half over.

The girls were reported to have enjoyed the presence of their "guest". Miss Cobourne, Acting Dean of Women invited "Dora" to tea after dinner. It is not known whether or not she enjoyed "her" company.

Pearson New Chancellor As Vic Picks Old Grad

The Hon. Lester B. Pearson, a Vic graduate, has been appointed Chancellor of Victoria University. This was announced yesterday by Dr. A. B. Moore, Vic President, following the meeting of the Vic Board of Regents.

LESTER PEARSON

Pearson, at present in Rome, is Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs, and has been active in the United Nations since its inception six years ago.

A distinguished graduate of Vic and this University, he was awarded the coveted Massey Foundation Fellowship and continued his academic career at St. John's College, Oxford University.

Having received his B.A. and M.A. degrees at Oxford, he returned home in 1923 to become a member of the History Department here. Pearson holds honorary degrees from many universities, including a Doctor of Laws from his alma mater, the University of Toronto.

The latest honor to be bestowed upon him was the Doctorate of Civil Laws, conferred in June 1951 by Oxford University.

Pearson is deep-rooted in the life of Victoria. Besides graduating here, he is also the nephew of a former President, the Rev. Dr. Richard P. Bowles.

He replaces Maj.-Gen. A. C. Spencer, C.B.E., LL.D., of London, Ontario, who, since 1944, has rendered distinguished service as Chancellor and has now completed the term of office to which he was appointed.

May Sell Tickets To JCR

Large signs are posted in the Junior Common Room at University College stating that the Common Room will be closed if its present untidy condition does not improve.

Roger Bull, secretary of the University College Literary and Athletic Society described the deplorable condition of the JCR as "the ne plus in swinish living." Even the engineers would find the place dirty, added the Publicity Director.

Later in the year, if there is improvement, the Lit may hold an elimination contest to see whether the men or women of UC can keep the room most tidy.

Last year women were barred from the JCR for about 10 days and the move was successful in keeping the room clean said Lit Director, Al Strauss. The Lit is considering barring women from the JCR again.

As a last resort the Lit will use the suggestion of a member of the Standing Committee. The plan offers alternatives of either charging .05c or .02c admission for each person, or selling annual membership pins at .50c apiece. The money will be used to pay one or two persons to clean the room regularly.

Although the room is cleaned up at 4 p.m. daily and remains fairly clean until lunch, after lunch the litter of newspapers, sandwich wrappers and cigarette butts and ashes is terrible and Al Strauss fears that the Board of Health will close the JCR because it is putting the City Dump out of business.

"The Toronto Street-cleaning Department has asked us to use the JCR as a proving ground for new men and so far 15 out of 16 have flunked," added Strauss.

Few Support U.C. Elections

The annual Fall elections were held on Thursday, October 18, by the Literary and Athletic Society to determine the 5T5 executive.

Among those elected were President, Marvin Siegel; Literary Director, Thomas Daly; Secretary-Treasurer, Ronald Burrows; and Assistant Secretary - Treasurer, Herbert Noble. Barry Brown was elected Athletic Representative by acclamation.

Lit officials stated that as usual in the Fall elections the voters were few. Approximately 35% of those eligible to vote cast their ballot for Secretary-Treasurer and approximately 50% voted for the first year executive. Figures on the enrollment at UC are not yet complete but the above approximations give a fair idea of the numbers which voted.

The first Hart House production, The Madwoman of Chaillot, by Jean Giradoux, opens on Friday, Oct. 26th. In the picture above, Irma, played by Selina Whyne, is translating the sign language of the Deaf-Mute (Robert Jackson) for the Mad Countess (Ann Murray).

The play, as adapted by Maurice Valency, is a fantastic comedy about a madwoman who confounds the enemies of mankind, the Little People, in the course of an afternoon. In the first act, she discovers that all the Powerful People of the world are planning to make war. In the second act she manages to get all the enemies into her cellar where she disposes of them down a mysterious trap-door.

Director Robert Gill says that actually there are four madwomen, three of whom are from Trinity and one is from Vic. Ann Murray, IV Trinity plays the madwoman of Chaillot, Margot Murray, IV Trinity is the madwoman from Passy, Joan Armstrong, II Trinity, is the woman from Saint Sulpice, and Barbara Walker, II Vic, is the Madwoman from La Concorde. The two leading male actors are George McCowan, III Vic, as the Rag-picker and James Armour, III Trinity, as the President.

Ann Murray was the nurse in last year's Hart House production of Medea and was Miss Isabel in the Trinity production of "The Enchanted". McCowan was also in Medea where he played the part of Jason, and had the leading role of Charleston in the Vic production of "Thunder Rock".

More Music, New Machine In Skule Nite

This year's production of Skule Night will feature more music, according to Mike Harrison, IV Eng., who is directing the show. The engineers are casting for singing choruses as well as actors and singers this year. Anyone in Engineering or Architecture who is interested should either go to Rm. 32 in the Skule Bldg. at 10:30 Saturday morning or contact Harrison at the Engineering Society Stores.

Dave Powrie, IV Arch., will design the sets again this year. Powrie's sets for last year's show were described as being some of the best ever shown in Hart House.

Engineering and Architecture combine in a production of Skule Nite as they have similar interests and architecture was, until three years ago, a part of engineering.

Harrison says that the traditional machine will be an integral part of the show this year and will be operated by the cast. The Varsity could not worm any other clues out of Harrison as to the nature of the machine. His only comment was that the campus can all see it as there will be a general sale of Skule Nite tickets this year for the first time in the post-war period.

Claim Ignorance Caused Errors

"Just ignorance and misunderstanding on the part of the enumerators" is the way Queen's Park officials explain the fact that two members of The Varsity staff have had their names included on the voter's list in the coming provincial election, although they are not yet 21 years old.

"The returning officers have to find between 170 and 250 people to compile the voters' list in each riding," explained Chief Electoral Officer Major Lewis. "In that many people, there are bound to be a few who aren't all you could desire."

One of The Varsity staffers was Mal Crawford, III UC, whose landlady had told enumerators that he was 21. The other was Adele Krehm, II UC. She told the enumerators she was not 21 yet, but they still left her a voting slip.

When Miss Krehm's case was mentioned to Mr. Lewis, he explained that it was probably due to "lack of intelligence" on the part of the enumerators.

Enumerators' names are submitted to the riding returning officer by the various political parties. Enumerators are paid $32 for the first 250 names they collect, and 8 cents a name thereafter.

Deliberate padding of the voters' list is a serious offence. The instructions to enumerators state that "for each wilful omission, neglect to impose any of his duties, or refusal the enumerator shall be guilty of an offence and liable to a penalty of $200, and in addition thereto shall forfeit his right to payment for any services already rendered."

However, Major Lewis said that in his experience no enumerator had ever been prosecuted for putting unauthorized people on the voters' list.

Rhodes Scholarship Standards Are High

Some definite quality of distinction, either in intellect or in character, is the most important requirement for a Rhodes Scholarship, yet a Rhodes Scholar should not be a one-sided man. The requirements are high, and in the absence of a sufficiently qualified candidate the Committee will make no appointment.

Scholarships for 1952 will be allotted as follows: two each to Ontario and Quebec; one to each of the remaining provinces. Each candidate is required to apply to the Secretary of the Selection Committee for the province in which he wishes to compete, not later than September 1st, 1951 in Newfoundland and November 1st, 1951 in the other provinces. Except in unusual circumstances, no candidate will be elected without an interview with the Selection Committee.

The present value of a Rhodes Scholarship is five hundred pounds per year. Scholars are advised to supplement this amount by approximately fifty pounds per year. Travel costs must be borne by the Scholar as well.

A candidate must be a male, unmarried Canadian citizen or a British subject with at least five years' residence, and with the intention of permanent residence, in Canada. An Ontario candidate may apply either for Ontario or for the Province in which he has taken his University course.

A Selection Committee in each Province is responsible for deciding whether candidates comply with foregoing conditions, and for making nominations.

Quebec Pilgrimage

Quebec, P.Q. (CUP) — Four hundred students from Laval University joined in a pilgrimage to the shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre, about 20 miles from Quebec City recently. Ninety of these pilgrims made the journey by night on foot, the rest travelling in train, car or on bicycle.

The pilgrimage was organized by Pax Romana, an international Catholic student organization. It was led by the rector of the university, Mgr. Ferdinand Vandry, who also celebrated the mass.

Celebrities Return For Big Show

Such famous grads as Marg MacKinnon, Al Goodman, Pasternak and Nashman, and the Floor Flushers will return to the campus a week tonight for the stadium show on Home-coming Weekend, according to Ben Wise, producer-director of the Blue and White Society Show. Wise said yesterday that the Blue and White were sure that a famous pair, who have recently thrilled audiences across Canada, will also be on hand. While they are not alumnae, it is felt that the audience will enjoy seeing them on Home-coming Weekend.

The Blue and White band, the cheerleaders, and the rugby team will take part in the show. The B and W are presenting the team and coach Bob Masterson with special gifts, also unidentified.

Any engineers, medsmen, or in shenanigans should go to the others on the campus who delight stadiu mat 4:00 p.m. on Tuesday as produced Wise is looking for gag men. There will be an ad in Monday' Varsity for the singing chorus under the direction of Bruce Snell.

Rochester Glee Club Sings In Hart House

As an added attraction for the Blue and White Night on Saturday, November 10, the Rochester Glee Club will sing in the Great Hall of Hart House. However, the problem of finding the $300 estimated by the Hart House Gleen Club as the cost of expenses for the week-end still remains. The estimated expenses include accommodation, dinner Saturday, breakfast Sunday,, and "miscellaneous" for the 30 members of the club.

Contrary to the report in yesterday's Varsity, the Students' Administrative Council did not approve the expenditure of $250 for the expenses of the Glee Club. This decision was reached by the SAC on consideration of a letter from the Hart House Glee Club asking for the grant, and pointing out that the Glee Club cannot afford more than $50 for hospitality.

Gordon Marshall of the Blue and White Society stated that the Hart House Glee Club had invited the Rochester Club, and found that because the Blue and White had the entire House, there was no place to hold the concert. He explained that the Blue and White therefore offered to set up the Great Hall for a concert during the dance and to give free dance tickets to the club members. Marshall pointed out that because there was no dance over the Western weekend the Blue and White is very low in funds and cannot afford more than the $100 at which they estimate the cost of staging the concert and giving the free tickets.

It was decided to recommend a reply to the Hart House Glee Club pointing out the SAC's commitments to its own Music Committee for the support of the All Varsity Mixed Chorus and Orchestra, and regretting its inability to offer any further financial support than that supplied by the Blue and White. It was suggested that accommodation might be provided for the visiting club by arranging to have members of the host organization offer their homes and residences.

Mealtime Mayhem

Reprinted from Queen's Journal

Kingston—(CUP)—To those unfortunate males who are forced to imbibe of the vile victuals brewed by the twentieth century Borgias—the Kingston landladies — and to those equally unfortunate females who devour their daily thimbleful of gruel and crust of black bread generously served up at Ban Righ I should like to tell you what you're missing.

I should like to tell you that in not eating at the Union you are missing the most delicious food, the most nourishing viands, the most palate pleasing potations ever placed before mortal man. I should like to tell you that—but after one meal you'd know I was lying.

However eating at the Union is an experience. Just as being buried in a lime pit or wrestling with an alligator is an experience. Everybody ought to eat at the Union at least once. You may survive for a second try. Besides when the memory of the event has faded you will still have your ulcer.

Actually meal time at the Union is quite exciting. For sheer savagery the only comparable scene to that in the Union hall at twelve noon is the temple-tossing sequence from "Samson and Delilah". Those courageous rascals who go there daily will probably become human cannonballs or trapeze artists on graduation—they are a reckless breed of men!

In the line-up it never pays to make a choice. If you hesitate for a second, a hot oat-meal breath will blast your ear with the admonition in true Humphrey Bogart style, "Keep moving, Clyde". In your rush to get to the table you will wind up with six dishes of corn starch pudding and no meat and potatoes.

When you finally get sitting down, you will find that you have spilled half your milk and your soup bowl has floated to the south end of the tray. Your problem is solved immediately by anchoring it with a boiled potato. Confidentially, some of those potatoes could anchor the U.S.S. Missouri.

Across the table two Medsmen are discussing their last class—cutting open some unfortunate stomach—gallstones, liver (with onions?), kidneys, etc., etc. As you turn a lovely pea-green, the voice of a Scienceman in violent argument with a fellow Engineer reaches your drooping ears.

Vic Names W. James As Bursar

The appointment of Wilfred C. James, B.A., as Bursar of Victoria University, was announced yesterday by President A. B. Moore.

He succeeds the late Rev. W. J. Little. A graduate of Vic in 1916, James saw service in the Canadian Army in World War I. He studied law at Osgoode Hall and was admitted to the bar in 1921.

In recent years James has been engaged in public relations work in the City of Toronto and brings to his new office a wide knowledge of business and academic matters. Camera Club Holding Meet Next Monday

The Hart House Camera Club will hold its 30th annual meeting on October 22. This meeting is open to all members of Hart House, and anyone interested in photography in any form is invited. A program that should appeal to both rank amateur and advanced enthusiasts has been been planned.

J. J. Lowson, president of the Focal Forum and Vice-Chairman of the Program Committee of the Toronto Camera Club, should have experience and advice of interest to all present.

A film dealing with certain photographic problems will be shown and a tour through the clubrooms will be conducted. Hart House is one of the better equipped clubs in Toronto with enlargers, contact printers, chemical, paper cutters, a fully equipped colour laboratory and a print dryer.

The first of a very distinguished series of Sunday Evening Concerts will be given in Hart House's Great Hall at 9:00 p.m. this coming Sunday, Oct. 21.

The artist is to be Arthur Garami, violinist, with Leo Barkin at the piano. Mr. Garami is a recent arrival from Hungary, where he studied under Geza de Kresz, now also residing in Canada. During the course of his first European tour, he devided not to return to Hungary, and he has since lived in Hamilton.

The programme is to include a sonata by Antonio Vivaldi, and Debussy's only violin sonata, as well as a number of shorter pieces—some of them by modern Hungarian composers.

Tickets may be obtained now at the hall porter's desk in Hart House free of charge. Members may bring ladies as guests on a double ticket.

Sunday evening concerts will be held every second Sunday. The following artists are scheduled to appear this term: Nov. 4—Boris Roubakine (pianist); Nov. 18—Boris Hambourg Trio (chamber trio); Dec. 2—the St. Mary Magdalene Singers under Dr. Healy Willan.

Gael Game Is Attracting Less Men

"The Queen's weekend seems to be the most popular of the away football weekends, as far as the girls are concerned," said Miss Parkes in the Student's Administrative Council office for women in University College basement. She felt that the girls must have more friends at Queen's.

This year, however, the ticket sales are down considerably, according to the ticket office in Hart House. The obvious reason seems to be the downward trend in enrolment at U of T. It does not seem, however, to be the reason, since there is a bigger percentage of women going this year than last year

The executive elected for this year is as follows: President, Roland Cornelius, Trinity; Bill Dawson, IV Trinity; Director of Public Relations, Bud Trivett, II Law; Secretary-Treasurer, Penny Ketchum, II Trinity. Members at large, John Medcof, IV UC, Joan Armstrong, II Trin., Walter Eze, Grad.

The club aims to further "individual orientation to world government", Jack Tinker, I Law, said. The constitution drawn up by a steering committee was ratified after a lengthy discussion.

Monthly meeting with either panel discussion or a speaker, seminar discussion groups and possible organization of a model Security Council was given as the outline of activities for the coming year.

It was moved that plans be made to publicize the forthcoming United Nations Week on the campus. The club hopes to arrange a trip to New York to study the United Nations this November, in conjunction with the IRC.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Coming out of a TALES OF HOFFMAN matinee (at the Towne Cinema), I felt like emitting a belch, right into the yawning maw of the subway excavation. A dignified belch, mind you; after all, consider the prices. But, a belch.

TALES OF HOFFMAN, you see, is like a ten-course banquet with gorgeous trimmings and decor. Except all the courses are rich and heavy, like having a French chocolate sundae followed by cream puffs and then Boston cream pie ad infinitum. That is why, the belch.

The makers of HOFFMAN, Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger, are among the most imaginative of the impressive post-war school of British film-makers. Their work in black-and-white includes 49th PARALLEL and I KNOW WHERE I'M GOING, both above-average movies. But it is their entry into the Technicolor field that has marked their current tastes and interests. STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN was a rich fantasy—a bit too long perhaps but well worthwhile. BLACK NARCISSUS was an off-beat deal in which color combined with vivid Indian scenery to create a mood of uneasy disturbance, bordering on the obscene. Then came the HOFFMAN parent, THE RED SHOES, with Massine and Shearer and an extraordinary ballet.

One memory of THE RED SHOES that remains is the white and red makeup worn by hero Marius Goring, who aspired for ballerina Shearer in vain. And that white-and-red makeup is a clue to what to expect from HOFFMAN.

The new work, accompanied by much critical pros and cons, as well the highest of art house prestige publicity, is a full-dress presentation of the Offenbach opera.

The music is conducted by Beecham which is a point in favor. It is sung by real singers, none who have the exceptional brilliance of say, Italo Tajo in the Italian opera films, and Leonide Massine, and to the art director Hein Heckroth. When dancing is going on to the Offenbach music, then all is well but otherwise, everything becomes Tedium in Baroque.

At their best, the Heckroth sets and the colorful costumes are magnificent and imaginative and always rich. In the Third Tale, the settings seem Daliesque, although sans limply flexible watches and nudes with machinery in bellies. But the Dali parallel is especially valid, because after two-thirds of the film is past, we begin to feel that imagination has conquered taste.

Moira Shearer just dances, and in the Prologue Dragonfly dance, and in the First Tale about the Dancing Doll and Coppelius, she is excellent. Robert Helpmann hams his way through as the villain of each Tale, and in this fantastic setting his pop-eyeing and grimacing seems completely fitting. But neither her nor Leonide Massine do enough dancing. It is when either of these two men are around that HOFFMAN is fun to watch.

The first two Tales are better, because of the dancing, and because in the Second Tale, Tcherina is seductive as all get out without dancing, and the settings and the pace suggest decadence and immorality in the way the heavy Technicolor methods did in BLACK NARCISSUS.

But the Third Tale about the consumptive singer (Ann Ayars) sags badly. We are given the two principals, Hoffman (Robert Rounseville) and Miss Ayars, singing away for an interminable length of time, with nothing to catch our attention the way the dancing or the scenery did in the first two Tales. We miss Helpmann and Massine who hover only in the background.

Robert Rounseville as Hoffman carries the load of the film, and perhaps that is why we do not have total satisfaction. Rounseville is a good tenor, and on the stage, he should be very adequate. But he lacks a screen personality which must register in the closeups that film emphasizes.

There are other carpings. Having the dancing Shearer also singing in soprano (dubbed of course) is very disconcerting. And opera in English almost inevitably results in silliness such as "Here I am, here I am, here I ahhhhhm . . ." way up in the register.

You may develop indigestion when you see TALES OF HOFFMAN. But the film is worth seeing—the good things are very good. The high prices make sense too, they eliminate a lot of people who would find the film impossible.

And there is an intermission during which you can loosen your belt.

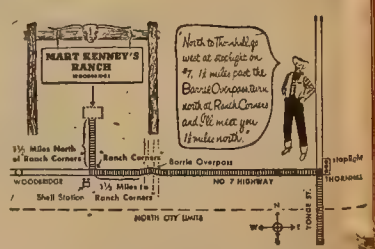
Perhaps it was bad timing to have seen "Coppelia" presented by the Sadlers Wells Theatre Ballet on Monday night. Because Elaine Fifield, the teen-age prima ballerina was so sprightly and so happy to be dancing. Add to this that she was superlative in technique. With the S-W Theatre troupe, there was not the serious heaviness of TALES OF HOFFMAN, or perhaps the sense of dedication that the Fonteyn brand of Sadlers Wells would present.

Fifield was fun as well as excellent, and at times during HOFFMAN, I wisher somebody there would relax and let loose. But no, heavy hand upon heavy hand.

Prof Flays Mystics

"Everywhere today people are moving backward to 14th century ritual and escape into the old absolute," according to Professor Carpenter, speaking in an informal address on the escape into Mysticism at Hillel House on Wednesday night. He said that the death of optimism of the 19th century has caused man to return to the past. Survival does not lie in this, but in the development of the ego.



Prof. Carpenter's contentions brought forth a lively discussion in which General MacArthur was cited as a contemporary example of this form of escapism.

The solution of the problem of escaping into mysticism, was stated by Prof. Carpenter, lies in a trend towards naturalism and rationalism.

FINAL ALL VARSITY AID REPORT

Who . . .

This complicated maze is the laboratory in the Spadina division of the Connaught Medical and Research Laboratories. The penicillin sent to the University of Delhi under the All Varsity Aid plan for help to South-East Asia was made in the equipment pictured above. The Varsity is unable to guarantee that the picture above is printed right side up.)

Year's Campaigning Brings $8,100 Total

The final report on last year's All Varsity Aid Campaign has been released to The Varsity by Syd Wax, IV Meds, chairman of the campaign. The complete details of this report can be found under various headings on this page.

The campaign raised $8100 at this university last year. The purpose of All Varsity Aid was to send practical help to three universities in south-eastern Asia — the University of Delhi, the University of Jamia (near Delhi), and the University of Sindh.

These universities were selected with the assistance of the International Secretary of International Student Service. The arrival of the material sent from this university was supervised by Miss Elizabeth Potham, the Regional Director for ISS of S.E. Asia.

Because ISS would play only a small part in the campaign, there was a suggestion last year that it be carried out independently by the University of Toronto. However, to avoid a break with ISS, this suggestion was not carried out, and it was agreed to give ISS $3000 of the profits for their co-operation.

$3444 was spent on equipment and packaging. The funds on hand, amounting to $600, will go towards the new fund to be created by the charity campaign of this year.

After some discussion, every faculty, college and group in the campus contributed, even if indirectly, to AVA. Various dances and profit-paying events donated certain percentages of their proceeds to AVA. The AVA committee sponsored a program of special events to raise funds, including an All-Varsity Christmas Tree, a Jazz Concert, a Skating Party, and a hockey game between the Blue and White teams of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

The All-Varsity Aid committee was formed of representatives from all the campus groups. Each representative stimulated the fund-raising activities in his own group, as well as helping to organize the particular All-Varsity Aid features of the campaign.

However, the campaign did not proceed without controversy. Week after week, the pages of The Varsity contained letters for and against AVA, and editorials explaining the ideology behind AVA and criticising student cynics and others who felt the campaign to be futile.

But the result of this controversy was to make the whole university conscious of the importance of AVA —conscious to the tune of $8100.

What Went Where

For the $3,444 spent on equipment and shipping of material for All-Varsity Aid, the value obtained amounted to $10,330. The items sent to the universities of Sindh, Jamia, and Delhi are as follows:

The University of Sindh:

—43 microscopes, valued at $4,000, were reconditioned for $722 by Bauch and Lomb Co., who packed the microscopes for overseas shipping and transported them to the ocean port at no extra cost to AVA. The micoscopes will be useful for medical, biological, and zoological service, as well as for teaching purposes.

—instruments, valued at $1,000, were donated by the Engineering Society from their surplus stocks. They consisted chiefly of draughting equipment made up in kits.

—books, valued at $1,500 were donated by professors and students of the university. Of the many hundreds of books received, only technical books of recent vintage and in good condition were sent. They were sorted by a committee appointed by Dean McFarlane of the Faculty of Medicine.

These books were packaged by the T. Eaton Co., who sent a truck and driver to collect them, put the books in special water-tight containers for shipment, shipped the books to Montreal, and arranged the foreign documents, releases, and customs dockets, all without any charge to AVA.

Sindh is primarily an engineering institute, and so these books and equipment will be of real value. The contact for AVA at Sindh was Dr. A. B. A. Haleem, Vice Chancellor of the university.

The University of Jamia:

—a 1951 hand driven model mimeograph machine worth $365 was obtained from Gestetner (Canada) Ltd. for $320. This machine will be shipped from the company's near-eastern stores, and will be installed free of charge, with instructions on operation. Above all, this machine will be used for the university to make its own text books.

—sick room supplies valued at $800 were obtained from the Imperial Optical Co. at a 50% discount. The company also packaged them and hent them to Montreal at no extra cost.

These supplies are to equip a health centre room in the new hostel erected at Jamia, and consist of a table, a chair, a stool, a cot; at mattress, a stretcher, enamel basins, hypo-syringes, adhesive materials, cotton, a portable First Aid Kit, surgical instruments, scissors, forceps, etc.

—a special commercial Refrigerator worth $1,100 was obtained for $804. General Electric supplied the special insides built for the current, etc., of India. The refrigerator was crated for shipment and sent to Montreal free by the E. Milner Co., which built the fridge. The box is enamel finished, with steel construction and fiberglass insulation, and has a cubic capacity of 42 ft.—an ordinary House Model fridge has a capacity of 8 cu. ft. The fridge has a shelf area of 54.7 sq. ft.—about the size of an ordinary wall.

The University of Jamia specially requested this refrigerator, as they could never buy one like it in the east. It will of tremendous value for food preservation and storage, and will service a hostel of from 150 to 200 refugee students.

The AVA contact at Jamia was Professor Salament Ullah, Jamia Millia Islamia, Jamianagar, Delhi.

The University of Delhi:

—a mimeograph machine was obtained for $365 from the Gestetner Co. on the same conditions as that sent to Jamia.

—$1,200 worth of drugs were obtained from the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories of the University of Toronto at a discount of 50%. $800 worth of penicillin in crystalline and percaine form in various doses, and $200 of insulin for diabetic treatment, this last invaluable in the east, were sent.

The Parke-Davis Co. gave $200 of streptomycin for $100. This wonder drug used for T.B., is very helpful in crowded refugee camps.

The Connaught Lab. packaged all the drugs free, and arranged the special permit needed for their shipping.

The difficulties involved in getting refrigerated space on the ship for the insulin, which must be kept cool, were finally solved when the captain of the ship agreed to keep it in his own refrigerator.

The AVA contact for Delhi was Sir Virendia Agarwola, the local ISS secretary.

Those Who Helped

One of the main reasons for the success of the All Varsity Aid Campaign was the excellent co-operation of both university officials and various business firms. This resulted in a saving or donation of $6,886.

Syd Wax, IV Meds, chairman of AVA devoted a full week in June to contacting different firms and arranging discounts. Wax said that the helpfulness of those firms and their willingness to give discounts greatly facilitated the shipment of the materials, and substantially increased the amount of the donation.

President Sidney Smith was a great help in cutting red tape on the campus, Wax said, and the co-operation of Dean Bissell and Dean McFarlane, and of the heads of the various departments of the university concerned was invaluable, as was that of E. A. MacDonald, SAC Secretary, who "knew everyone".

Great credit is due the Canadian National Railways, T. Eaton Co., Bauch and Lomb Co., Gestetner (Canada) Ltd., Parke-Davis Co., Imperial Optical Co., and the Connaught Medical and Research Laboratory, said Wax, not only for their willingness to help, but also for their material assistance.

This sleek machine is the duplicate of those sent to the universities of Jamia and Delhi by All Varsity Aid. It is hoped that the modern mechanics of the mimeographs will be protected from the extremes of the Indian climate by the very chic case shown above. These machines will be used by the universities to make their own text books, as well as the usual pamphlets, notices and exams.

GIANT KILLER?

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

McGill's Intramural track meet was held on Monday, but despite the good weather, there were very few good performances. McGill won the Intercollegiate title last year at the meat which was held on their home grounds. They scored fewer firsts than Varsity, but made up the difference on seconds and thirds. Varsity and McGill have been the only winners of the Intercoll championship since time immemorial.

There were double winners in all track events but, except for the 440, they do not compare with the times in the Varsity Interfaculty meet. Jack King won the 100 in 10.8 and the 220 in 23.9. Varsity times in these Wednesday were 10.3 and 23.6. Dave Winship won the 440 in 53.7 and the 880 in 2:04.3. Kofmel's 440 here Wednesday was only 54.6, but he did 53.6 in a workout yesterday. Murray Gaziuk's time in the half was also better than the McGill man's, 2:03.8.

Farrell Hyde won the mile in 4:57.0 and the 3-mile in 17:20. In these it can only be assumed that there was no one pushing him; Hyde is a better runner than that.

In the hurdles the winning times were 17.5 in the 120 highs and 28.4 in the 220 lows. Bazos' times in these were 16.4 and 28.1 respectively

Things were much better in the field events. Lionel Whitman put the shot 41'9", which Bob Westlake will have to go some to beat. McCulloch's javelin throw was 163'9", which might win in a weak year in this department, but not this year.

Blair's broad jump of 19'11½" was a little better than our boy Ron Carr did Wednesday, as was Blair's high jump of 5'11 5/8". Sliwka's pole vault of 11'6" looks like a sure winner, unless Vic Obeck feels he shouldn't miss football practices. Track meets are even worse than smoking to coaches faced with bad years.

Maybe the Intercollegiate champs are overconfident and are taking things easy. If they are, and don't do much better than they did last week, somebody's going to take their crown away, (not that we didn't know that before). Having the meet on home grounds will give Toronto quite an advantage.

Gee, coach, maybe I shouldn't have written this. Our guys might get overconfident too.

Blue Rugger Squad At McGill Saturday

The University of Toronto Rugger squad travels too Montreal tomorrow to take on the McGill Redmen in the opening game of the home and home Intercollegiate series. The Blues will be out to avenge the defeat suffered at the hands of the McGill crew in last year's play. The Intercoll loop consists of only two teams and the return match of the total points to count series will be played here on Nov. 10.

The Blues are also entered in the City Rugger league and so far this year have played two games. In their first against the Barbarians they lost 9-3 but in the second against the stronger Nomads they fought to a 3-3 draw.

The Varsity will be banking heavily on the running of Dave Harley, the tackling of Henry Hicks and the sure-footed kicking of Bill Conkie.

Soccer Blues Heading East For Weekend

The University of Toronto Soccer squad travels east this week for two games in the Intercollegiate loop. The Blues are entered in both sections of the college league. The Eastern section consists of McGill and Royal Military College, and in the Western section, the Blues meet OAC and UWO. So far this season the Varsity squad has played two games, both victories over OAC.

The Blues will field the same team this afternoon in Kingston as they used against the Aggies Wednesday except that Bob Antoni will be unable to play because of injuries suffered in Wednesday's contest. Antoni's centre forward spot will be filled this weekend by newcomer Jose Atucha.

The Blues are taking along adequate substitutes this year to avoid the unfortunate situation encountered last season in Montreal. After losing three players via the injury route in the RMC game which cut the squad to eleven, four more Blues were knocked out during the McGill game and the Varsity team finished up the game playing seven men against eleven.

The Blues lost the Blackwood trophy to the Redmen last year and are out to bring the silverware back home. The RMC squad shouldn't offer too much trouble, but if Varsity expects to win this year they will have to come out on top in Montreal on Saturday afternoon.

Sportswoman

Cheers from Trinity field could be heard far across Hoskin Avenue yesterday, as St. Mike's beat St. Hilda's I by a 6-5 score in a noon-hour baseball game. The Irish had a 6-0 lead after an inning and a half and held of a determined Trinity rally in the final two frames.

In the south-east corner UC I added another victory as they trounced the PHE I team 10-4. "Mouse" Gray and Deanne Conacher were standouts for the winners while Houson was good in a losing cause.

In their first game of the season played at O.C.E. on Wednesday night, St. Mike's Freshies defeated St. Hilda's first year team 23-17. Georgina Brennan of the winning team was top scorer with five baskets to her credit. The Saints began early and had a slight head at the end of the first quarter, but St. Mike's clamped down and kept ahead from then on.

Expect Tense Struggle As Blues Tackle Gaels At Kingston Tomorrow

The movie hit of two years ago, Alfred Hitchcock's "The Rope", will be re-enacted tomorrow afternoon on the lot of the Richardson Memorial Stadium, beginning at 2:30.

For the Golden Gaels of Queen's University have reached the end of the rope—one more loss means that another season's hopes for the title will vanish into the misty air that seems to hang perennially over the long-suffering Kingston football fans. And Frank Tyndal and company aim to do something about it.

Unhappily, this state of events occurs on the exact date that the league-leading Varsity Blues entrain for Kingston to do battle with the Tricolour, and it will require an all-out effort on the part of the Masterson-coached crew to stop the "back to wall" effort that will be put up by the Tyndal Twelve.

Leading the Tricolour in their last ditch stand against Varsity will be backfielders McKelvey, Bahner, Bell, Mellor and McIlveen; McKelvey and Bahner in particular will be the ones to stop, as the reports from the Kingston camp seem to indicate that these boys are playing great football and are carrying the main load for the Queen's team.

Happily for the Varsity crew most of the Tricolour's line has graduated to the world beyond leaving only Charters, Suksi, Vance and Wadell, but reinforced by the stalwarts of last year's Int'er mediate team, the Queen's l seems to be the bright spot of th '51 edition of the Gaels. This would seem to point to an all-out batt between the two lines, which alway makes for thrilling football con tests.

Starting at quarter for the Blue will be 6'4A" high Alex Lawson who is fresh from calling a near perfect game last Saturday. At left and right halves will be Bill Mac Farlane and Bill Bewley respectively while "Ones Steve" Oneschuk, the Intercollegiate loop's leading scorer, and Varsity fans' favourite, will start at fullback. Al Haig will start at wingback, but will leave the kicking to Oneschuk or John Adams because of his lame foot.

Intermede Blues Take On Aggies

The Intermediate football Blues travel to Guelph for a game against the Aggie squad. The team came out of last week's tussle with Western practically unscathed. The sole casualty was Ted Lansky who injured his ankle, keeping him out of tomorrow's game with O.A.C. However back Bob Kimoff will be back in action after being laid up with a bad knee.

The team has looked very good in practices this week with the line in particular playing well on defense and offense both. Bob Dougan, Jim Murray, Al George, and Bernie Ellis have all shown well, as have ends Don Smith and Bob Milne.

Freshman back Eddie Czisak is expected to turn in a good performance to help fill the shoes of injured Bob Pinkey. Bill Burley and Ron Fleming will share the kicking duties while Doug Geek and Jerry Fitzhenry will split the quarterback chores.

All in all the team's chances of the OAC encounter look very bright. The calibre of the Baby Blues' opponents is not known, but if Kennedy's boys can maintain the brand of play they showed in the Western game, they should chalk up their second straight triumph.

Jack Roberts Out For Season

Jack Roberts will be out of football for the rest of the season. Roberts, originally the Blues' first-string right guard, incurred three minor concussions in the space of less than a month, one in the training camp at Couchiching, one in the McMaster game, and one in the McGill game.

Although medical examinations permanent or which might recur, permanent or which might recur, Dr. Woodhouse, of the University Medical Service, felt that after a series of injuries like these, Jack's head needs a couple of months' rest. He explained that even if he sustained a blow in the near future and suffered no apparent injury, it might affect him later. Boxers who are knocked out are in most places kept out of the ring for a period of several weeks for the same reason. Dr. Woodhouse pointed out that Jack, an outstanding maths and physics student, had a brilliant future ahead of him, and one which would not benefit from any "punchiness" that he might acquire in college football.

That does not mean that Roberts is out for life, but since this is his last year at university, and the football season is over in about a month, he will not likely play any more for Varsity. He will still be able to play pro after he graduates if he intends to.

This news is even more of a blow to Jack than to the team, since it is the first team of championship calbre Toronto has had since he became eligible for the Blues.

Pitching Sportshoes

The big event on yesterday's intramural sports card turned out to be no event at all. Sr. Vic and Sr. SPS had a soccer game scheduled for 4:00 p.m. but the Scarlet and Gold were unable to muster enough players for a team, and, as a result the Engineers won by default.

Four teams saw action on the lacrosse front. Knox College trounced Pharmacy B 7-3 as Bob Graham came through with four counters. The winners' other goals were scored by McPherson, Kent, and Dale Wood, Quinn, and Brooks counted for the defeated druggists.

In the other battle of the gutty stick Meds IV smeared SPS III with Jones' three counters being more than enough. Morse and Ross picked up the remaining goals for the Medsmen. Wieczorek saved Six from a shutout as he netted a singleton.

Volleyball action saw Sr. UC beat Sr. SPS by identical scores of 15-in the day's biggest game. Emmanuel B beat Wycliffe 15-7, 15-Med IV fought back to down UC 11-15, 15-12, 16-14; St. Mike's overcame Vic E IV 9-16, 15-9, 15-

Principal Wallace Of Queen's Retires After Lengthy Service

By RON KEY

This afternoon at Queen's University the career of a truly great and much respected man will end as Principal R. C. Wallace, senior university head in Canada is succeeded by the former Dean of Arts, Dr. W. A. Mackintosh. Prime Minister St. Laurent will be present for the installation ceremony and will deliver a toast to the University.

Twelve honorary degrees will be conferred at the convocation and special addresses will be given by Premier Frost of Ontario, and the Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, chancellor of the University of Toronto.

Wallace's retirement after fifteen years as principal of Queen's ends a long and distinguished educational career. A specialist in geology, he was the first scientist to hold the post of principal. He came to Queen's after eight years as president of the University of Alberta. During his term of office at Alberta, he established amongst other things, the renowned Banff School of Fine Arts, and he continued, through travel, to maintain the Alberta tradition of bringing the university to the people.

Previous to his service at Alberta, Wallace had been a geologist for the Manitoba government and at the University of Manitoba, spending much time in the mining areas of northern Manitoba. His variety of experience gave him both a source of tolerance and insight, and he was an indefatigable worker.

To Queen's, Principal Wallace added Schools of Nursing and of Health and Physical Education, the Department of Industrial Relations and the Institute of Local Government. One of his greatest achievements was the Summer School of Fine Arts, a centre each year for about 600 students interested in art, ballet, drama, puppetry, music, choral singing and other allied subjects.

Personally, a man of simple habits, he made his deepest impression by his kindliness and understanding, his fearlessness and sincerity. Though many of his accomplishments were directed along practical lines, he was a firm believer in the humanities. "The keynote of liberal education," he once said, "is humanism, but the highest utility is the advancement of mankind."

Wallace achieved wide fame. He is nineteen times an honorary doctor, and throughout his career was the object of innumerable eulogies regarding his ability and the quality of his service.

He also received from the students their wholehearted respect. His office door was always open to receive them. They gave him their final farewell recently when they gathered under his windows, led by pipers and cheerleaders, to give him a rousing cheer.

Dr. Wallace will remain in Kingston. He has just been appointed by Premier Frost as consultant on university matters to the provincial government.

Gael Council Raises Fee

Kingston (CUP) — Queen's University authorities have authorized an increase in student council fees of $1.50 per student. Though the authorization came too late to be collected during registration this year, it is hoped to have it collected by Christmas.

Limitations of the budget for student activities last year caused the Alma Mater Society, Queen's student council, to withdraw from the National Federation of Canadian University Students, because it could not pay the twenty cent per capita fee. However, Queen's representative at the NFCUS confrence reported that if the raise was obtained, Queen's would be able to return to a full membership in the organization next year.

Rome Tomorrow

Not all the good ideas, conceived at the University of Toronto, are still-born. Last spring's plans for freshman orientation, however ambitious they may appear in retrospect, are in the process of being partially implemented.

How to orient a freshman has been in the past a problem too vast and perplexing for the university as a whole to deal with. Last fall, a series of lectures were given with the purpose of introducing the university to the freshman. The success of these lectures was limited, as was their attendance. They were good lectures, given by eminent men in the university, but except for the first ones, too few freshmen made use of them.

Last spring, college and faculty representatives met to discuss the possibilities of undertaking a freshmen orientation program on an all-university level. Not just to introduce students in one faculty to those in other faculties, but to bring before them the idea of a university as a community and a centre of culture.

At that time, any such large scale plan seemed entirely unfeasible. Many faculty members felt that an all-university freshman reception program would further complicate the existing plans of the individual colleges. The consensus of opinion seemed to be "a good idea but impossible."

However, the four arts colleges have decided to implement their own "all-university freshman orientation program" in the hope that, through co-operation with the Students' Administrative Council and its Co-ordinating Committee, the program may be extended to include other faculties in the university in future years.

By paring down the previous, rather ambitious, orientation program, the student governments of the arts colleges have succeeded in at least initiating some sort of all-university freshman reception.

It is, however, disappointing to see all plans for group discussion between faculty members and students, general meetings, plays and musicales, introductions to club activities, abandoned in favour of Freshman tea dances at which St. Michael's, Trinity, Victoria and University College will exchange freshmen. All the serious part of the original program seems to have been given up.

Even the fact that there will be "lots of chairs and little dancing" at the tea dances is barely comforting. It seems unfortunate to use a tea dance as a snare to trap unwary freshmen into being serious.

On the other hand, it would be a real feat to turn an "informal tea dance" into an intellectual gathering. University tea dances would be clearly differentiated from high school tea dances in the minds of freshmen. A rather indirect way of indicating the nature of the university!

This whole new approach to freshman orientation is laudable in its intent but severely limited in its scope. The attempt to introduce freshmen from one college to those of another is a very good idea and to be encouraged in every way. However, it is questionable as to how successful the plan will be in introducing freshmen to the more serious aspects of the university and the purpose of a university education.

Possibly we are asking too much. After all, an all-university freshmen orientation program (an awful mouthful of words) has been begun — and Rome wasn't built in a day.

LETTER FROM MCGILL

A Balanced Picture

The Following Letter is Reprinted from the McGill Daily. A Reply to The Varsity's Editorial on Fraternities, we Reprint it Here in Lieu of Comment from our own Campus on the Subject.

Editor, The McGill Daily:

We are writing this letter in answer to the editorial recently printed in The Varsity, student newspaper of the University of Toronto, and reprinted in the Monday issue of The Daily. We do so as it is our conviction that, were a more balanced picture presented, those who are most concerned in considering the pros. and cons. of fraternity life would be able to so not only through prejudice drawn from hearsay, but with the actual facts before them.

The writer insists on claiming that fraternities have no part in the democratic way of life. Is this because he feels that only those things congenial to the overwhelming majority should be tolerated? We beg to differ. It is surely one of the chief assumptions of the principles of freedom, that even those unfortunate enough to be in the minority should be allowed to pursue their activities. As with every other minority organization, fraternities have to combat the disapproval of the majority. The fact that this is so does not mean that they wish to exclude themselves from the activities of that majority, but that only by their very nature, the fact that in so many cases their members have friendships and interests beyond their "tight little groups" is ignored.

We should like to know what objections can be raised by the "mature mind operating in a democratic society" against provision for "social contacts for a group of congenial students in different faculties and years." Since presumably the individuals concerned are possessed of this "mature mind," they will be able to see beyond the tension caused by the inevitable pressure brought to bear upon both members and rushee at this time. Because, despite this tension, much of which can be avoided by a saner approach to the business of rushing, it is a period in which many valuable and interesting contacts can be made and enjoyed, even if a fraternity is not eventually joined.

If one inquired into the rushing principles of any one fraternity, he would find that individualism is stressed rather than discouraged. The writer should not think that an individuality is swamped merely because it has the good fortune to be surrounded by others congenial to itself.

The writer himself is the first to admit that fraternities indulge in the luxury of high ideals, and it is noticeable that he has provided no concrete basis for his statement that these ideals are not carried out. He has contended himself with dismissing them. We only ask those who wish to get a fair picture of fraternity life should investigate the amount of work done by fraternal organizations in the field of social welfare alone. It might also be in order to remind the reader that when campus activities are in need of student assistance, it has been proved in the past that fraternities can be counted on to give their wholehearted support, as a body, not merely as individuals.

We are flattered by the writer's supposition that fraternities constitute a "privileged group". We should not have thought from his article that he considered this to be the case. We should like, however, to stress that our grounds for agreeing with him are far different from those on which he bases his argument. Contrary to the expectations of their detractors, fraternities, on a surprisingly frequent number of occasions, have the good fortune to believe in those ideals which have been set before them. The fact that they might not always live up to these is hardly a just reason for their condemnation. Even the "exclusive" are fallible.

OUR READERS WRITE

Dangerous Marks

Editor, The Varsity:

It is a small point, but I feel that you missed an excellent opportunity when you published Mr. Chetkow's letter under the blatant title, "Dull Book," instead of putting it under your usual "Champus Cat" heading. Surely this graduate student, who describes so pathetically his disillusion in finding a book on Chinese Philosophy free from pencil marks, surely this man has a wonderful sense of humour.

As a staid and sober graduate, Mr. Chetkow must realize (when he is not writing nonsense columns for The Varsity), that a reasonable man would no more deface a book, than give his best friend a black eye. Just as he was probably taught in the nursery that he mustn't scribble on the pages of Winnie the Pooh, especially if it happened to belong to Susie down the street, so he probably has learned that library books are not invitations for the infantile reader to make his mark in the world. His mockery of "immaculately clean" pages of the book on Chinese Philosophy is for these reasons highly amusing.

But, Mr. Editor, since you neglected to publish this letter in its proper column, I feel that a word of warning is necessary for the casual reader who might probably have taken this writer seriously. Obviously only the unintelligent, childish, dull-witted members of the student body underline and write comments in library books. It is a mistake to think that the defaced pages are the worthwhile pages. Mr. Chetkow knows this as well as I do, for he presumably is intelligent if he is a graduate, but if anyone should take him seriously when he urges us to destroy books for the "welfare of the students," he must be reminded that this is the height of hypocrisy. Such methods are used by our so-called friends in Soviet Russia, "Destroy for the welfare of mankind" etc.

Furthermore Mr. Editor, I would end with a final plea that you publish nonsense in its proper place, not as pseudo-serious letters to the editor. Let's not have a revival of the high-school habit of underlining and otherwise defacing our library books. As a member of the library staff (part time) it is one of my tasks to erase the childish—yes dangerous—marks in which Mr. Chetkow delights. It is not much fun, and we are not amused.

H. M. Dixon,
IV St.Hilda's.

Freedom To Soviets

Editor, The Varsity:

Are we finding the truth when NFCUS turns down an invitation for a return visit with the Russian students? The words "the truth shall make free" are written above Victoria's front door.

Wouldn't the majority of students be proud to show our Russian neighbours our democratic form of government here in Canada? If so, why do we refuse to send or accept an invitation? NFCUS' answer is that it would not be a good idea to have Russians over here, influencing Canadian students. Do we fear that our own way of life is not strong enough to stand up against Communism? Or have we forgotten the Christian way of living as brothers? What a revelation it would be for students to go behind the "iron curtain" and find the truth and for us to talk and visit with Russian students here.

Are the students of the University of Toronto blind, deaf and dumb? Either we learn to live in one world or we don's live! Come on NFCUS! Wake up! Promote a feeling of friendship—stand up for what you know is freedom and get to work and extend a warm invitation to students from the Soviet Union.

Sheila Catto,
I Vic.

BLUES ROUT GAELS 26-2

Exchanges, Seminars Planned At McMaster

Plans for the next international student seminar, next year's campaign program, and the possibility of Canadian-European student exchanges were the most important details which came out of the annual ISS conference held last weekend at McMaster University.

The annual conference of the International Student Service of Canada (ISS) is the policy-making body of the national organization. Delegates from the various local committees are sent to it to make decisions on the national and international levels.

Representatives from 14 universities were present. They were from Dalhousie, Laval, Montreal, McGill, Macdonald, Carleton, Queen's, Toronto, McMaster, Assumption, Western, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

The conference lasted from noon Friday until noon Sunday. Much important work was accomplished in a relatively short period of time. Further details of this work can be found in other articles throughout this paper.

Record Of Wins Still Intact Bobby Dale Leads Scoring

By DAVID ROTENBERG

Kingston — The University of Toronto Blues extended their unbeaten streak to seven here Saturday, as they trounced the winless Queen's squad by a 26-2 score. Led by freshman Bobby Dale, who turned in a three touchdown performance, the Toronto team were masters in every department as they ran up their biggest score in two seasons.

The biggest difference between the two teams was on the line, where the Varsity team completely outplayed its opponents. The Blue front wall bowled over the Queensmen on almost every play, making gaping holes for their backfielders and breaking up the majority of the Gaels' plays before they got underway.

The only department in which the home town squad could keep up with the Blues was in the kicking. Johnny Adams did most of the hoofing for Varsity and turned in a good job, although it was not up to the standard of Al Haig who is still bothered by a leg injury. Don Ball started out doing the booting for the Gaels but the majority of it was handled by Chuck Ramsden, who kicked both of the Queen's points. Ramsden's kicks were long but were quite low, so that the Varsity receivers had the ball before the opposing ends could get down the field.

The Queen's attack was hampered by the loss of Captain Harry Lampman early in the game. Lampman broke his hand after making a good catch on one of Wally Mellor's passes, and retired to hospital to have a cast put on. The Gaels were counting on him to do the lion's share of the receiving, and after he left the game their aerial attack fell apart. Mellor, playing his first year with the Gaels, threw quite a few passes but ran into a surprisingly good Varsity pass defence which accounted for three key interceptions. Lampman returned late in the game to try and instill some life into his squad, but with the cast on his left hand was ineffective.

The Blues struck early in the game, and except for about five minutes in the second quarter were far superior to their opponents. The Gaels took the opening kickoff but two plays later Johnny Evans broke through to pick up a loose ball in the Queen's backfield. Bill McFarlane and Steve Oneschuk carried from midfield to the Queen's 17 on three running plays and Bill Bewley took it all the way on two tries. Jimmy Bell converted.

The Gaels were able to do nothing offensively and the Blues were stopped more by their own penalties than by the Queen's defenders. The Varsity squad had the ball three more times early in the first quarter and each time made their yards only to have the plays called back. Two holding penalties and one for clipping prevented the Blues from hitting the score sheet again in the initial stanza.

Late in the second quarter Bewley intercepted a long Queen's pass at midfield. Bobby Dale crashed through centre for twelve yards and a first down. The Gaels veteran centre Jim Charters lost his temper and threw a punch at Dale with all three officials almost on top of him. It cost the Queensmen 15 yards and put the Blues in scoring position. Lawson threw one down the middle to Bell on the Queen's 13, and on the next play Dale eluded two potential tacklers and went over standing up for his first major. Stu Kennedy broke in to block Bell's convert attempt, the first time that Jimmy has missed this year.

The Blues' third TD early in the second half was set almost a duplicate of the previous one. Lawson tossed a long pass, this time to Al Haig, who was brought down on the five, and Dale carried it over from there. Again the Queensmen broke through and blocked the convert attempt.

With the third quarter only half over the Varsity squad struck again and it looked like the game would be turned into a rout. The TD was set up by one of the most spectacular running plays of the season. Bewley crashed over centre for 15 and as he was brought down he lateraled to Oneschuk who had swept around the end. Steve carried for another fifteen yards before the bewildered Queen's defenders caught up with him at their 25. Dale broke loose on the next play and went over standing up for his third major of the afternoon. This time Bill made sure as his convert went high over the crossbar.

The Varsity attack bogged down in the last quarter as the Gaels began showing a little life. The Queensmen finally gave the home town fans something to cheer about as they drove from midfield deep into Varsity territory, but a holding penalty stopped their march and they had to settle for a single.

Varsity took over on their own 25 and in five running plays by Adams, Dale and McFarlane were down to the Queen's 25. But the attack stalled there and Bell kicked a third down field goal, his third in as many games.

It is difficult to pick out any individual stars for the Blues. They all played a good game, and more important they played as a team. Their game Saturday was one of the finest in all round team play that they have turned in in the last couple of season. The linemen were charging throughout, and the ends, led by Brown, did the majority of the work in breaking up the Queen's plays. In the backfield, Dale's three touchdown performance was the highlight, but equally important was the fine running of teammates Bewley and McFarlane, and the good defensive play of Bob Garside.

For the Gaels, Ross McKelvey was by far the best. Whenever he got away he really burned up the yards, but he had trouble getting started as he had very little blocking in front of him. Atwood also turned in a good running performance in a losing cause and Toni Arnoldi was the pick of the Queen's line.

The outstanding sports photo of the day shows Bill Bewley rounding the Varsity right end for the first touchdown of the game, Saturday, at Kingston, which Toronto won 26-2. Marshall Hames, Varsity left guard, stops dead to avoid running into the ball carrier, who didn't need Hames' downfield blocking on this play.

Gals Galore at Queen's Game Tea Dance Feature Attraction

The tea dance at Ban Righ Hall after the Varsity-Queen's game on Saturday showed the reason why more co-eds went to Kingston this year than last while less men went. It was the perfect dance for the co-ed who wants to make sure that she has at least one date during the school year as mobs of engineers, meds and artsmen waited for the co-ed who had escaped the date-seekers who met the train. The statement that anything wearing a skirt could get a date, was proven true when a short-sighted engineer asked unsuccessfully, for a date from two members of the Queen's Pipe Band.

The game was a soft touch compared to the tea dance. At least there are penalties in rugby for off-side play, tripping, elbowing and slugging. However most of the cheering was set to music as groups of dateless men looked elsewhere for company.

There was a very small Varsity cheering section at the game, split into three sections at opposite corners of the field. During the first half the cheerleaders split into two sections and somehow managed to keep in time while yelling although separated by the width of the field. The Toronto cheerleaders were greatly outnumbered by the score of lissome lassies wearing yellow, blue and red bloomers (the colors represent the three faculties), but they had more opportunity to do victory cartwheels and lead the singing of "Old Toronto." The Queen's cheerleaders walked on their hands and did cartwheels for one point—so much effort for so little gain.

The spirit of the week-end was best shown by the little man who came prepared for the rugby game. While the engineers at Queen's rushed to defend the goal posts, he hopped about amongst the seats, picking up empty bottles and putting them in a big burlap bag that he had brought to the game. He must have made a small fortune.

Kitten May Cause Co-ed's Expulsion

The attempt of a photographer from the Ubyssey, the University of British Columbia's student newspaper, to snap the picture of a mother cat and new offspring may result in the expulsion of a Co-ed resident student.

Cat and kittens were located in the Women's Dormitory, and the photographer was enabled to enter the residence through the aid of the Co-ed Penny Penfield. When the picture appeared in the student publication, University authorities threatened action against Miss Penfield.

No Loyalty Oaths For Calif Profs

Professors at the University of California will not be required to take a special faculty loyalty oath, it was decided Friday by a vote of the University's Board of Regents.

The reason given for the action was that a special faculty oath seemed unnecessary, when all University employees were already required to sign the regular state loyalty oath.

East Is Chosen As Seminar Site

The next International Summer Seminar may be held in Ceylon.

That was the site chosen as most desirable by the annual conference of International Student Service of Canada (ISS), held last weekend at McMaster University.

Ceylon was chosen the most suitable country in the Far East, where the conference felt the next seminar should be held. Should Ceylon not prove feasible, Israel, Jugoslavia, and Italy were considered and preferred in that order.

At any rate, it is not likely that the seminar will be held in Canada, as it was this summer. The first recommendation made to the conference was that it be held on an overseas site.

The seminar, an annual project of Canadian ISS, is a four or five-week meeting of students from all over the world, designed to increase understanding between them. At the 1951 seminar, held near Ottawa, 80 students from 11 different countries (including Pakistan, Germany, Israel and Finland) were present.

Each year the seminar is given a general subject around which it builds its lectures and discussions. In 1950 it was "The Crisis of Western Civilization"; this year it was "The Needs and Contributions of East and West."

The conference felt that too great an emphasis had been placed in previous years on catering to the Arts, that is, stressing the Humanities and Social Sciences in the program. It decided an effort should be made in include scientific and technical students, probably by the use of study groups, at which students in the same course from different areas could compare notes.

At one point it was suggested that seminars be held every other year, because of the difficulty of finding enough money to finance them. (The proposed budget for the Ceylon seminar is $50,000.) However, it was decided to keep them annual affairs.

It is amazing how difficult it is to find a story that will just fill a space on a page as small as this one. But if you think hard enough about the problem something is bound to come up and save the day.

ISS Conferees Discuss Visit of Soviet Student

In a close second vote, following a split decision, annual ISS conference at McMaster yesterday defeated wi was almost a vote of censure on NFCUS for its withdra of an invitation to a group of Russian students to v Canada.

The motion was introduced unexpected late Saturday night, and because of the hour was tabled until Sunday morning. Throughout that night and the following day, it was a subject for heated discussion, formal and informal, between what amounted to the two rival camps of McGill University, supporting and the University of Toronto.

The text of the resolution wa

"1. That the national confer of the International Student Se of Canada (ISS) urges the Nati Federation of Canadian Univer Students (NFCUS) to reconsider decision made in plenary session London rejecting the proposal Dave Lazure, the Chairman NFCUS' International Activi Commission; to invite a group Russian students to visit Canad

"2. That the co-operation of of Canada be extended to NFCUS implement the original proposa

The preamble to the resolu moved by McGill and seconded University of Montreal, pointed that "students, above all, sh have the freedom of conscience international affairs", and quo the ISS to stress the need for derstanding and a "critical many-sided" approach to inter tional problems.

Lazure extended the invitation the Soviet students to visit Can his summer, while he was attend the annual conference of the C munist-dominated Internati Union of Students (IUS) as NFCUS delegate. It was immedia accepted. However the an NFCUS conference refused to ra fy the invitation (which Lazure made on his own) when it me London last March. A letter has ready been sent from NFCUS forming the Soviet students, the offer is withdrawn.

Discussion on the motion resol into two different fields: princi and expediency. Only the Toron delegate (Peter Alley, IV Trinit spoke against the principle of motion, and many of those who v ed against it admitted they belie in its principle.

This argument was summed up Mel Rothman, McGill, who sa "ISS represents the highest form internationalism in Canada. If feel that NFCUS has not acted the best in an international m ter, we are obligated to ask it reconsider." He stressed, howev that this motion was not meant an insult to NFCUS.

On the other hand, many that if the motion passed, it wo damage the reputation of ISS antagonize NFCUS. They w afraid that such a motion wo give ISS a Communist reputati something it was just losing af its former affiliation with IUS. C Maritime speaker said he was that the motion, if passed, wo destroy ISS on his campus.

Others feared the motion wo damage NFCUS-ISS relations, wh had grown close in the past yea

The first vote on the motion split, 13-13. After an adjournm for lunch, a second vote turned 15-12 against the motion. Two those voting (including SAC Pre dent Syd Wax) were delegates the conference from NFCUS; third was NFCUS representative the ISS Administrative Committe

Following the vote, a second m tion was read that "the delegates this conference undertake to reop the question of the proposed visit Soviet students to Canada throu discussions with their local s dent councils, with the view of taining a campus-wide expression Canadian student opinion of issue as a whole."

That was passed 24-2, the o opposition coming from one of NFCUS delegates, and the Uni sity of Toronto.

This is similar to a motion alre passed by the Toronto SAC ternal Affairs Committee, wh requires every representative to ceive a mandate from his local g erning body on the question, so Toronto can have a represente mandate for the 1952 NFCUS c ference.

CUP Says...

Montreal (CUP)— Leave it to finance experts to find a way of beating the high cost of cigarettes. A coop composed of members of the staff and griaduate school of McGill's School of Commerce, manages to save each member an estimated 25 cents on cigarettes. Each chipped in a dollar for a sleek cigaratte rolling machine, and all have become experts by now, a McGill Daily renoted.

At first the janitor of the commerce building was given the job of making the cigarettes in return for free smokes. But he could not keep up with the demand, so members of the cooperative now roll their own, paying one cent for each cigarette they consume.

"The group stands ready to offer advice to any students wishing to set up their own cigarette rolling machine," one of the members said.

It would appear that the students aren't as smart, though.

The results of a test on Canadian culture, given by Professor A. L. Phelps, of the McGill English Department, showed a general lack of knowledge of Canadiana, Phelps reported. Twenty questions were included in the test given to freshmen students only.

The results showed poets to be more popular than novelists, while not one third of the students could name three Canadian composers or historians. Thirty-five percent failed the test, 55 percent were average with ten percent showing above-average knowledge.

Another revelation of the test was the fact that freshmen turn to the news page in a paper first, editorials second, and sports third, they said.

Phelps gives a course in Canadian literature for first year studenst. He said that the course should increase the attention students pay to Canadian writers.

See Exchange Of Europeans With Canucks

Canadian students may be able to go to European universities on an exchange plan in the near future.

Such a plan was one of the recommendations placed before the annual conference of the International Student Service of Canada (ISS) held at McMaster University last weekend.

The plan would call for the Canadian student to pay for the European student's tuition, board and expenses in Canada, and then take the place of the European student, who would have done the same on his own campus.

The plan would eliminate currency regulations, and would not in effect be a "scholarship."

The pattern has been considered by the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS), for exchanges between the United States and Canada. However, no exchange has been effected as yet.

Some sort of European exchange already exists on three different Canadian campi. but not in this exact form. On the Toronto campus, there is a fund to facilitate such a program with a German student. It, however, lapsed during the war, and is just under the process of resurrection at present.

Queen's has an exchange plan with the University, which allows a Scottish student to study in Canada.

The University of British Columbia has the closest thing to the proposed scheme. Two students from the University of Hamburg study at UBC each year, and this year one Canadian is studying at Hamburg. Germans pay for tuition, board and lodging; the Canadians pay for transportation of both Germans and Canadians as well. This scheme is run and financed by the local committee of ISS at UBC.

CCF Meeting Hears Frye On Socialism

"Prospects for constitutional socialists are not good," admitted Professor Northrop Frye, in addressing the opening meeting of the Vic C.C.F. on Friday. He qualified this remark by pointing out that the C.C.F. has much greater influence than its strength at the pools would indicate. Numbers are not important: "four people came together and formed the Fabian Society, an action which subsequently changed the course of the British Empire and the world."

Prof. Frye has just returned to the Victoria English Department after spending a year in the United States and many of his remarks concerned the political situation there. "Laissez-faire which leads to an oligarchic tyranny had been denied on many important questions by the American people," he said, but they are unwilling to call their actions socialistic".

He argued that the Canadian political system is necessarily closer to the American than the British, despite the fact that we have a parliamentary form of government. The Canadian Liberal Party is almost the exact counterpart of the American Democratic Party, he said. On the other hand the C.C.F. is essentially in the English tradition of politics. Its existence, like that of the Canadian nation ("held together by two skinny railway lines"), is due to an act of will, he said.

Peep Show

Three rousing cheers for Queen's. As depicted above, certain stalwarts from that august institution have discovered a new way to advertise. On Saturday those who attended the Queen's - Varsity game were urged to attend some function put on by the Queen's Faculty of Science, by means of the signs shown. The gentlemen have promised to be in Toronto next week.

Late Queen's Mascot 300 Lbs. Of Malice

By GRANT GIBSON

Sometimes The Varsity can hand out a really interesting assignment. One that an energetic reporter can get his teeth into and work up some enthusiasm for. Last Friday one of these rare tasks was given to me.

"Go!" the editor said. "Go to Queen's. Get photographs. Photograph the Cheerleaders, Drum Majorette, Bear." (Be careful of that spelling, please, Mr. typesetter.)

On my word of honour, that is just what I was told to do.

The next morning, bright, early, and loaded with spirit, my camera and I set out.

On reaching Kingston, I at once tackled the Drum Majorette. (Dear readers, I humbly beg your pardon. You realize of course I tackled my assignment.) In due course the Queen's Cheerleaders were suitably recorded on celluloid, and their names and addresses taken. The latter act was only an afterthought, as there are times when members of The Varsity staff visit the Limestone City and such information is of course rather useful.

The Drum Majorette and the Bear were next.

I approached the comely lass with considerable trepidation; my mother tells me that I am the shy type, and I asked the Majorette to pose with Boo Hoo VIIIth, the bear. Apparently she didn't hear the definite article for before I knew it or had time to duck, the colour had risen in her face and she had aimed a swat at me. As Toronto was getting ready to score again, I left in a hurry to get a picture.

Later with the kind help of a stalwart Scot Drum Major I approached Miss Peggy Dyer again. (That is her name men, write it down quickly before it burns a hole in the paper.) He was big and brave, and he obviously had a way with the fair ladies. In short order I had my picture, two of them.

As Peggy posed she related this sad news. That shuffling plantigrade King Boo Hoo the Eighth, proud mascot of Queen's University, has been disposed of. It seems that he bit several of the cheerleaders and developed an awkward disposition. You can no doubt sympathize with the attitude held toward nearly three hundred pounds of nasty temper.

I don't know how anything could

U of T Homecoming Features Gala Parade Six Orchestra Dance

The third annual Homecoming Weekend which starts next Friday night with a stadium show, will be the biggest and best yet, according to the Blue and White Society who are promoting the weekend. Arrangements have been made for the stadium show, a float parade on Saturday morning, entertainment at the rugby game, and a dance with six orchestras for Saturday night.

Also this coming week is tweeper-week, whatever that means.

The float parade committee are emphasizing quality rather than quantity this year. To give the smaller groups a better chance, entries are limited to 200 feet in length. Medicine is out to win the Alumnae Cup again this year after the success of their obstretrical supermarket last year. Forestry, Art and Archaeology, Architecture and Skule are getting together what they each promises to be the most sensational entry ever produced in the Alumnae Cup competition. The judges for the float parade have not yet been announced.

Cheerleaders, grads, and a pair of famous visitors will spark the stadium show on Friday night. This "colossal, stupendous show will be one of the greatest things to ever hit the campus," in the words of publicity director Hugh Niblock.

New words have been written for the song "Follow the Blues," which was introduced by the Blue and White Society when it was first formed by Joe Potts. At the Queen's game very few of the students knew the words to the song when it was played by the Blue and White Band.

Coach Bob Masterson and the University of Toronto Blues, just returned from a successful engagement at the Richardson Memorial Stadium in Kingston, will be presented to the audience at the Stadium Show, and will receive presents from the Blue and White Society.

On Saturday night the whole of Hart House will be open for a Rugby dance and open house, also sponsored by the Blue and White Society. There will be bands in the upper and lower gymns, the east common, debates and music rooms, and a cabaret style-orchestra in the lunch room. Tickets for this dance go on sale today at faculties and colleges as well as at Hart House.

On Sunday there will be services held by the various religious denominations at the University. Information as to place and time for these services will be carried in The Varsity during the coming week.

IRC Discusses Effect Of US-Russia Schism

The Hart House farm at Caledon Hill was the site this weekend of an International Relations Club seminar. Led by President Andy Watson, IV Trinity, and Vice-President Joan Hanley, IV Vic, the group included students from both Arts and Science faculties, and graduate schools. Professor C. B. Macpherson of the Department of Political Economy, and Mr. G. Bennett of the History Department gave faculty support to the project, something new in the history of the IRC.

The topic scheduled for the weekend was "The effect of the split between Russia and the United States on the smaller nations," to be discussed in three sections, Asia, Europe and Canada. Discussion got widely off topic at times, as members became particularly vehement over such issues as American foreign policy, and the advisability of Western interference in Asiatic wars and disturbances.

No definite conclusions were reached by the seminar group. The main achievement of the weekend was a general airing out of thorny issues, and controversial problems. Leftist thinking received a good hearing at all meetings, but no one political philosophy predominated.

Time off was taken for wiener roasts, walks, and real work around the farm property. Members planted numerous trees, built a moderately steady fence, and finished off the weekend with a plunge in the icy pond.

Official count for the group came to about thirty students.

Furthermore, if any male, human or otherwise were to develop a bad temper amid such surroundings as King Boo Hoo enjoyed, special attention should be spent on his execution.

Boo Hoo has not been replaced, and it seems unlikely that he ever shall.

Third War Inevitable Europe Fears—Fennell

By JOHN SCOTT, McGILL DAILY

Culturally speaking, Europe feels herself to be exhausted, and politically speaking, European youth feels there is no hope, Prof. William Fennell, of Emmanuel College said Saturday.

Prof. Fennell told the International at McMaster University he noted a mood of despondency and despair during a just-completed one-year stay in Europe. A member of the faculty at the 1950 ISS summer seminar in France, Prof. Fennell spent the last twelve months at the University of Strasbourg.

The mood was sustained, he said, by the still-evident ruins of World War Two, and the threat of World War Three.

"There is a widespread belief that total atomic war between east and west is inevitable, and that continental Europe will be the no-man's-land where it will be fought," he said.

Prof. Fennell noted the answers of several groups of young people to what they feel is the disastrous situation they are in.

Firstly, there were the atheistic existentialists, who "choose to despair in the face of the final meaninglessness of human life." Many found in this a "stoic heroism."

Secondly, there was a group of young people whose only desire was to emigrate to Canada, where they felt there is still hope, politically and culturally. They were impressed with the buoyancy, hope and vitality of the Canadian students they had met.

Thirdly, there were those who placed their hope in the creation of a federation of European states. "But nationalism is rooted so deeply that young people are frustrated by the slowness of their elders," he said.

Fourthly, there was the Christian group, which felt that federation would be desirable, but not something on which ultimate hope could be based.

Prof. Fennell challenged the delegates to find in their philosophies of life and religious beliefs an answer to speak to European youth in their plight.

Council Fees Are Raised At Queen's

Kingston—(CUP)—Queen's University authorities have approved a raise in student council fees by $1.50 per student. Though the approval came after registration had ended, it will have to be collected by November first through the year organizations.

This is the first student council fee raise since 1930, though operating costs have doubled, George Ainslee, treasurer of the Alma Mater Society, Queen's student council, explained. In addition the AMS has operated at a deficit for the past three years, using up the surplus obtained during the war years when spending was curtailed, he continued.

The added levy will be used to cover only existing activities, including the Queen's Journal, undergraduate paper, the two bands and AMS operating expenses. All three had large deficits last year. With the new fee raise, Ainslee said, these deficits will be covered for the future.

Any students refusing to pay his fee will be referred to the AMS court for trial and possible fine.

GIRAUDOUX

Madwoman

By ALICE LUKACS

"A fantastic fable" is how director Robert Gill defines the season's first Hart House production, Giraudoux's "The Mad Woman of Chaillot."

"The play is definitely a comedy, a fable told in simple terms, but one that has no political meaning," says Mr. Gill. "It is a tale of good and bad people, through which a streak of fantastic logic winds, the implication being that only a madwoman can save mankind."

The characters, in their simplification, stand for the good and evil factors of society. They represent either the Powerful People of the world, and are called the President, Inspector, Broker, Baron, or they stand for the Little People, such as the Rag-picker, the Waiter, and the Street-singer. The four madwomen, convinced individualists, become allies of the Little People of the world.

The plot centers around the Madwoman, who, living in a dream-world of her own, awakens and realizes that people are dominated by powerful evil forces. She then sets out to destroy them, closing the trap-door of her cellar on the powerful ones. All this makes for a hilarious comedy, according to Robert Gill, which was one of his main reasons for selecting it as the opening production. The play is also a new one which balances the program of Hart House Theatre for the coming year, the other plays being of a less modern nature.

This play of Giraudoux ran on Broadway, and was staged in Canada before, but it is an original production as far as local groups are concerned.

Entirely new sets were designed by a student, Jane Carson, IV Trinity, for the two straight acts. The play is supposed to "take place to-morrow," and its fantastic nature is stressed throughout by Director Gill and the cast.

An all-student cast of 25 is headed by Ann Murray in a difficult principal role. She has the complicated task of combining madness and strange logic, thus conveying Giraudoux's picture of confused world. This part demands a great deal of emotion, as the madwoman is essentially a sensitive, dreamy person. One of the most touching scenes in the play occurs when she tells Pierre, who wants to commit suicide, her simple notions of life, until the boy in love with life again.

The principal male part is played by George McCowan, who is the raisonneur of the play. The Inspector, who would tear Paris down to get oil, is portrayed by Henry Jackman.

The conclusion is fantastic, too, it takes one "sensible" woman to get rid of evil, explains the Madwoman of Chaillot. Naturally the audience is supposed to cooperate, explains Robert Gill, in letting its imagination go with Giraudoux's, when the play opens next Friday, October 26 in Hart House Theatre.

SCIENCE NOTES

Kon-Tiki

Anyone who has read the wonderful story of the Kon-Tiki expedition knows about Thor Heyerdahl's theory of the origin of the Polynesian civilization. The book is more an adventure story than a racial theory, and Heyerdahl does not give a thorough exposition of his ideas. However, he explains the main lines of his reasoning.

He says that at the comparatively recent time of the first immigrations to the South Sea Islands, that is, one wave (according to him) around 500 A.D. and one around 1100 A.D., there was no flourishing stone age civilization in the Old World. The Polynesians, although highly intelligent, were a stone age people, and therefore could hardly have come from the west.

Then he links Inca legends of a highly civilized, white-skinned, bearded race who were supposed to have lived long ago in Peru and had mysteriously disappeared (last seen heading west), with similar legends among Polynesians about their white-skinned, god-like ancestors who had come from a far-off land beyond the sea. In both traditions, these white demigods were led by the Sun God, called Kon-Tiki in South America, and Tiki in Polynesia. This, Heyerdahl said, was the immigration of 500 A.D. The second wave, of a dark-skinned people who mixed with Kon-Tiki's race, he traces to British Columbia.

Supporting the theory about Kon-Tiki's followers, he points out various culture parallels between Polynesia and Peru. The mysterious stone colossi on Easter Island, "with pointed beards and white man's features," very much resembled, according to him, similar giant images in Peru. The ingenious method of erecting these without machinery was the same. He also cited plants found in Peru which had allegedly been taken to Polynesia. Furthermore, the early Polynesians had a knowledge of navigation and astronomy and a type of calendar which Heyerdahl felt was superior to anything they could have learned among the Melanesian or Malayan people to the west. Then the author and his companions proved that crossing the Pacific on a primitive raft was possible, if not easy.

This all sounds very convincing, especially when backed up by the persuasiveness of Heyerdahl's style, and the dashing glamour of the whole undertaking. However, it is only fair that the stick-in-the-mud old anthropologists who reject the idea should be permitted to present their case. And the fact is, that after a run-in with the U. of T. Anthropology Department, Kon-Tiki emerged looking somewhat battered. Most anthropologists question some of the very foundations of Heyerdahl's theory. First, they say that it has not been conclusively proven that there were any migrations before the generally accepted date, tentatively set as somewhere in the twelfth century A.D. He apparently based his other date (500 A.D.) only on the natives' recital of past chiefs — aout as scientifically dependable as Old Testament genealogy. Secondly, they flatly deny Heyerdahl's assertion that there was no large group in Southeast Asia still mechanically at the stone age level. He was deceived into thinking that the high level of Hindu and Moslem civilization prevailed all over. However, there were many large stone age peoples in India, Ceylon and Indonesia, as well as the Melanesians and Micronesians.

The same authorities are equally dubious about the existence of this mysterious white race, of the type roughly classed as Caucasoid, in South America, where nobody has ever found traces of any aboriginal racial type other than the so-called New World Mongoloid. The Polynesians are a widely varied mixture of Mongoloid, Caucasoid, and Negroid types, and it is hard to see how they could come from a country in which only one type is found. It is also difficult to imagine the whole vast South Sea Island area being populated by the few isolated rafts which might survive such a voyage.

On the other hand, there still exist in Indonesia and all through the Malay region seafaring groups containing all the racial types found in Polynesia, speaking a language from the same linguistic stock, having many common traits of mythology, religion and folklore, using similar tools, making similar carvings and amulets, sailing similar outrigger canoes, and within an easily practicable distance of the Polynesian islands. There is evidence that all the various peoples in the Polynesian triangle, enormous as it is, came indirectly from the mainland through Micronesia to Tahiti, and from there spread out to countless other islands.

Even the remarkable Easter Island images are related to the art work done in the Marquesan group, and there is no evidence whatsoever of their having been built by a mysterious white race who learned the skill in Peru. Since all the human remains of the original race in Easter Island are skeletons, it would be hard to determine their colour. The method used for erecting the images is indeed the same one as that used in South America. The natives dragged the image, feet first, up an inclined plane of earth and stone, and pushed it over the steep side into a hole prepared as a foundation. The point is, however, that this identical method, which is really the only possible one, has been used all over the world wherever primitive peoples have wished to up-end heavy blocks of stone or wood. It was used in building Stonehenge, and in erecting North American totem poles. It has been witnessed, within the last thirty years, in Madagascar.

All the plants cited by Heyerdahl as having been carried from South America are found in Indonesia. Furthermore, there is every reason to credit this mainland people with considerable knowledge of navigation and astronomy, and with using a good calendar system — quite unlike the Inca one. The only remarkable similarity in the Sun God legends, since reverence for the sun is a common factor among all primitive societies, is the coincidence of the names Tiki and Kon-Tiki. But it might be pointed out that Tiki-Tiki is also a place name in Malaya, and that Maori warriors of New Zealand wore owlish-faced little amulets called Tiki's.

In short, we have on the one hand a remote possibility, weakly supported, and on the other a strong probability, upheld by geography as well as numerous culture checks. Heyerdahl himself said that all his voyage could prove was that such a trip was possible — not that it necessarily happened. Maybe he could defend his theory against all these arguments. However, one can't help wondering if maybe everyone is out of step except Thor Heyerdahl.

Relief Target

These are two scenes of student life in south-east Asia, where the majority of material aid will probably be sent in the coming year by International Student Service of Canada. At the annual ISS conference, held last weekend in Hamilton, no definite destination was set for the relief, but majority interest centred in this highly-important world area.

Crazy Camera

It just goes to show you — on a Queen's weekend, you can't even expect the camera to stay sober (let alone your photographer — Ed.). Here we have a rather inebriated shot of Bill Bewley carrying the ball off Queen's right tackle as Varsity marched the ball out of their own end on a series of ground plays.

Intermediates Win 19-7 Over OAC At Guelph

Fitzhenry And Geekie Pass OAC Dizzy

After holding their own against the Baby Blues for th first half, the OAC Intermediate Aggies gave up the ghos for the last half of the game played last Saturday Guelph and absorbed a 19-7 defeat at the hands of th visitors.

With Varsity quarterbacks Fitzhenry and Geekie completing 12 out of 18 passes, and the Blue line refusing to let the Aggies go anywhere, the Intermediate Blues brought home a well-earned win. Unable to go anywhere either on the ground or in the air (seven Aggie passes were intercepted by the Blues), the only saving grace for the Aggies was their superlative kicking.

Early in the first quarter the Blues took possession on the centre field stripe and advanced the ball by a series of running plays to the OAC 15-yard line. Doug Geek dropped back on the next play an hit Don Smith in the end zone wi a pass for the first score of th game. There was a bad snap o the convert and the attempted dro kick was missed.

Bill Burley ran the Varsity scor up to 7 with a couple of single kicked after the Blues had twic worked their way into Aggie terri tory and then failed to capitaliz Before the end of the first hal OAC finally got under way and tie the score with a converted touch down and a single.

With the coming of the second half, the Aggies wilted and the Intermediate Blues lowered the boom Starting from their own 50, th Blues completed four passes in row, two of them from quarterback Fitzhenry to left end Milne. Geekie came into the game to complete a third down pass to Frank Keiczo and then Fitzhenry pitched one to Frank Palermo that carried the ball to the Aggie 2-yard line. Don Fawcett carried it over from there for the major and Earl Ford kicked the extra point.

After the kickoff, a series of end runs and passes brought the Blues into paydirt again. Terry Housley tossed one to Milne in the end zone from the 10-yard line to not a the final Varsity touchdown. Once again Ford convered.

The Blues found themselves inside the Aggie 25-yard line three times in the final quarter but could not seem to notch another major. Some excellent Aggie kicking and the lack of a little luck kept the Intermediate Blues scoreless during the final quarter.

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

The Blues kicked off to Queen's. The Gaels ran one play and were stopped by that now-famous Blue line for no gain. They ran another, and fumbled. The Blues recovered and approximately six plays later, each one of them an example taken from the book "How to Block" by the 1951 Varsity Blues, Bewley carried over for a touchdown.

The Homecoming crowd in Richardson Memorial Stadium had just seen the team that defeated the Mustangs one short week before at its best. But except for some fine defensive play, that team all but disappeared for the rest of the game.

The Blues were still three touchdowns (all of them scored by fleet-footed Bobby Dale) better than the Gaels, but they were never called upon to play the kind of football that beat Western and the Redmen in previous league games this season. The Blues fumbled on occasion, but that didn't seem to bother them. There was always the chance of getting it back by recovering a Queen's fumble on the next play.

This psychology business is really a wonderful thing, and don't let anyone tell you that a football game is made up of anything less than 50% psychology. It appeared to us that the Blues started off thinking they were going to have to play football to win this one, and then found within the space of about three minutes that there was an easier way than that.

As football games go, last Saturday's outing can not be rated very high. It is pretty tough to say whether the Blues were that good or Queen's were that poor. Comparing the Blues' performance Saturday with their game against the Mustangs here the weekend before, we are inclined to believe that the latter was the case.

It is hard to say just where the events of the weekend leave the Blues as far as the Intercollegiate race is concerned. McGill's defeat of the Mustangs throws a somewhat different light on the whole scene. Perhaps for no better reason than their record of Intercollegiate championships in recent years, the Mustangs were still considered as the team that the Blues had to beat to regain the title even after they had been beaten by the Blues.

Should McGill take another one from the Mustangs next week, the shoe will be on an entirely different foot. When we sit back and think about it, the Redmen did look a great deal better against Varsity than the Mustangs. But then, the difference between the same Intercollegiate team on two successive weekends is sometimes little short of amazing.

Western is always a tough team to beat at a home game, but if the Redmen are as much better as Saturday's score would indicate then they are going to be far from a pushover when they visit Toronto for the last game of the regular Intercollegiate schedule.

One thing seems certain. There is going to be a lot of excitement before they close the books on the fight for the Yates Dish this season. With any kind of luck the Blues will get by Queen's this weekend. Then they will face a couple of tough battles. Western would love nothing better than to upset the apple cart for the Blues. The charges of coach Vic Obeck are gunning for an Intercollegiate championship that was practically stolen from them last fall.

Dent Blank Meds In 15-0 Whitewash, Group III Opener

By BILL WILSON

In the opening Group Three contect Friday afternoon a sharp Dents squad whitewashed a weak-tackling Meds Second team 15-0. Although it was not until the final quarter that the winners widened their margin, they held a great edge in the play throughout, and might have won by even more. The losing doctors were never in possession of the ball as far up as the centre stripe.

The Dentists' opening kick-off went into touch, and after booting again from their 35 they hemmed in the Meds for the rest of the game. Although they had several good opportunities for majors in the first half, George Little's single was all they could manage. Meds' kicking and goal-line stands held them out.

In the third quarter Tats Hori's fine placement from the 25 increased the Dent's total to four. A sleeper pass from Jack Simpson to Jim Gajda again brought the Den't into scoring position. However, the Medsmen forced them back and Hori's third down placement attempt went wide for a single point.

Early in the fourth quarter, Meds showed signs of recovery but two long runs for major scores ended their hopes. Don Gilbert took a Meds punt on the Dent's 50 and then lateraled to Jack Wall who raced down the touch line through the Meds for the touchdown. Again taking the Meds' first punt after the kick-off Dents added to their total as Jick Simpson out-ran the Meds from mid-field to their goal-line. Luck was with him as he dropped the ball twice but managed to pick it up on the run. Both majors went unconverted.

For the winners Baynton and Cummings went well up front, while Wall, Gilbert and Simpson shone in the backfield. Jack Morphit, Mel Urquhart, Skip Jones and Jim Forward were the best of the losing Medsmen.

Toronto Harriers Beat Buffalo U. Herb Tilson Wins

The University Harrier team team went to Buffalo Friday and edged the University of Buffalo team 25-31 in a close meet over Buffalo's 4½ mile course. Of the sixteen-man field, the first five on each team counted. Toronto placed first, third, fourth, eighth, and ninth, and Buffalo placed second, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eleventh.

Scores in harrier are obtained by adding the placings on each team, the team with the lowest score being the winner.

Herb Tilson won the race in 24 minutes, 23 seconds, and was just four seconds over the course record. Traugott, the Buffalo man who came in second was about five seconds (or about 20 yards) behind him. Third and fourth were George McMullen and Mal Crawford respectively, one minute (or about 300 yards) behind Tilson.

Frank Quinlan of Toronto placed eighth, followed by Bob Sheridan and Pal Johnston. Murray Gaziuk staggered in twelfth with a painful stitch (again).

Pete Niblock, who was running in third place till the last quarter of a mile or so, took a wrong turn and sprained his ankle trying to jump a fence.

The Junior Harrier race was held over a two mile course at high park Saturday. Vic won the team honours, being the only ones to enter a team. Rintoul of UC won, and Pal Johnston of Vic was second.

SOFTBALL

Vic II came out on top again today in their game with St. Hilda's III 13-4. Jackie Donnelly hit a home run for Vic. The Vic coach was heard to remark that the team was playing top-notch ball and promises to be the dark horse in the series. (To be or not to be that is the question.)

ST. HILDA'S SPLASH PARTY

The melodious tones of a recorder announced the opening of St. Hilda's splash party at L. M. last night. As the water-nymphs plowed, shoved and drifted their way down and across the pool, it became evident that 5T2, through sheer weight and numbers if nothing else, was on its first lap towards the swimming trophy. Inspired by Lou Willard's top individual score of 26, 5T2 amassed the impressive total of 63 points. 5T4, and 5T5 followed with 27, 10 and 8 respectively. However, the seniors are advised not to rest on their water-wings at the next aquatic meet but to beware of equal representation from the other three years who did so nobly in spite of the lack of quantity.

The variety of events were an outlet for all manner of latent potentialities. The usual speed races were punctured by unorthodox exhibitions of skill in the near-extinct arts of clutching balloons in toes, dog-paddling, and crab-racing, while the more graceful and co-ordinated swimmers were able to show off in style and ornamental contests. Di. Jacobs judged the style and tricks and managed somehow to keep track of winners.

Pitching Sportshoes

On a day with very little intramural activity, only five games were scheduled and two were won by default.

In the headline game of the day Senior SPS and UC fought to a scoreless draw as the UC soccer squad played their second tie. Other action saw the Architecture squeeze out a 1-0 victory over Junior Vic, and Trinity B's won by default over Pre-Meds.

Lacrosse action resulted in Meds Fifths downing Trinity's B team 8-1. Med Urquhart and Bill Kerr each fired three goals.

The only volley-ball contest scheduled was defaulted by Junior Vic to St. Mike's A team.

The times of four women's basketball games this week have been changed in order to facilitate matters for some of the players who have other activities conflicting.

Drama Review

One-Act Plays

RAIDERS TO THE SEA by J. M. Synge has a background of hopeless sadness. It is over this sadness that the actors must lift their audience, and they have only the stark words of the play to do this with, for there is little action. Last night that desolation, that hopelessness, which is the essence of the play was not there and as a result the play had nothing to build on. To begin with, the women were all dressed in gay coloured shawls. The lighting was as bright and cheerful as the shawls. This colourful effect was never quite lost and the play as a result lost its conviction. This lightness was further aided by the two daughters who did their opening scene well before they learned of their brother's death, but who did not succeed in the later scenes, after his death. Strong acting was needed here to counter-act the poor start.

Marylin Campkin as the old mother did a good job, though occasionally showing her youth. Harriet Thamson as the older daughter was fine in her earlier more relaxed scenes and the same applies to Charlotte Holmes who played her sister. Tom Daley, one of the sons, seemed to be ill at ease and not too sure of his lines.

Despite the adverse criticism the play and have dramatic power especially in the performance of Marilyn Campkin.

The Mazo de la Roche play, SOME TRUE, about four men in an old man's home was amusing despite its contrived ending. Spittal, an old warhorse of a man, was played by Adrian Adamson. There can be no criticism here: he did the part perfectly. Paul Bacon gave the trembly part of Leaf as good a performance as Adams. However, Waddie played by Bill Mitchell, while having a distinct character was uneven in places. He tended to act younger than his sixty years. Beswetherick played by Martin Hunter was marvelous. He did not slip once, and every movement of face and body was perfect. Neil Patterson playing Syd was fair with occasional lapses. Judy Gianelli as the Matron was fine when she was bossy but somehow out of character when saying soft things. Lucy Meadows, the old love of Waddie's, played by Jean Robb was too good. She appeared to be all of sixty years or more and it was painful to see the youthful appearing Waddie trying to show enthusiasm for her. A beautiful part of realistic acting. This was an entertaining play well acted.

The last play by Tennessee Williams called THIS PROPERTY IS CONDEMNED was beautifully done. Against a bright green backdrop representing the sky the girl Willy reveals her life to Tom who is skipping school so that he can fly his kite. Eleanor Warnock as Willy was perfect. She was a loose-jointed young girl with an up and down voice which could stretch from pathos to defiance. Even the master of such roles, Julie Harris, could have done no better. Douglas Quirk as Tom, a stolid boy with hands in his pockets who expresses himself in single words, was just right. His relaxed way, his stillness, gave an intensity to the moment which it otherwise could not possibly have had. He was the focusing of Willy's rambling talk and as he listened so did the audience. This night of plays could not have ended on a better note.

This reviewer then listened in on Mr. John Drainie's adjudication of the plays. Since he found himself in disagreement with the eadpudicator on almost all counts except in the placing of the plays by merit he felt it would take too long to present Mr. Drainie's thoughts and then his own. Besides, throughout his eavesdropping various members who were there kept insisting that he not repeat a word of the meeting for fear of being sued. The reviewer being in mortal fear of the court has therefore written a review based entirely on his very own thoughts.

Skunks

By GEORGE FIERHELLER

There was something smelly about this assignment from the start. I soon found out what it was: Skunks, especially one which made its way ing system. Luckily the one thing into the University College ventilatthat still lingered was the memory. Of course, for a Trinity man to even venture into the basement of U.C. is just . . . well . . .

From what the feature editor told me about the place, I expected to fight my way through a maze of rats, mice, and Freshies, and assorted other animals. An interview with Janitor Dave Scolnik quickly set me straight on that.

From what I could dig up from musty old records and various professors, it appears that the whole basement was beautifully renovated about 1945 and since then all has been dull and, at least on the surface, tranquil.

There may still be people around who remember when the corridors were just dirt floors. The students used to litter this place with food, texts, and other kinds of refuse. Soon the rats flocked in and set up housekeeping. This was the last straw and the people in charge of things like that decided to make a clean sweep. So the basement was renovated. The question of whether the renovation was the cause of the rats leaving (with apologies to the architects), or the effect of their coming, I will leave to some contemporary of the event to answer.

Of course, not all has been dull since the good old days. It appears that a couple of the people, on hearing that there was a dance at U.C., began searching for an open window. They found it, and once again Dave had to chase things out of the hallowed halls.

Anyway the undergrads got their better basement. A boys' cloakroom was formed out of a girls' powder room. The old Varsity office, which was right above a garbage dump, was moved to a place which had definitely less atmosphere.

But now that the rats, skunks, and girls had been cleared out, trouble started anew with the philosophy and psychology students. Now these are supposed to be subjects that train the mind to become keen, bright, awake—it is one man's job just to pick up the books, pens, paper, and people that these keen, bright, awake students forget to take with them.

Incidentally the rats were last seen migrating towards St. Hilda's. I think that they heard that there was some cheesecake there. I doubt if any of the Trinity men have ever looked into the matter, however.

If you have never been in the basement of U.C. (and it is amazing how many contented students have acquired a degree without this exhilarating experience) then you have missed that feeling of nostalgia for the smell of skunks, and the scurrying feet of many mice. All this brings us to Janitor Dave's final comment on the cellars of U.C. "Rats!"

"Pop" Concerts

The Toronto Symphony Orchestra opened the season of Friday night "Pop" concerts with a pattern of familiar pieces—the theme of the concerts. The presence of a talented Canadian as guest artist also added to the evening's completeness.

Paul Scherman directed the orchestra in the contemporary work "London Suite" by Eric Coates. In the central section "Westminster" dignity was brought out while rhythm was the keynote in "Knightsbridge March."

The familiar theme from "Scherezade" by Rimsky-Korsakov is usually well-received by the audience as was the case on Friday night. As the closing selection, "Orpheus in the Underworld" by Offenbach, was chosen and it was played with perfect familiarity, unity and gusto which was appreciated by the audience.

Pierette Alarie, soprano, was soloist of the evening and she proved that Canada has talent. She has achieved honor for she recently won the Metropolitan Auditions of the Air and has been described as another Lily Pons. She sang, with feeling and tenderness, the song "Oh Quand je Dors" but most successful was "Ohie Menech" a gay song which brought out the dexterity of her voice. She seem to sing with as much ease However, Miss Alarie did not seem to sing with as much ease when accompanied by the orchestra as when accompanied by the able Leo Barkin, who as usual accompanied the soloist with maximum support.

A Vital Question

What Price Progress?

Not so very long ago there occurred at West Point military academy an event which caused a great deal of commotion both in the United States and Canada. Ninety students had been reprimanded during examinations for breaking their pledge of honor or, more bluntly, had been caught in the act of cheating. Numerous newspapers spoke out in righteous horror against the apparent lack of scruples of the students involved. The students were censured, not without justification, no doubt. However, the whole issue seems to have its roots in something deeper than the scruples of the individuals. The thoughtful reader will realize that this episode represents on a small scale a vital social problem.

The motivating influence underlying most cheating is the student's desire to attain a pass mark which he thinks of, in a limited way, as the successful completion of his academic course. But is this statement as true as we think it is? If the student wished a pass mark, or a high standing, as a thing worthy of accomplishment in itself, he would surely, through force of will, see to it that he achieved his purpose. But no, he was content not to have achieved his goal, but to be thought by others to have done so. In other words, it was the value of his friends' good opinion that he put before his own honesty and self-respect.

This example finds various counterparts in every walk of life. There is the case of the individual who wants to be a lawyer or an engineer not in his own eyes but in the eyes of others. He warps his whole personality, destroys his self-respect in order to win the useless praise of his fellows. He falsifies himself, and discards truth, honor and self-respect. He loses what is of paramount value in life and prizes the hollow echoes of esteem and praise. On the scale of relative values, he ranks prestige first.

This basic inability to judge what is of importance and what is worthless comes up time and time again. For instance, it can be seen by looking around us that we have accepted and are practising, perhaps unconsciously, the doctrine that "to have is of far greater merit than to become."

According to this doctrine the gauge of success in life is the quantity of money that one accumulates. Apparently there is a real virtue in possession for possession's sake. What a person actually becomes in life or what good he can do as a result of his wealth is overlooked. Public opinion goes to your bank account to see if you have succeeded.

Obviously, then, it is easy to see that in the field of relative values the materialistic has been set on a higher level of importance than all else. Now, to censure and condemn materialism is foolish, for man lives on and by material things. The point is, however, that he need not live for material things. In doing so his judgment of values is erring. And it is not surprising that his judgment should err.

In the past 70 years there has been a tremendous advancement in the materialistic side of life. The glittering display of inventions, following one after another continuously, has held man almost in a trance. The blinding cavalcade of wonders has fascinated him.

As a result of these inventions, the mass of men have developed a great admiration for the scientist. Fed on further materialistic progress, this admiration has broadened into a faith, a faith in the unlimited powers of science. The solving of the true problems of humanity is relegated to second place. The order of values has been shaken and has remained in its present undesirable state for half a century.

The future, it is hoped, will see the awakening of man to his real task and will see science turn its powers to the solving of the pressing problems of mankind.

Charity Inc.

Everything on this continent seems to come in big jumbo packages. And this is no less true of charity than of big business and government spending. Drives for one good cause or another are undertaken on a national or international basis. Anything less than gigantic just doesn't stand a chance.

In the Community Chest Drive we have a sort of local bigness. Not one, not two, but sixty-six local welfare institutions band together to appeal for a really impressive amount.

Charity may still begin at home, but only to a limited extent. People may delve into their pocketbooks or fill out checks almost anywhere, and they do. From there on, however, the donor loses track of any interest in the series of events which brings his gift to the needy recipient.

The long dim trail from the citizen's pocket to the canvassers, from the canvasser to the central office, from this organizational maze to the small charitable institutions and finally to the beneficiary, has managed to depersonalize charity entirely.

The individual rarely has any firsthand knowledge about the cause to which he is asked to contribute. Publicity carried in the daily newspapers and a personal interview with the canvasser (who has read all the pamphlets and therefore knows the situation) manage to convince him that such-and-such a cause is a Good Thing.

It is, of course, easy to see why there is such a great separation between donor and recipient. The city is a vast honeycomb in which each income bracket is housed in a cell carefully separated from the others. Organizations are formed to penetrate these divisions, something which the individual cannot do effectively.

While the work carried on by charitable institutions is in every way necessary and indispensable it seems that the organization required to raise money has passed the bounds of reason. The enormous expense of publicity reduces the amount of money available for the actual work of relief.

Instead of using high pressure salesmanship to raise funds, taxation for charitable purposes might be instituted. In this way, all the public would be forced to undertake their responsibilities instead of leaving it to those who are most susceptible to propaganda.

Possibly, the money saved by the reduction of publicity would not be offset by the carefree spending of bureaucratic institutions.

...For Us

At its last meeting, the Students' Administrative Council decided to hold a Feather Fair, thereby reversing last spring's decision not to have one.

One reason given for this change of attitude was the tremendous enthusiasm with which the university as a whole approached the Fair. Yet we wonder whether a different object might not have been chosen.

Not that the Community Chest Drive is unworthy of our support — it is in every way. However, there are innumerable worthy causes, and some of them less supported than the Red Feather Campaign.

Possibly, as students, our first sympathies should lie with the universities which are in urgent need of assistance. Last year's All Varsity Aid to students in South East Asia, while receiving enthusiastic support on the campus, could hardly be said to have exhausted the need.

The student's pockets are not lined with gold, indeed, we are in luck if there is a drop of silver. If it is a matter of choice, and we believe it is, the world community of students should come first.

OUR READERS WRITE

Russian Soldiers

Editor, The Varsity:

I would like to accept your invitation and discuss the visit of Soviet students to Canada. I am surprised, as much as you are, with the weak "answers" Toronto representatives gave campus Reds, which insisted to know the real reasons for their vote against the [illegible] the highest time that we discuss with the Reds the same way, using the methods, they do with us. The Peace Council episode is a very good example what an organized democracy can do.

To achieve that stage of ability to deal with Communists, we should be fully aware, first of all, of the main differences in the way of thinking of democrats and Communists. One of the fundamental doctrines of Communism is world supremacy by means of conspiracy and force of arms. This is well summed in the phrase "dictatorship of the proletariat", used by their main ideologists, from Marx and Engels to Lenin and Stalin. Without going any further, it is plain that we are poles apart, for democracy, in the very meaning of the word, is against any forms of dictatorship.

Having that in mind we should regard communists as the most dangerous enemies of our families, country and way of life. When they ARE our enemies, why not treat them as such? Why not tell them so ? Knowing what they want, they are always a step ahead of us, for we are unaware of that fact.

Reading The Varsity an outsider would think that about 50% of students on our campus are Reds, how much space their speeches occupy in the paper. That is a good example how they work. If there are even two Reds attending some students' meeting they would always take about half of the discussion time or more if we let them do so. Therefore, it is the highest time that we start to treat and regard them as A DANGEROUS MINORITY, WITH JUST SO MUCH RIGHT TO INTERFERE WITH MAJORITY'S DECISIONS.

Now, they are insisting that NFCUS brings Soviet students to visit Canada. Yet we see what is behind the story. In the Soviet Union all educational institutions are under closest control of the Party. All students are members of an organization also controlled by the Party. Whom do you think they would send to Canada? Only the most active members of the Komsomod (Communist Youth), of course. They will not come as the promoters of peace and understanding between us, but only as soldiers of the Comintern, estimating their enemies' strength, so that they can hit harder on our weak spots in the future between freedom and tyrany.

The Varsity editorials say that a big mistake was made in not asking the Soviets to come. It suggests that "we are developing the narrow thinking on issues which concern communism in any way". Was Churchill a "narrow thinker" when he kept attacking Nazis as the enemies of freedom? Is it "narrow thinking" when we think first about the security of our homes, mothers and fathers?

The war between communism and democracy is inevitable, not because we wanted that way. Yet we must face the facts and keep the enemy away from our shores.

Name withheld on request.

Soviet Students

Editor, The Varsity:

You and I and, probably the reader of this copy of The Varsity, are now concerned as to whether we should invite a group of Russian students to Canada. This is my "two cents' worth" about that problem:

NFCUS wants to bring Asian students to our university. This plan follows a policy of previous ISS actions. During the past summer Canadian students discussed Asian problems with representative young people from Pakistan and India as well as other Asian and European nations.

There is a great deal of ill-will against the British which is borne by some Asians who earnestly desire independent maturity for their native lands. All Varsity Aid, ISS, and numerous other bodies, both within and without the university, are attempting to help Asians achieve a maturity within a reasonable and friendly attitude toward the Western nations. Shouldn't those men and women who are part of the Westminster Commonwealth come to a realization of the philosophies and goals of their fellow citizens in Canada who are working for and thinking of them?

As yet little has been heard from the NFCUS officials who actually made the decision, in a democratic procedure, not to invite Russian students. . . . I, for one, would appreciate hearing their side of the case.

Again, I have not as yet heard any concrete plans for the proposed visit of Soviet students. Who will pay their expenses? When will they arrive? How long will they remain? And at what place in Caanda will they stay?

A free and informal visit of completely representative USSR students would, I expect, be of the greatest benefit to all the people of Canada and to some extent the world. If we could treat them in as unbiased a manner as possible and encourage them to think of us as friendly rather than hostile critics we would either find that these students were the restricted products of a tightly controlled society or possibly the first genuine evidence of a friendly culture which we are wrongly condemning.

An important step in the making of this crucial decision of invitation would be a double page spread in The Varsity giving reliable and thorough reporting of the views of both the NFCUS and Denis Lazure, followed by the widest and fullest discussion on this issue throughout the Toronto campus.

II Vic.

MEDS AFLOAT

The above float won the Alumnae Cup last year for the best float in the Homecoming parade. The medsmen who built the float said it was a demonstration of 2,000 years of medicine and a mobile baby-super-market. The obstetrical mass-production machine was designed to make babies with varying sex-appeal without fuss or muss so that any lady could take one home to surprise her husband.

This year the medsmen claim that their entry will again be one of the top contenders for the trophy. However the same claims have been made by Skule and other groups.

The size of the faculty entering the competition does not affect the quality of the entry. Last year Art and Archaeology received an honorable mention for their float depicting ancient Egypt. An editorial in The Varsity described this float as being in a category by itself, showing imagination and taste.

Entries this year are limited to 200 feet in length and the emphasis is being placed on quality rather than quantity. This will give the smaller groups a better chance at winning the Alumnae Cup. Last year some of the best entries were from colleges such as Emmanuel with their Pastor-izing machine or faculties such as Architecture who had five floats forming a train showing the evolution of Architecture in five stages.

It is expected that the Blue and White band will be joined by the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band as well as the Lady Godiva Memorial Band. Other bands in last year's parade were called the Dental Chompers, the UC Dragon Stompers, and the School of Music Hillbillies.

The Alumnae Cup, in past years, has been won by Forestry, Architecture, and Medicine with St. Mike's and Engineering contributing good entries last year.

Policy Of UK Tories Upheld At Vic Debate

In spite of a suggestion by a member of the Opposition that the Conservative policy consists entirely of being one hundred years behind the times, the motion before the Vic Debating Parliament last night, "Britain Needs a Conservative Government" was upheld by a 47 to 30 vote.

"The Conservative Party seeks to serve the best interest of Great Britain," Alex Langford, II Vic stated. The Opposition wondered whether the indifference to the destitute during the '30's was an example of how Britain's best interests were served, by a Conservative Government.

"Just a little bit better, but not a Utopia." Langford thus pictures Great Britain if the Conservatives should win the election. He indicated that there is a limit to government action and that a Conservative government would respect that limit.

The second speaker for the Government, G. L. Spalding, IV Vic, suggested that the Labor party is divided and that it would at best only be able to form a minority government. Spalding reviled the "timid" foreign policy of the Labor Government in the past 6 years. "Churchill is sure to present a firm (foreign) policy," he told the House.

"Never, in the history of mankind, have so many done so little for so few." In these words Spalding summarized his view of the Labor Government. The schizophrenic front benchers of the govment have failed to provide the firm leadership needed in these troubled times he went on to say.

Shirley Endicott, IV Vic, said that as the present government had "at least tried to bridge the gap" between East and West, and for this reason it was preferable to a Conservative government. She suggested that a solution to Britain's economic problems was the cessation of the cold war. The standard of living will be further depressed by a pursual of the rearmament program she said.

Bill Glenesk, III Emanuel, stated that Labor is the only alternative to the Conservative party. Faith is exemplified by works, and the Labor government has provided and will continue to provide these works. One member of the House confessed that he was so impressed by the delivery that he did not understand the context. Bureaucracy is a vital part of democratic government, he said, and we should not be afraid of it. You can only build on a preconceived plan of action, Glenesk said. The Conservative Party avowedly lacks a clear-cut policy; they serve the best interests of Great Britain "under existing circumstances," Glenesk explained.

A visiting member of the Opposition Dave Gauthier, II UC doubted that Conservative protestation of having turned over a new leaf should be taken at their face value.

Rutherford, a speaker from the floor suggested that Britain needs "a healthier world situation rather than a Conservative Government."

Don Spratt, President of the Victoria College Debating Parliament outlined the program of the body for the coming year. There will be 6 formal debates, along the line of the one held last night. Another series of impromptu debates similar to those held last year will be held. Prof. McMullen's talks on public speaking are another feature of the program. These talks will be held every Wednesday at 4:00 for the next few weeks.

MAD

A romantic moment from "The Madwoman of Chaillot" involving Robert Shirriff and Selina Whyne. This first production of the season of Hart House Theatre opens tonight at 8:30.

Come See

The basic fundamentals of Journalism will be the subject of a series of lectures by the Masthead staff of The Varsity again this fall. This series will start today, Tuesday, Oct. 23, and it will deal with Newswriting, as will the one on Thursday. There will also be two other lectures, one on make-up, and one on reviewing. All these lectures will be held at 1:00 p.m. in Room II of U.C. Students interested in doing any newswriting on The Varsity are welcome to come and see or be seen.

Panel Discussion UN Day Feature

Highlighting a United Nations Day program on Wednesday the 24th, the campus U.N. club will hold its first panel discussion meeting at Cartwright Hall at 4:15 p.m. Mr. Vincent Price, national head of the United Nations Association will welcome the club on behalf of the national group.

Speaking on the topic, "The Founding of the State of Israel is the Cause of Current Unrest in the Middle East", Vicki Sher, III U.C., Vice-President of Hillel will oppose the statement supported by a speaker familiar with the situation in Israel.

Professor Das from Pakistan will develop some of the background necessary to an understanding of present day conflict. Jim Peters, Ontario College of Education, will speak in support of the statement. Participation from the floor will be directed to the panel.

Announcing a new program of realistic study of the UN at work, Roland de Corneille, II Divinity Trin. said last night that the activities of the club would be centred around two model Security Council meetings scheduled for December 6 and February 14.

As a build-up to these meetings students representing national states will thrash out an actual problem in four meetings to prepare for the public debate. At the first meeting a competent speaker will outline the problem. Three subsequent meetings will be held so that groups which have elected to study a particular member nation and its viewpoint can prepare the case of that nation. The countries selected to compose the first council will be Great Britain, Soviet Russia, United States, France, Nationalist China, Canada, Israel, India, Australia, one Latin American country, one Arab country and the Ukraine.

The question of admission of Communist China as a member of the United Nations has been selected as the problem to be dealt with at the first meeting. Stressing the importance of trying to really present the various national points-of-view de Corneille said that it was by appreciating the facts as others saw them students could get a much better grasp of the difficulty and importance of attempts at international co-operation. The club, he said will welcome students who want to join a group studying a country. There will be a chance for some to sit on the council and present the view of the group with others acting as alternates and staff members.

Wednesday marks the sixth birthday of the United Nations since the signing of the charter at San Francisco. The campus will join the Toronto United Nations Association in observing this important landmark in human affairs at the meeting.

Tweepers — An Artsman ?

What are tweepers? This question mystified the campus yesterday as varsity students were considering their opinions.

Comments ranged from "Haven't got a clue" to "Good lord! Tweepers?!" One engineer asked "Couldn't be an artsman, could it?"

Another puzzled student said that the question had been bugging him ever since he first heard about it. He finally decided that it was a pennant on a cane.

One of the students polled said that he was polled last year regarding bloops and is equally puzzled this year about tweepers.

Other guessts hit upon electrical gadgets which made noises like a bird, round caps for square heads, buttons with ribbons attached, hats with spinners, neckties, to a pair of twin elephants.

Criticism Of Housing From CCF

"We're getting the run-around and buck-passing from little people in high places," said Gordon Milling at a meeting of the Campus CCF Club yesterday. He was speaking about the "refusal of both the Conservative government at Queen's Park and the Liberal Government at Ottawa to take responsibility for deplorable lack of low cost housing facilities."

Milling, one-time Prime Minister of the U. of T. Mock Parliament, is now secretary of the "Joint-Labor Committee to Combat Racial Intolerance". He discussed the unfriendly attitude with which recent immigrants have been faced. He pointed out that they are frequently blamed for the housing shortage. "When people become confused by buck-passing in official circles," he stated, "they have a tendency to lay the blame on other groups in the community. This perpetuates racial and religious misunderstanding."

Milling went on to say that the CCF had a consistent record of demanding a comprehensive planning of national industrial potential to avoid the economic disaster which, he stated, he had experienced under both the Liberal and Conservative governments in the '30's.

"It Was Great!"

Kingston (Special) — A stocky man in black and silver robes of office got up to deliver an address last Friday and a mass of students, seated in the gallery, roared out a college cheer. A whistle shrilled, bells clanged, paper scraps and streamers were tossed down on the assembly below and two pigeons were loosed to flutter around the hall.

Queen's University students were welcoming their new principal in traditional college fashion that caused the distinguished assembly to look up in alarm at the sudden disruption of an otherwise staid and formal ceremony.

Said the new principal, who is former Dean of Arts, of the demonstration; "It was great!"

Representatives of 31 Canadian and 12 American universities as well as important public figures attended the ceremony. Twelve honorary degrees were awarded.

Dr. Mackintosh is the first Queen's graduate and member of the teaching staff to take charge of the university. An economic expert, he served as deputy minister of finance during World War II and was also a member of the delegation to the Bretton Woods conference. Last summer he was appointed government mediator in the railway strike.

"A university is or should be," Dr. Mackintosh said in his inaugural address, "a society of scholars devoted to education of the young and to the preservation and extension of human knowledge." He also stressed that Queen's could be made or destroyed by any principal.

"Queen's is a living thing in which the principal is prominent, visible, too frequently audible but not an absolutely vital organ," he said.

The new 1951 edition of the Canada Year Book has now been authorized for distribution and release.

This book has long proved invaluable to all thinking Canadians, comprising as it does all vital statistics in every branch of our National life. This year's edition has proved worthy of the reputation set by its predecessors, although the task of consolidating the data of a nation increases in difficulty with the growth and expansion of a nation.

Paper-bound copies are available at $1.50 to teachers, university students and ministers of religion from the Bureau mentioned above. Cloth bound copies: $3.00.

The Year Book is recognized by thousands of Canadians in office, library, classroom and home as an invaluable source of authentic information regarding the national economy and the people's welfare.

CUP... Parking Problem

A broken leg is not a pleasant thing, but it will get you a student parking permit at McGill.

In an interview today, Mr. Ralph A. Shackell, secretary-treasurer of the Students' Society, stated that priority for student parking permits were given to those with compassionate reasons. These included broken legs and bad hearts.

Until last year there was no student parking on the campus. This year, parking space has been provided for 25 students in the parking ground at the corner of University and Milton streets. There were eighty applications and of these seven permits were for compassionate reasons; the remainder were granted on the basis of the distance which students live from the university.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

This is the second of a series of pictures on different eating places on the campus. Here we see a picture of students in Hart House at a noon meal. Unlike the Co-op, the student who eats in Hart House must carry all his dinner to the table on a tray when he buys it, and take it off the tray there. Meals are served in periods of from an hour to an hour and a half, and in the course of a day up to 3,000 meals are served. This the Great Hall and must be distinguished from the Lunch Room, and the Tuck Shop which are also in Hart House.

Just 'Canada' For NFCUS

Student leaders seem unsure of whether they live in the Dominion of Canada or simply in Canada.

In a commission meeting at NFCUS' London, Ont., conference, someone moved that "the Dominion of Canada" on NFCUS documents be changed to conform with Federal Government practice.

The vote: four for, one against, five abstentions. The University of Toronto cast the lone negative vote.

Music Review

Violin . . .

Arthur Garami, violinist, was the soloist last Sunday in the first of the Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts. The program consisted of a sonata by Vivaldi, the violin sonata by Debussy, and a group of display pieces, included in the concert for the time-honored purpose of allowing the violinist to show off his double-stopping, his spiccato, his harmonics, and similar achievements.

By and large, this last group was the most satisfying of the concert. For it cannot be denied that Mr. Garami gets around his notes pretty handily. Three little pieces by Dohnanyi called "Ruralia Hungarica" (the last bearing a startling resemblance to "Weel may the keel row") made a bright finish for the concert, and Mr. Garami played them with all the flashiness and fire usually associated with Hungarian music. A transcription of the nocture in C sharp minor by Chopin showed his tone to good advantage. And two caprices by Paganini showed that Mr. Garami is capable of accurate, melodious double-stopping. Hart House audiences are perhaps accustomed to things of greater intrinsic musical worth, but virtuosity is pleasant to listen to, even if it is directed to no other end than gathering applause for the artist.

Certain unfortunate habits in Mr. Garami's playing, however, made themselves evident in more serious music on the progr For instance, he has a tendency accelerate in difficult passa While this fault does not ma much in display pieces, in Viva sonatas it emphatically does large part of their charm depe on a rigid adherence to the te of each movement. Mr. Garami seemed to have trouble with intonation in these passages; at rate, a slight discrepancy in pi between the piano and the vi would creep in as the music came more difficult.

The Debussy sonata is the co poser's last work, and generally garded below his usual standa Consequently Mr. Garami's rea for choosing it as the major wo on his first Hart House concert not very obvious. The performa was technically better than that the Vivaldi, but rather too for right for Debussy. Debussy's mu is suggestive rather than eloque and one cannot force it to things directly.

A word of praise should be add for the indefatigable Leo Bark Mr. Barkin gives equally unde standing and sympathetic supp to all manner of solo performe His assurance and his unfalter playing of accompaniments som times every bit as difficult as solo part must be an inspiration soloists.

. . . Piano

Friedrich Gulda did not come close to selling out Massey Hall last Thursday, but we should be very surprised if there were many empty seats when he comes back a second time. A young, and as yet a little known pianist, he took the audience and set them applauding as Toronto audiences seldom do.

His advance notices constantly coupled his name with Horowitz's, and somehow led one to expect a pianist of similar talents. His resemblance, however is only the behavior of the audience — his style of playing is altogether different. Horowitz concentrates on hard, brilliant tone, with very sparing use of the pedal. Gulda, on the other hand, is a master of legato playing. He makes more liberal use of the pedal, and (perhaps at the expense of clarity) achieves a wonderful singing tone on an essentially percussive instrument. In view of the fact that many composers for the piano, including Bach, Mozart and Chopin, considered this paradoxical achievement the principal requirement for good pianoplaying, Mr. Gulda is well qualified as an interpreter of the classics.

Mr. Gulda's program consisted of only three works: Sonata No. 34 by Haydn, Sonata Opus 110 by Beethoven and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition". In the Haydn, particularly in the first movement, the rather heavy pedalling tended to blur some of the runs, but the performance made up in rhythmic vivacity what it lacked in crispness.

Mr. Gulda came into his own with the Beethoven. The Opus 110 Sonata seems particularly well suited to his talents. Unlike many of Beethoven's late sonatas, it is a melodious piece, and his ability to make the piano "sing", especially in the tranquil first and third movements, inparted a glow to the performance. The last movement is a fugue with a long interjected reference to the third movement, and Mr. Gulda succeeded in bringing out the melodies of the inner parts to an astonishing degree. Beethoven's rather rough and ready counterpoint was turned into a living, almost vocal sort of music.

Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" is much more frequently heard in an orchestral transcription than in the original pianoforte version. But Mr. Gulda gave convincing evidence that the original can be far more exciting than the transcription. Unfortunately the management did not see fit to supply the audience with a list of the pictures that Moussorgsky had in mind when he composed the work. It was therefore all the more remarkable how cleverly Mr. Gulda portrayed the viewer as he wandered through the gallery, noting his impressions of the various eastern scenes of splendor, mystery, and violence. The intensely pictorial quality of the music made up for the lack of definite titles for the pictures. Mr. Gulda and the audience seemed equally carried away by it, and the performance was of a technical brilliance that left one gasping.

Finally, Mr. Gulda deserves special praise fr his courage in making his program exclusively one of longer and more serious works. He is an artist who is sure of himself and in a good position to demonstrate that Toronto audiences can be just as enthusiastic about good music as about mediocre, if it is well played.

...Organ

Yesterday, before an unusually large group, Dr. Healey-Willan played the organ. The opening selection was the Sonata No. 4 by Josef Rheinberger, of which the second movement — Intermezzo — was in the exquisite class—a deftly outlined pastoral - like number, which was beautifully played, except for minor irregularities in tempo. However, the outside movements suffered — the first from a rather rhapsodic treatment which obscured the outlines of the opening theme, and the last — fuga chromatica — from erratic tempo and excess foundation tone, although the enunciation was well-defined tonally and rhythmically.

Of the two Chorale-Preludes by the artist, the first was performed with an incisiveness and contrast in registration which made it a joy, and seemed to indicate Dr. Willan's flair for music of a quiet, introspective nature, while the second seemed to suffer from the nebulousness of outline that marred the Sonata.

Dr. Willan then revived three small works by early 18th century composers: Prelude by Clerambault, Gavotte by Kirnberger, and Grand Jeu by du Mage, of which the Prelude was in the delicate style that marked Dr. Willan's forte, while the others were inconsequential.

The concluding number was THE Toccata and Fugue in D Minor by J. S. Bach. The Toccata had its moments, notably the allegro, but these were linked by episodes of no discernible character. The fugue began bravely but suffered a setback at the pedal entry, and from this point lost all clarity and form.

As judged by this recital, Dr. Willan's style is admirably suited to pieces of an intimate character, but fails when he attempts numbers of grandiose proportions.

Alcutt Opens Record Hour

The opening program of the Carnegie Record Collection yesterday featured as guest speaker the head of the Mechanical Engineering Department, Professor E. A. Alcutt.

Prof. Alcutt illustrated his talk on Musical Parodies with selections from Gilbert and Sullivan which parody certain excerpts from Il Trovatore and Lucia di Lammermoor.

At the record hours which are held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of each week from five to six p.m., students from all years of many different courses gather together in the Faculty Common Room in the New Mechanical Building with one aim — to listen to music. The large selection of records includes music to suit all tastes and a special request book is always available for those desiring to hear personal favorites.

ADULT EDUCATION

Pioneering Profs.

A few months ago a psychologist, a psychiatrist, a psychoanalyst, an athropologist, a philosopher, and a sociologist, all from the University of Toronto got together for dinner at the Chez Paree. During the course of the meal the conversation stemmed upon adult education, and the lack of it here in Toronto.

"Each of us contributed one cent, to start the ball rolling," explained Dr. E. S. Carpenter in talking about the inconspicuous origin of the Toronto School of Social Studies of which he is secretary - treasurer. This school is now embarked upon a lecture series presented as "An Adventure in Adult Education" under the general title of "A social-Philosophy for Modern Man".

The Toronto School of Social Studies is a pioneer in the field of adult education here in Toronto.

"Toronto is one of the few large cities in America where they do not have this," Dr. Carpenter went on. "Our aim is to reach wide audiences on a mature level."

Dr. Carpenter stressed the fact that the audience was treated as an adult one, and was not "spoon-fed". The series of ten lectures given during the fall term are entitled "Culture and Personality". They are presented every Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. in the Unitarian Church, 175 St. Clair Ave. (just west of Avenue Road) by leading men in the field of social science here in Toronto, and in the world.

Three of these lectures have already been presented. On Oct. 23 Professor R. A. Sim will speak on "Individual Problems in Social Change". There is an admission charge of fifty-cents a lecture. However, the organization is a non-profit one, and the money collected is used to bring in outside speakers. Dr. Carpenter expressed the hope that Eric Fromm, author of "Escape from Freedom", who is now in Mexico, would be one of these.

The seven founders of the school have been amazed and overwhelmed by the response to the lectures from the general public, for their project has received a minimum of advertising. Dr. Carpenter believed that many university students would find the lectures valuable, for they would get up-to-the-date information on fields which could not be covered in classroom lectures.

By way of example he cited Professor J. R. Seeley's lecture on "The Authoritarian Personality" to be given on Nov. 13. The topic will be discussed in terms of the people of Toronto, he said. He expressed the hope that the CBC would broadcast the lectures over their network next year, and was enthusiastic over the school's future.

"It's comparable to the new school of Social Research in New York," he went on, "for it started the same way about 25 years ago.

The second series to be given during the winter will deal with the nature of society, entitled "Social Institutions and the Individual". On the staff are Professor G. Gordon Brown, who is the chairman, Elizabeth Brown, Professor John A. Irving, Rev. William P. Jenkins, and Professors John R. Seeley, R. Alexander Sims, and Edmund S. Carpenter.

VIC'S CORNER

Here we are again at Tuesday . . . they sure roll around fast. Here we go.—

Music Club chorus turnouts have been gratifying in numbers and in talent. However there is, as usual, a noticeable paucity of males. This year we are especially short of basses; for a change, and, to be precise, here are our requirements: ONE good tenor. FIVE strong basses.

Anyone even the slightest bit interested should turn out on the soonest possible practice night . . . Mondays and Wednesdays, 7:30 p.m , in ALUMNI HALL. If the men could see the gorgeous crowd of sisters, cousins and aunts we've got lined up for Sir Joseph Porter, they would have no hesitations about trying out! !

The Glee Club too is looking for men. President Alex McPherson says he doesn't want to turn it into a girls' chorus!

Prof. McMullen will give the second of his series of talks on "How To Speak In Public" on Wed., Oct. 24th., Room 18 in Vic. He will EMPHASIZE the use of ACTIONS when speaking.

Tickets for BOB REVUE go on sale WEDNESDAY in Alumni Hall 9:45-2:15 at $1.25 and every day thereafter till complete sell-out. Hoping for: 1st nite—Soph-Frosh: 3rd nite—50 and 51 grads. Those who got the redeemable coupons can pick up their tickets any day of the sale (1st day preferably for you) by presenting the acupon. BILL "PINHEAD" ANGUS says that orders for Vic. pins will be taken in Alumni Hall every morning this week. A small deposit of $1.00 is required to ensure delivery of the orders. SGLIRPB—alias Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band under the capable conductorship of PLUNGER CATTO and with such well-known toodlers from the Varsity Band as McIntosh, Cook and Parr—our band is almost ready to roll. Now the important thing to remember is that after the Stadium Show this Fri. there is to be a dance—SGLIRPB BENEFIT DANCE—at Burwash through which we hope to raise enough funds to buy such things as a bass drum and snares which we can't borrow this year. So let's all make a note of this—we have our cheerleaders there as hostesses—and come along with or without that girl and support our SGLIRPB. Speaking of the Stadium Show—they are using such illustrious Vic. grads as JACK MERIGOLD, DAVE GARDNER, MARY KERR as well as Koughan's Vocal Group with our own GEORGE McCOWAN as co-director with BEN WISE—should be terrific. . . . The Vic. entry for Saturday's Float Parade is in the process of being erected . . . Keith Stoner and his 3rd year exec. aren't giving out with any info so we expect something really spectacular. . . . On the subject of College Spirit we think VIC. students are really falling down this year—especially at football games. There is a game tomorrow against the Medsmen—let's get out there behind our team and our cheerleaders -especially our cheerleaders—they look good from behind too.

GATHLETICS—Vic girls looked very sharp in their new shorts as they started off the basketball season last week. Incidentally they won their games too. Vic I softball teams are in a losing streak but they might snatch a play-off yet. Vic II have clinched first place in their league with no losses to date. Too bad Vic. Tennis girls didn't make the Varsity team—but there always is next year. The bowling list is still up—so sign your name while you can. Does your wrist really hurt, BARB?

MATHLETICS — The Vic Football Machine is once more on its way towards the Mulock Cup—they defeated the high spirited UC team 12-5 last week and are looking very good in practices. Our stalwart track and harrier man walked off with the Junior Harrieh, last Sat. at High Park. Congrats, fellows! Still looking for men to play soccer and volleyball and anyone interested in swimming see the Athletic Bulletin Board.

MISS MURRAY SAYS that she was on the Little Vic Field at 4:00 on Fri. to see the annual Bob Apple Battle but all she saw was a pole, a ladder, a football team and PRINCIPAL BENNETT—what has happened to our glorious traditions? . . . that it's getting hard to get a date for the "Dame of Romance" . . . that Doc Love should wear a disguise when he goes to see the gals at Tate House; otherwise Mrs. Love might object to the Student Faculty Relations Comm. the . . . that JOHN "LOONEY" LEWIS should have hired a bodyguard for initiation last Thursday night—she missed him next day at the BAB . . . that she's glad to see Charlie "THE PLUNGER" CATTO back to conduct SGLIRPB in its symphonic presentations . . . that MOOSE "THE MESS" HAMES has invited her to a tea party after the Queen's game Sat. with just the two of them and his folks. . . . She also says that Vic students sit too long over one cup of coffee.

Coeds Must Use Side Door New Regulation At McGill

Montreal — (CUP)—What's the matter with old McGill? Well, all that seems to be bothering Canada's second university is a ruling that men must enter the Arts building by the main front door, while the coeds have been delegated to using the side door and the side door only. This issue has stirred rumblings from various sources that have been echoed for the past couple of weeks in the McGill Daily, the undergraduate newspaper. Reason for the move seems to be overcrowding at the main entrance.

What do the students think about it? As may be expected most of the comment comes from the coeds.

"A great wrong has been done the women of McGill," one third year coed exclaimed in a letter to the McGill Daily. "Women have been pushed around at McGill—the women's union was pushed into the basement of Royal Victoria College (coed residence); the women had to fight for years to get into the Student Union—and now women are being pushed in the side door of the Arts building. The present system is not only inconvenient, it is downright anti-social. Imagine the chagrin of a poor girl who has finally contrived to get the Man to walk to lectures with her, only to have to leave him on the steps of the Arts building . . . It means changing long-standing habits. I was caught up by the watchman four times in one day."

Another complained that the effect on the social life of the students will be disastrous or even catastrophic. From questioning several students, he came up with such comments as: "It divides the students and makes you conscious of your sex."

Some of the coeds have taken matters into their own hands. Some say they have to mail a letter to get in the main door while others have decided that the sign "Men's Entrance" says nothing about exit and so out they come, undaunted.

Since the complaint that caused the ruling was congestion at the main door, the inevitable has occurred at the side door, insists another third year coed. "Have you ever seen several hundred women trying to use one small entrance," she demands. "They all stop to talk to their friends and the congestion in the doorway becomes worse than it ever was at the main door ... Any coed who tries to get into the Arts building with the congesion and cross-traffic, under the new arrangement is practically taking her life in her hands."

Solutions to the problem have been the second most popular topic of conversation on the campus. The first are the complaints about the ruling, of course. One person suggested that freshmen be made to use the side door while another said one door could be used as an entrance while the other two are used as exits.

The coeds might also take up the offer advanced by the ever alert engineers. Noting that no ruling applied at the Engineering building as at the Arts, they, (being broad-minded, they! said), welcome all coeds to loiter on the sunny steps of their edifice.

Aukie Prof: Freshmen Challenged

The challenge of Christianity was put before Freshmen last Sunday by Professor Blaiklock, head of the Classics Department at the University of Auckland New Zealand. Members of the Varsity Christian Fellowship and their friends heard this Freshman sermon at Wycliffe College Chapel.

Professor Blaiklock drew a surprising analogy between the position of the first year student and that of Pontius Pilate at the trial of Jesus Christ. When Pontius Pilate directed the trial, he himself was being tested as a Roman governor and judge.

Professor Blaiklock said that Pilate had failed to meet this crisis in his life because he was weighted down with three heavy burdens, the compromises of his post, of his career, and of his associates.

"Similarly," said Professor Blaiklock, "a student in his first year must meet such a crisis. Christianity challenges him to make a decision and to override his compromises."

On Monday afternoon, Professor Blaiklock spoke to the students individually at Emmanuel College and later addressed the VCF at University College.

The athletic association in Hart House has taken over the responsibilities of an indirect ticket agency. This is the result of their having offered to sell a number of tickets on behalf of Maple Leaf Gardens for the basketball game tonight with the Harlem Globe Trotters. This is only an added convenience to the students, said J. P. Loosemore, financial secretary of the Hart House Athletic Association. There are still 50 tickets, which will be on sale today in the athletic office. The game tonight is between the Toronto Mercury's and the Harlem Globe Trotters, who have put on impressive exhibitions of basketball all over the world.

TRAVELOGUE

Bloops Abroad

Bloops(born a year ago, have become part of an All-Varsity wardrobe today. The nice thing about them is that they can be worn anywhere, with any color scheme, and on anyone without appearing unconventional.

For example take the story of this bloop, which was a bloop like any other bloop in the SAC Treasury Office until it got an owner. Then it began to get around to football games and dances and such things. During the winter it hibernated in moth-balls until the sun came out again. So the Bloop went out into the backyard along with a lawn chair and a sheaf of exam papers.

In the summer the Bloop went fishing, motoring, boating in all types of weather. It could be thrown into an overnight case or crumbled into a pocket. By the time autumn came it was a bit drab but still practical.

The Bloop hit the big time when it went abroad on Thanksgiving to Chicago. Last minute thought had seen it thrown into the suitcase. It came out again at midnight under the eyes of a custom officer at the American border. During the remainder of the trip it lay cocked over a forehead to dim the bus lights. Transport drivers shared a private joke among themselves at its expense when the Bloop had breakfast at a wayside inn at five in the morning.

The Bloop made Bloop history when it appeared on television at a Chicago studio, which is a Good Thing as far as Bloops go.

But Chicago was cold, wet and windy so the Bloop, aside from TV performances, stayed [illegible] to help along the Toni. From the way Chicago followed the Bloop with its eyes, it was evident that the local campi had nothing to offer alongside of it.

The city itself is far from the grim one painted by Roarin' Twenties press. Admittedly there are a few relics from Al Capone's time lingering about, but the commercial and educational aspects of Chicago outweigh them.

The University of Chicago campus is big and beautiful with many of the buildings built in a style reminiscent of Hart House. Fraternity houses occupy former mansions whose elaborate architecture belongs to the Victorian hey-day. You learn that Chicago is one of the great universities of the land, and the site of atomic research.

In the tremendous Museum of Science and Industry, second in the world only to the one at Berlin, the one disconcerting remark of the journey was hurtled at the Bloop by a group of College-looking types who said, "Oh horrors!"

Otherwise the Bloop did get quite a bit of support from other quarters. A Bowery-looking character in a greasy side street restaurant said "I like that hat". The American Navy abroad in the streets said "Howse about it?"

The one disadvantage of a Bloop appeared to be the difficulty of convincing anyone that its owner was a responsible citizen of the land.

So to get to the point finally. The Bloop is an all-round, all-weather sort of a thing. So get yours at the next home game from the girls on duty at the turnstiles.

Beginning Of Wisdom?

E END OF THE AFFAIR" by Graham Greene, British Book Service, $2.50.

So many wrongs were at last committed in the name of the good. Those among us who had thought literary exposition of the relation of art and belief had had long to ease this longing with the urbane nothings of Birrell or Lucas, the paradoxes, athletic and jocular of Chesterton, the ingenuities of Knox, or (last and most grievous wrong) the easy obscenities of Waugh in work like "The Loved One" or "Campion". We believers might find graceful dignity in writing only in Mauriac or Britain, Bernanos or Bloy, and these men after all, were writing in another language. Not since Newman had English been written easily and artfully with the end in view of elucidating the grounds for acquiescence, the effects of faith.

Now after these many days, a writer has appeared who can speak of sacrament as though it is not an archaism and of belief as though it is neither neurotic nor intellectual curiosity. This writer is Graham Greene.

His new book is the story of a saint: the damnable and wonderful thing about it is that no apology is required by that statement. Sarah Miles is here both despairingly human and a worker of miracles. She leaves the impress of her unalised love upon the hating fearful creature who tells her story — the novelist, Maurice Bendrix — upon her husband whom she rises from his lifelong insignificance, upon a discarded lover whose physical blemishes disappear because of her beneficent influence after her death, and upon a child who suffers as she does but never has much to do with her in the course of the narrative. Sarah is blessed, yet her saintliness doesn't repel one.

Bendrix and Sarah had been lovers. They had parted and two years later Bendrix had met her husband in a chance walk. The husband has come to suspect Sarah of present infidelity and confides in Bendrix. Consumed by jealousy and hate, the latter sets himself to hunt his late love down in her new debasement. He finds her intimate with a professional rationalist whose wholly irrational fight against an upside-down God has infected Sarah with belief — this quite against her will. In the course of the investigation he finds too that she has really loved him, Bendrix, all the while. He flies to reunite himself with her but is too late. She has contracted a lung infection analagous to the psychical infection which gives her physical death just as she finally finds, in spite of herself, the Being whom she had desired to love so long.

Bendrix of course (the creative writer, the artist) has been an adumbration of this conclusion, and the chief of the three miracles which occur after Sarah's death is the final acquiescence of this cankered hateful man in belief in the Being whose name is Love.

This is the end of the affair and yet there remain several questions which the book can only answer in its effect and not by an explicit message. How can this novelist hope to depict the delicacy of intention lingering in the depths of the secret heart which even his perception cannot bring to light? He cannot ever know the exact motives which determine salvation or damnation. He is not God. Yet there remains a means by which these states can be rendered believably. This is explicitly given in the text when Greene makes Bendrix say that he manages to give his characters life by exposing them in some extreme action. By their uniquely attractive or repellent fruits, ye shall know them.

Sarah and Maurice are consequently figured repeatedly in the extreme situation of the physical act of love which shadows forth the later ultimate union. This is an old technique; but nowhere has it been so explicitely stated that the consideration of intention, act, and circumstances, proper to ethical studies, the second and third aspects of the matter are the only ones really clear to us. (The heart of the matter was Scobie's sacrilegious act.) The "psychological" studies of Dostoievsky, regarded in this light, are studies of fevered hurried and extreme action. We know Rassolnikov by the murder and confession, and not by the analysis of his motives.

Psychology is not enough, unless one is Divine. But the representation of actions almost always leads beyond art into moral science. Is the organic fusion of judgment about good and evil with artistic form, really possible? This is one of those recurring matters which give the semioticians pause. But if one can find examples where morality becomes vibrant with artistic clarity, becomes, indeed, art, then the question is superfluous. I am aware of the petitio principii here. But look at "Comus" or the last act of "Othello". As a matter of fact, you could do worse than look at "The End of the Affair"; and that is what I have been suggesting.

Hugh Hood.

Ave Atque Vale

With F. Scott Fitzgerald's desperately gay little flapper high-stepping the Charleston somewhere in the back of our minds, we were wondering the other day if the times are responsible for creating a certain type of woman who later becomes a literary convention, or if the type hits the bookstands first, the product of some dissastisfied writer's imagination, and is then taken up by the times. We came to the conclusion that the literary portrayal generally was created out of something that existed beforehand, and that if a New Woman emerged in literature you could be pretty sure you'd met her at a party the week before.

Furthermore, with Fitzgerald's flapper as our point of departure, we began to wonder who her successors were, and, scanning the thirties and early forties, it wasn't difficult to stipulate what the qualifications for Daisy Buchanans' successor would be, namely a political consciousness and a propensity to confuse love with politics. This type emerged in literature as "Maria" in For Whom the Bell Tolls and as "Laura" in Katherine Ann Porter's Flowering Judas, to give two of the best examples.

Arriving at our own times, we went prowling in search of the New Woman of the fifties. Mind you we may be living under a false assumption and it's quite possible that there's no such animal, but the first two books that caught our eye were novels which put the leading female characer under very close scrutiny. We refer to Alberto Moravia's Conjugal Love and William Sansome's Face of Innocence.

In both these novels we are presented with thin, medium-tall, fair-haired damsels who both have an idiosyncrasy which puzzles their husbands. One of them slips off into trances, "moments when her strange eyes lose their presence and seem to dream," while the other is subject to a facial contortion which manifests itself at the oddest moments and is completely out of keeping with her character. Merging the narrator and the husband in Face of Innocence into one person as Moravia does in Conjugal Love, the two husbands go through a similar experience of discovering a sexual maladjustment in the lives of their wives, for which they, we think, are responsible. Both wives commit an act of infidelity with members of the lower orders, the one with a mechanic and the other with a barber, which both husbands witness.

This brings us to a point which will doubtless be contested by many, but one which we will nevertheless venture to make. We would like to suggest that in a highly geared society the female finds it much more difficult to adjust than the male, and that the mysterious quality which intrigues the bloodless, reasonable male of modern society in a woman such as Leda of Conjugal Love and Eve in Face of Innocence is a product of the sexual maladjustment which is responsible for their fascinating neuroticisms. One of Eve's most persistent expostulations is "that if she had her way all the white civilizers would be returned to their own countries, or drowned and the simple, natural natives allowed to go their own simple, natural ways. . . ."

The husbands soon realize that they have played a very passive and inglorious role. One of them had stopped making love to his wife because he wanted to save himself for his work, and the other was too busy playing bowls to even know where his wife was most of the time. It is no wonder that neither of them openly confront their wives with their infidelity when they discover what has been going on. Instead they continue to love their wives even more than before and we would like to suggest here that it is just such husbands who are responsible for the New Woman and her moments of inscrutable mysticism. Unable to satisfy her themseles because of the demands of a profession, they become puzzled with that very aspect of their wife's personality which they, of all people, should understand. About this point you probably think we're screwy whilst we only continue to get more and more evidence which justifies our stand. We even asked our brother what kind of girl he was going to marry and he said, "the one he was sure he would never quite understand." And certainly if he's a Signor Baldchesi or a Harry, he never will, to her perpetual frustration.

Westerner's First Novel

The Provincials by John Cornish, published by George J. McLeod, 1951. $4.00.

Although The Provincials hit the bookstands early this summer and can hardly be classed as a new book, we think it deserves some sort of attention of this page for several reasons. First of all, the author, John Cornish, is a former editor of the Ubyssey and quite candidly admits that he is indebted to his experience on an undergraduate newspaper for his present success as a novelist. "That," says Mr. Cornish, "is where I learned how not to write." (All aspiring novellists please take note: THE VARSITY NEEDS YOU!)

Secondly, just as a matter of local interest, Mr. Cornish wrote The Provincials in the Toronto Public Library Reference Room over a period of eighteen months. Although Mr. Cornish claims that his book is not autobiographical, he says that it is not pure fiction either. Which brings us down to a third, and probably the best reason for bringing the matter up, namely the novel itself.

The Provincials is the story of a wealthy B.C. lumber magnate and his large family of six children as seen by a friend of the family, who eventually marries the only daughter, Bunty. While reading The Provincials we were continually impressed with the way in which Mr. Cornish stayed within the bounds of his own experience without ever dropping the butterfly-net of self-pity quietly down upon us when we weren't looking. In the narrator of the story, Kenneth Menzies, we feel that Mr. Cornish has given of himself when there was a chance, but never to the extent that the Dunsieth family is overshadowed.

And it is here that Mr. Cornish's maturity becomes evident, for the Dunsieth family is alive. Without any subtle analysis of personalities or superior condescension Mr. Cornish gives them to us "straight" on the strength of their actions and conversations. This is perhaps the easiest way to write a novel, but a method well handled by Mr. Cornish, and we have nothing but praise for his genuineness and lack of pretension.

To the left of this picture of John Cornish, who is a former editor of The Ubyssey and an army veteran, is the review of his first novel, The Provincials. Cornish first became interested in writing while an undergraduate at the University of British Columbia.

Marchbanks Regurgitated

TEMPEST-TOST, by Robertson Davies, Clark Irwin, 376 pp., $3.00.

The Beard of Peterborough has emitted a first novel. It seems like a high event in the development of Canadian culture. So we Canadian culture advocates are all clucking about it. Tempest-Tost is worth a few clucks.

The little gnome who sits on a high stool in the publishers' office and writes the blurbs on the dust jackets, suggests that "only in the most technical sense" is Tempest-Tost a first new novel. And the little gnome has a good case. We are not wrenched suddenly into a new world of a new writer. We are still in the same happy if sometimes grumpy world of Samuel Marchbanks. That is, for most of the book.

Tempest-Tost is concerned with the production of "The Tempest" by the Salterton Little Theatre group. Salterton is the mythical Ontario town of Kingston and gives lots of room for Marchbanks to make his urbane Furnace-fed comments on small Ontario towns, their externals and internals.

The cast of characters is a motley crew. We first chance upon Fredegonde Webster, fourteen years, who is not sure whether her destiny lies in a nunnery or a winery. There are other supporting players like the culture vulture matron Nellie Forrester who is The Little Theatre, Vambrace the Professor who doubles as a ham, Valentine Rich as the professional come home who directs the production, Solly Bridgewater who has been around and still feels the curb of the maternal bridal, and an anarchistic organist, Humphrey Cobbler, who is at ease with the world.

The hero, so to speak, is stage-struck maths teacher Hector Macilwraith who has a hard time all the way through. He gets the part of Gonzalo, but otherwise his dreams and illusions are swept away into a dark abyss of frustration and horrid imaginings. His September love for Griselda, the blonde fairy queen sister of the Fermenter Fredegonde, goes bloole. His plunge into the world of romance, feet first, is a dismal flop. Not only that, Bill Glenesk would probably have dismissed his Gonzalo with a sweeping bit of damaging rhetoric.

Be that as it may, Tempest-Tost is great fun for the first two-thirds. Things seem to be promising to happen, and with a polished Marchbanks leavening, everyone is having a good time. And then comes the climax on the actual first night of the Salterton Little Theatre production of "The Tempest". But it isn't a climax at all. An attempted but inept suicide in between acts seems very melodramatic and truly un-Canadian.

Tempest-Tost is for followers of Samuel Marchbanks; there is a sumptuous offering of Table-talk here. But as a novel, Tempest-Tost disappoints. Fredegonde Webster who promises to be so much, disappears into the background after an appealing introduction. The whole Little Theatre seems to follow her example.

There must be some important symbolism in this work. A book auction is thrown rather bodily into the narrative at one point. Possessive mothers linger heavily in the lives of more than one character. And all ends in cloud of

Mechanical Doll

Once in a long while a reviewer discovers a book full of innumerable faults but so compelling in plot, conception or style it would be grossly unfair to review it badly. "The Loneliest Girl in the World," Kenneth Fearing's strange successor to "The Big Clock" is distinguished by its plot, which concerns Ellen Vaughan, the unworldly daughter of a deceased acoustics-wizard-cum-millionaire. Adrian Vaughan was the possessor of an immense library of wire recordings—correspondence, family records, music and curiosities, amounting to over 500,000 hours of playing time. After Vaughan's death Ellen discovers that Vaughan Electronics' chief rival, National Sound, has claimed ownership of all Vaughan's assets, including Mikki, the wire-band library. It is obvious that Mikki contains some clue or verbal agreement vital to National's safety.

Something of a recluse, Ellen is hurt by their crude attempts to gain her good-will and refuses them the use of Mikki. Then she starts to go through the recordings herself to find the crucial reel of wire. In the course of her search she discovers a number of frightening things—snatches of conversation, tapped and recorded phone calls hinting at a formidable quarrel between Vaughan and the eldest son who died with him. Each of the novel's chapters is constructed as the thoughts of one of the characters.

Despite its many faults—over-writing, anachronism, a style alternately taut and fuzzy, the book is fascinating. In the last analysis it is always the impression a novel of suspense creates which governs its reception. In one chapter, Ellen's lawyer is forced to conduct a conversation with Mikki, and picture of the elderly gentlemen getting more and more flustered as Mikki reaffirms his faith in the superiority of the machine is both funny and eery. Later on Ellen herself talks absently to Mikki, and the machine repeats his stereotyped answers in the voice of her dead brother—answers which have gained in chilling significance since we heard them last. Over and over it is scenes like this which startle us. Faults "The Loneliest Girl in the World" may have, but many of its situations are inescapably telling.

VARSITY SPORTS

Blue Track Squad Host To Intercollegiate Meet

Both the Senior and the Intermediate Intercollegiate track meets are being held at Toronto this year. Both will be held Wednesday afternoon at the stadium, running concurrently, with the Intermediate runs, throws, or jumps preceding the Senior in each event. Thus the Intermediate 880 will be run off and followed immediately by the Senior 880. This should provide the athletes with a little more time to rest between events than is usually the case.

The other teams entered in the Senior meet are McGill (who won it last year), Western, and McMaster. Competing with the Varsity Intermediates will be OAC and Waterloo College. The Ints won their meet in a walkaway last year, but it's always possible that one of the small colleges may turn up with something. Western used to enter an intermediate team, but decided last year that it carved too big a hole in their football teams to send two track teams away. McMaster used to be a fixture in the Intermediate loop just as in football, but have graduated to Senior.

Queen's, always a straggler in track, have finally given up the ghost and dropped out.

The team members are to pick up their uniforms in Hart House today, between 12 and 2, or between 4 and 6. They will meet at the dressing room at 11 a.m. the day of the race for their one free meal of the year.

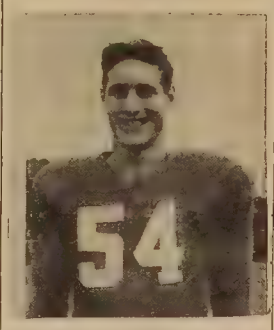
Physots showed the power of teamwork yesterday when they defeated St. Hilda's III's 8-1, in a lunch hour scramble at Trinity field. The therapists gained an early margin in the first innin, scoring four runs. The Saints retaliated with a telling hit in the second frame, but a homer by Mary Lou Lyon for POT and the double play by her teammates that was strictly for the records clinched the game.

The second game between Meds and St. Hilda's II's was called off due to rain.

On Thursday night last week, Vic Frosh A clashed with UC Frosh A in a tight, fast game which ended with the UC hoopers ahead by a slight margin of 8 to 6. The same evening the, Vic Jr.-Sr. girls met the St. Hilda's team. The result: another close game, with Vic coming out on the right side of a 13-12 score.



The Scarlet and Gold were really rolling, and the final game of the evening, between Vic Sophs and Meds, ended with the Vic lassies on top, 16-14.

on the sideline

It's been a glorious weekend for the Blue and White. Rugby triumphs are an old story now, but whether the Yate's Cup comes to Toronto or not, we have one intercollegiate championship to our credit, as of last Saturday. The Varsity gals walked off with all the honours at the Ladies Intercollegiate meet, snaring a total of 12 points out of a maximum possible of 12. McGill was the only threat, finishing with a total of 9. Queen's was next on the scale, with a score of 5. Western and McMaster toddled home with scores of 3 and 1, respectively. Last year, McGill tied with Varsity for the title. With Toronto snatching the title this year. Tennis sharks around the campus are feeling pretty fine. If McGill has anything to do with it, our acquisition of the intercollegiate bauble will be a strictly temporary arrangement.

Muriel Chinn, tennis curator, reports that some spectators turned out for the matches, in spite of the Friday a.m. drizzle which necessitated a late launching of the proceedings. Officials for the game were provided from the faculty of Physical Education.

AL BROWN

Brown, Garside Sustain Injuries

Two of the Blues' biggest men and best defensive players came out of the Queen's game with injuries, Al Brown and Bob Garside. Whether they will miss any future games or not is not known for sure yet. They are under medical surveillance now.

Brown, 6'3", 190-pound end, received a kick in his side from some friendly Queen's lineman, and may have a kidney injury, though this will not be ascertained till the results of tests at the Health Service are released.

Garside, 6'2", 195-pound linebacker, suffered possible torn ligaments in his left shoulder, and will likely miss Saturday's game with Queen's here. X-rays are being taken.

Pitching Sportshoes

There wasn't too much action in the Intramural sports program yesterday. In the day's only lacrosse match Vic II edged Med IV by a 4-2 count, mainly on the strength of Hulbert's two goals. James and Holden netted singletons for the winners while Kerr and Morris each counted for the Medsmen.

In volleyball UC won a pair of games as the Sixths downed Vic III 15-9, 15-7 and the Fifths took St. Mike's B 15-11, 13-15 and 15-8.

Trinity B and Jr. Vic battled to a 0-0 standoff in soccer as goalkeepers Ashcroft and Rendall managed to keep the ball out of their respective nets.

Blues Down RMC In Fast 2-0 Game Atucha Nets Both

The University of Toronto Soccer Blues opened their two-game weekend by defeating the R.M.C. cadets 2-0 at Kingston on Friday. The cadets put up a good show, but the Blues did not have to work too hard to take this game for the Blue and White. On many occasions Varsity's score should have been added to, but the Blues' shooting boots were not operating at full capacity for this game.

The play opened with the fast, well-conditioned cadets sailing up the field as they appeared intent on teaching the Blues a thing or two, but within a few minutes the Blues reversed the play to the other end of the field, and it stayed there for most of the game.

The Varsity wing halves, and inside forwards had control of most of the play, and constantly threatened the R.M.C. goal with their persistent attacks. The first goal was scored by Jose Atucha from a pass sent to him by his brother Manuel on the left wing, and he beat Mike Homonko, the R.M.C. goalkeeper, with a shot to the corner of the net. The R.M.C. squad, stung a little by this counter, began to threaten the Varsity goal, but good clearing by Doug Moffat eased the threat. The Blues took command again, and time after time the ball went sailing over the crossbar, or just wide of the post in the Varsity attempts to score. The count re-

Miller To Russell Pass Scores St. Mike's Majo Two Singles Win Contes

By FRANCIS QUINLAN

Sparked by the shifty running of Jim Russell and t smooth quarterbacking of Johnny Miller, the Double Blue St. Mike's edged a fighting Forestry team 8-6 in yesterda Intramural rugby brawl. It was a hard-played, rugged ga and the issue was in doubt until the last minute when t winners held off a desperate Forestry drive.

St. Mike's drew first blood in second quarter on an uninterru march from their own 30. Big Coghlan started it off with a yard drive; Russell carried for a gain of almost 20 yards. Mi threw a strike to glue-fingered Jerry Decker on the Forestry Two smashes at the line by Cogh put the Mikemen on the 10, on the next play Russell Miller's pass in the end zone for touchdown. McGill Upset Senior Blue Soccerites

Last Saturday the University of Toronto Soccer Blues traveled to McGill, and lost a very exciting game to Redmen, five goals to two. The Blues had just finished playing three games in four days, and the heavy grind of playing the full hour and a half three times in 96 hours began to show its effect in the second half of the game. The Redmen, having rested a full week before the game, were sharper on the ball towards the end of the second half, and scored three goals in quick succession to break the tie that existed at that point, and to go on to win the game 5-2.

The first half started off at a fast pace, and the Blues appeared a little leg weary at this point as the Redmen pressed hard, and it was not long before McGill opened the scoring. The ball was run down the left wing, and a quick pass to George Nikolaidis saw the speedy right winger shoot the ball first time into the Varsity net.

The Blues then began to unravel themselves as time and again they carried the ball into McGill territory, but failed to tie the score. The McGill forward again came to life, and following an attack on the Varsity goal, Norris Procope scooped the ball out of a goal mouth scramble, skipped around the defence, and slid the ball inside the goal post making it number two for McGill.

The the Blues started to show, as the McGill defence was pressed back into its own half, and kept there for minutes at a time, but Varsity failed to open the scoring in the first half.

At the start of the second half McGill started to attack again, but the Blues fought back, and this time it paid off as Manuel Atucha took a pass from the right wing, and slammed the ball into the net for Varsity's first goal. This inspired the Blues forward to persistently attack the McGill goal, and Redman's defence was fast becoming rattled. The next Varsity goal resulted from a free kick awarded

4 Freshmen Boost Sr. Blues In Yates Cup Competition

The jump from high school to college football is a big one to make in one year. Varsity's Senior Blues have no less than four boys in their regular line-up starred in high school football last year.

Lineman Bruce Johnston and Jim Butler who played for Coach Harry Hull and his 1950 Canadian East York Goliaths, have been turning in excellent performances to date. Bruce has played both tackle and end, and Jim has got the starting call for the right guard position.

Another Toronto boy who has been going great guns in the Blue backfield is fleet-footed little Bobby Dale, who was top performer for Coach Stu. Scott's Lawrence Park Collegiate squad last Fall. His ability to follow bloc ers and his exceptional speed a a real treat for spectators.

The fourth former high scho er to make the grade and rea stardom in one season is Ste Oneschuk. Nineteen - year Steve had a brilliant season Coach Jim McNulty's St. C arines Collegiate crew in 1 The Garden City gang, it will remembered, won the Ted Re Telegram Trophy, at the Red F ther Tournament of Champio held in Toronto last October.

Steve has been a standout back for the Blues in every gam this Fall, scoring touchdowns ea time out until last Saturday. is a multiple threat in all depa

The Printed Word

Reprint from THE MANITOBAN
By HAROLD BUCHWALD

Every publication which appears with any frequency has, since the invention of machine printing, been plagued by the mechanical gremlins who foul up typelings and insult the reader by forcing upon his unsuspecting eye that which is known to the trade as "typographical errors". The phenomenon is not limited to The Manitoban, although this august journal has had more than its share. Any printed product is susceptible, and even the most dignified and handsome in appearance have fallen prey to the typesetter's frailty.

The great newspapers, the mightiest printing plants, all have full-time employees whose every working hours is devoted to discerning errors caused by the typesetting machine operator dropping in a wrong letter, or otherwise mangling precious copy. Hour upon hour is spent scanning proofs, correcting them, and the seeing that the corrections are correct, and still frequent errors creep in to bar the reader.

Although most typographical errors are unpleasant as they challenge the reader to ascertain for himself what was originally intended, a great many have been the source of considerable ribtickling.

In recent years The Manitoban has unintentionally contributed not a few snickers to its readership. About seven years ago, when Dr. H. H. Saunderson was dean of arts and Science the following appeared on the news page:

DEAN ILL

Dr. H. H. Saunderson, dean of Arts and Science, has been in bed all week with a bad coed. The entire campus wishes him a speedy recovery.

A few years later, when Pat Twomey coached Manitoba football and basketball, Mrs. Twomey's blessed event was reported:

"Congratulations to Coach and Mrs. Pat Twomey who this week gave birth to a sin."

Perhaps because the news and sports are put to bed just prior to dawn, headline writers may be excused for the odd slip in wording as they are concentrating on fitting a certain space with a specific number of units of type. We remember only too vividly being ribbed about a streamer across the sports page which read: "BISONS DROP TWO ON ROAD"; while in the same issue there appeared on the news page "PEP RALLY TO PLUG KENNEDY." Who thought twice when they were written?

Not straying very far from home, we have the classified section of The Winnipeg Tribune as another case in point. One day last winter, under the "used cars for sale" heading there appeared an item:

'38 PLYMOUTH CONVERTIBLE —Cold weather alone has cut the price on this one. ..A dandy, reliable car for the young in heat. Regular $750. Special $495. Any who are interested might drop down to Dominion Motors and see if it's still there.

Among the more famous typo-errors was one which proof-readers, make-up men, city editors and rewrite men on the staff of The Los Angeles Daily News all missed, as one day there appeared in big black headlines: "DR. SMRZ ILL, CARRIES ON IN BED."

Even when you catch the error, the gremlins don't stop working. This was the experience of a mid-western small town newspaper which carried a story on a local boy returning triumphant from the war. The paper hit the streets with four-inch headlines proclaiming: "BOTTLE-SCARRED VETERAN RETURNS." When the error was discovered, the paper ran a second edition whose same size headline read: "BATTLE SCARED VETERAN RETURNS."

The New York Times once headlined: SAILOR, WITH CHILD, FOUNDERS IN STREET." Another famous boner was the following from a certain U.S. paper: "TRIPLETS BORN IN IDLE MAN'S HOME."

The big advertiser, also, has not escaped unscathed. On February 9, 1949, a New York paper ran a full page ad for S. Klien, the fourteenth street bargain emporium. The ad heralded a gigantic fur sale, and part of the copy ran as follows:

"Four Star SPECIAL . . . included in this sale are just four NATURAL RANCH MINK coats . . . $17.99 . . . These coats are made from number one bundles of freshly pelted prime skins. Absolutely guaranteed not to be dyed, topped or blended."

Needless to say the store was mobbed the next morning.

Just last spring, The New York Post, under a photo of Pope Pius X, recently disinterred to be beautified, ran the following picture credit line: "Stork Club Photo."

So common are these errors in news items and ads that periodocals make special mention of them. Time devotes "Headline of the Week" to the most meaningless head. Reader's Digest rewards readers with boners sent into them. The New Yorker goes out of its way to embarrass its fellow members of the fourth estate whenever such bloobs occur. Here are a few selections from The New Yorker's poison pen:

From The St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"PARISIAN BEHEADED FOR KILLING WIFE BEFORE MISTRESS,"

which prompts The New Yorker to say, "Ah, the French! So full of protocol."

The Gloucester (Mass.) Times once stated:

"Kozak of the St. Louis Cardinals has a name that reads the same if you spell it backward. Do you know another similar instance?"

"Di Maggio," quips The New Yorker.

From The Palm Beach Post.

"LUCK, SEX, GAVE START TO WOMAN REPORTER". Says The New Yorker: "A girl has to start somewhere."

So, the next time you see a typographical error in The Manitoban, don't turn away in disgust It happens to the greatest, and after all this is "Canada's Other Grate."

ments. A top runner, good kicker, and passed and a demon tackler. His alert work on pass defence has resulted in two runbacks for TDs, the last one, a 65 yard unmolested jaunt against Western. Oneschuk is also a first-class honour student.

These four lads are a great credit to their former coaches, teachers and themselves. It is a real thrill to see them making such good progress so early in their college careers.

McGill Upset

against McGill outside the penalty area. Tom Broadhurst drove the ball hard at the goal, and the McGill goalie just blocked the shot, but Newt Reed fired the rebound—it hit the post and Ken Jessop walked the ball into the net to tie the score 2-2. The game then became fast and furious as the pace of the play rose to fever pitch. Again Varsity forwards pressed goalward, and Al Logan just missed putting the Blues out in front as he headed the ball just past the post.

Then the pace began to tell on the tiring Blues, and the McGill forwards began to click again. The Varsity defence held until fifteen minutes from the final whistle, when Ted Richardson put McGill in front as he picked up the ball out of a goal-mouth scramble and shot it into the net to make the score 3-2 for McGill. The Varsity forwards tried to knot the score, but they failed to pierce the McGill defence.

Once more the McGill forwards got going, and two quick goals by each of the two Greek brothers on the McGill team, George and Jack Nikolaidis completed the scoring.

The next time these two teams come together is on November 10th and it should produce some fireworks. The Blues will be fully rested for this game, and should be able to field their complete team, having had Wally Eze and Bob Antoni absent for this game on account of injuries.

Blues Down RMC

mained at 1-0 as the whistle blew to end the half.

The next half was the same story, with the Blues doing most of the attacking, and again it was Jose Atucha that notched the second Varsity goal. This time he took the ball himself, and worked around the defence and the goalkeeper, and placed the ball neatly in the far corner of the net. That completed the scoring, but more goals should have been scored on numerous occasions.

The Blues played very well in this game, controlling the play from start to finish, with Dave Johnson, and Ole Friele doing the lion's share of the work at the two wing half positions. It was here that the Blues showed their superiority over the cadets, as the two wing halves had the ball at their feet for at least half the game, and used this possession well in keeping a constant supply of passes flowing to the forward line.

On defence, Doug Moffat played a good game, clearing and tackling well, and backing him up was Bobby Lane in goal, who though seldom called upon, was very safe in all the difficult situations that occurred. The best man for the cadets was McPherson at left half-back, but he was not given too much support.

The fact that R.M.C. had McGill down 2-1 at half time in their game the previous Saturday, and that McGill had to fight hard to win 3-2 is hard to credit after McGill's performance against the Blues the next day, but it is an indication that the Redmen are not by any means invincible.

An Accomplishment

Perhaps there's still some hope for Canadian students. A conference last weekend showed that at least some of them are capable of positive action.

These promising signs come out of the annual conference of the International Student Service of Canada at McMaster University where delegates from fifteen universities plotted the kind of progressive policy which other recent student conferences have lacked.

For example, they moved the site of next year's summer seminar to Ceylon, home of the Colombo Plan, and centre of one of the world's most critical areas. Next year the seminar delegates will be able to study Asia itself; there will be no second-hand references in the "resort" atmosphere of the Ottawa Valley.

Plans have been made for a national ISS campaign, run from the National Office, instead of the small ones run on individual campi. Evidence points to a country-wide drive for a specific series of projects, similar to last year's All-Varsity Aid, at Toronto.

An exchange plan whereby Canadian students could study in Europe was suggested. And an improved system of public relations was planned.

The only criticism that could be offered was the shortness of the conference. Due to lack of time, many subjects either could not be discussed in full, or had to be passed over. Prominent among these was the publicity campaign for the coming national drive. Many felt it should be along the lines used by AVA, but nothing definite was decided.

This was quite a difference from the reactionism seen at London last month, when the National Federation of Canadian University Students held its conference. Last weekend saw no retrenchment, no passing on a mandate for another year, no political bickering, no "raw deals."

The ISS conference was a meeting of students who knew what they wanted, and worked towards it without letting regionalism or personalities interfere.

A Disappointment

The only disappointment of the conference was its failure to pass a motion requesting NFCUS to reconsider its withdrawl of an invitation made to a group of Russian students to visit Canada.

The motion was defeated 15-12, in a second vote following a 13-13 split decision. The deciding votes were cast by the two NFCUS delegates to the conference, and the NFCUS representative to the ISS National Committee.

It was pointed out that the withdrawal was directly contrary to the ISS aims of improved international understanding. All but one of the delegates said they approved of the principle of the motion.

However, those who voted against it did so because they feared it would harm ISS, that it might give it a Red tag. They did not feel free to carry out their convictions.

It is disappointing indeed to see principle prostituted to expediency, but that's what happened at McMaster.

Advertising . . . as you like it

By HARVEY ZINDLER

(Reprinted from The Manitoban, University of Manitoba)

Let us pick up the latest edition of any well-known national magazine and leaf through the brightly colored full-page ads to see what lies behind the catchy slogans and amazing promises.

A prominent chemical company in the U.S.A. often runs ads which show how much coal is contained in various household articles. One such ad asked "How Much Coal in a Soda?" Before this I never knew there was any coal in a soda. I don't drink sodas any more. Fine thing to bring out in the open. Damned ad spoiled my whole outlook on life.

How can we forget those breakfast food ads pointing themselves out as "The Breakfast Food of Champions"? Can you imagine a healthy broadchested athlete growing up on nothing but shredded wheat and bananas? A fine bunch of athletes we'd have. Personally I'd much rather go for a two-inch steak with onions and french fries on the side—I'll stick to ping-pong if the former is for champions.

A well-known shirt manufacturer tells us " . . . won't wrinkle ever." Well, that's just fine and dandy—a shirt that doesn't wrinkle—what happens if I decide to move my elbow; I get a broken arm. And think of all the clothes iron manufacturers it will throw out of business—I'll stick to the wrinkable kind.

An extra large ad points out that "There's a . . . in My Future." Why right now I can't see even a kiddy car in my future no matter how hard I try. All I see is a lot of unpaid debts, increased tuition costs, increased transportation costs, but I sure can't see a car.

In six seconds a jet plane can travel one mile but In Two Seconds . . . is Ready to Work. Who cares how fast a jet goes! In the meantime my head is splitting and I've got to wait two seconds or that aspirin to go to work. If that aspirin can't get to work on time it should be fired. I don't mind waiting for a streetcar or my girl friend but when I have to wait for a little white aspirin, that's too much!

A pretty girl smiles adoringly and says "I Go For a Man Who Wears a Hat." I'll bet that baldheaded guy with a blonde on each arm does not even own a beanie and he seems to be none the worse for wear. I'm getting rid of my chapeau tomorrow.

Then there was an advertisement which told me "To Test . . . in My T-Zone." Being a rugby fan I immediately think of the end zone. Now why should I go all the way out to Osborne Stadium to smoke a cigarette. Besides I don't smoke anyway so you can see how useless that ad was.

A soft drink outfit strangely says "You Like It . . . It Likes You." Well, if that isn't fickle. In other words if I like it today, it will like me and if I don't like it tomorrow it won't like me. What do I care if a silly green bottle likes me or not. That's just an example of how silly and out of hand some of these ads can get.

" . . . Coffee . . . It lets you sleep." Well, thanks a lot . . . I take coffee to keep me awa[ke] nights and study for exam[s] what happens . . . it puts me sleep! What kind of coffee is [it] anyhow? If I am going to fl[unk] a set of exams because of a cof[fee] bean with no conscience I'll st[ick] to marijuana a la Robert M[itch]um.

Something that will really [clean] your hair is an ad with two ide[n]tical twin beauties and unde[r]neath is the caption, "Whi[ch] twin has the . . . " Now rea[lly] how am I supposed to kn[ow] which one of these girls go[es] around with Tony. It really [is] none of my business but [I] Tony fellow sure gets around, [be]cause every month there are [two] other girls with the same captio[n] underneath, "Which Twin H[as] the . . . "

" . . . Soap . . . 99 44/100% Pure." What keeps bothering [me] that other 56/100%. What do th[ey] put in that part? If they can[not] put a really 100% pure soap [on] the market they shouldn't [be] given a license to operate in th[is] country. Sometimes I even have [a] sneaking suspicion that it might be only 99 43/100% pure. B[ut] would they have a lawsuit [on] their hands if that were true.

One soft drink tells its reader[s] that "A . . . is the Pause That Refreshes." That's some state[-]ment! I can think of many things that refresh me more than a pause—a ten-week vacation in Florida for instance. Even a short walk would be more refreshing and by doing so I usually "[stag]ger into the poolroom and help [out] on the chalk industry.

Because of this I don't read advertisements any more—I buy the product with the shiniest container or the one with the catchiest name. But read advertisements, no thanks! I'll take something easier to believe—like the St. Louis Browns to win the American League pennant next year.

OUR READERS WRITE

Dirty Word

Editor, The Varsity:

First I should like to thank Mr. Grant Newton for answering my letter printed in The Varsity Oct. 11. Next I should like Mr. Newton to read my above mentioned letter once more. He would then be able to see that I did not draw any conclusions but merely put forth leading questions. However, I take his challenge as his answer to my questions. Personally I find it difficult to reach a definite conclusion to most of Life's vital questions because the more one thinks about them and tries to view them from as many sides as possible, the more one realizes the relativity of these problems.

There is one point to which I must take a firm stand, (probably because my upbringing has been different from Mr. Newton's,) with regard to Dr. Keenleyside's behaviour. Apart from Dr. Keenlyside's feelings towards Dr. Schacht, he was the guest of Sir Mirza Ismail, and has an obligation of courtesy toward the latter. What Mr. Newton calls courage is to me bad manners, and down-right rudeness, to express it mildly. However, this again shows the relativity of things.

From what I understand of Mr. Newton's letter, the main goal [of] his opinion is to have many "well-timed shocks". These in my opinion would produce profound repercussions, as in this case when Dr. Keenleyside was banned from Indonesia. If this is what Mr. Newton believes, I wonder if it is not men like him who have made Peace a "dirty word".

We Regret

The Editor would draw the reader's attention to the fact that letters can be printed on these pages only when signed by a student, Year and College or Faculty should follow this signature. Admit-to-lectures card must be checked by a senior member of the Masthead before letters can be accepted.

Letters to the Editor are most welcome. It is part of the purpose of this paper to help in creating and publicizing student opinion. But this page must be restricted to students or those who write by invitation. Hence the Admit-to-lectures card ruling must be strictly enforced.

It is regretable that several letters have been turned in, letters that would have been of interest to the student body; but unfortunately these could not be printed because Admit-to-lectures cards were not presented.

The Annual Fraud

Reprinted from THE SHEAF, University of Saskatchewan.
(Condensed from an editorial in Life Magazine.)

The young men and women are going back to college, which means that the silly season is just about upon us. In fact the football players have been on the campus for quite some time preparing for the 1951 edition of the annual fraud. Gathered at great pain and expense from the best high school teams, they have been earning their pay by doing push-ups and having a go at the tackling dummies. This week, or next, they will start putting on their show.

Just what entertainment value the show has is doubtful. The coaches, in their greed to win games and keep earning more money than the philosophy profs, have invented the T-formation which gets rid of the football. Nobody but the coaches can make heads or tails of the game, and the only possible explanation for today's spectators is that they go out of habit.

The meaning of the West Point scandal has unfortunately been lost in the fog of discussion as to whether any young man can stay honest under a system which makes it so easy to cheat. The truth is that every American college with a big-legaue football team is guilty of cheating on the grades of football players. In some cases, snap courses like basket-weaving or bait casting are available for players who are not bright enough to pass anything else.

If the players at College A can get a B.A. for catching fish, and the players at College Y can get a B.A. for winking at the professor, why should the West Point players feel unduly squeamish? Especially since they were not invited to West Point primarily for their brains or for their promise as officers or gentlemen or leaders in war, but for the express purpose of beating hell out of the other football players.

The real question is: Why do we have colleges? Certainly not to give us an autumn substitute for professional baseball. What we really want is the good old American goal of a genuine education for everyone who is capable of absorbing it.

Sunburn . . . Or Blush?

A late-season sunburn may be a blush of shame.

It is easy to see why "[Name] withheld on request" (The Varsity Oct. 22) wanted . . . his name withheld.

These four girls are part of the chorus line of the University College Follies. The rest of the line can be seen poking their feet into the bottom right-hand corner of the picture. Rehearsals for the Follies are already under way, in preparation for the show which opens November 12 for three days. Tickets go on sale today in the UC Rotunda. The show is having trouble with its director, who has just been rushed to the hospital with appendicitis. However, an acting director has been pressed into service, and rehearsals continue.

Cancel UC Operetta Plan Xmas Concert

The UC Music Club has decided not to have an operetta this year, according to Graham Jackson, III Music, vice-president of the club. Last year the Music Club planned on producing "The Merry Widow" by Franz Lehar, but financial difficulties forced the club to change their plans. Their production of "Naughty Marietta" lost money and as a result the club owed money at the start of their school year.

It was then decided to produce "The Chimes of Normandy", a non-royalty play, which would save several hundred dollars in production costs. The club now plans on presenting a Christmas concert at Hart House on the three nights reserved for the operetta. The main part of the program would be the UC singers. Jackson has called a rehearsal for all available singers at the Women's Union Theatre at 5:00 p.m. on Thursday.

The decision to cancel the operetta was based on the decreased enrollment which has cut into the money available for subsidization of the production and the feeling expressed at meetings of the UC Women's Undergraduate Association and the UC Literary and Athletic Society that there might be a danger of the club curtailing its other activities if an operetta was produced. The Music Club is responsible for the record hours, UC singers and the musicales.

The operetta has been cancelled for the one year only and club officials hope that the Music Club will be in sound enough financial condition at the end of the year to permit the production of an operetta next year.

The operetta was hampered by considerations other than the financial situation of the club. Bob Osborne, an occasional student, was forced to resign as stage director of the operetta because of conflicting activities, and it was found difficult to obtain scripts and music.

LEE COLLECTION

Culture At Dance

By EVA KEMENY

The annual Homecoming Dance in Hart House will be not only a social affair but also an intellectual occasion this year. The Lee Collection, an assortment of mediaeval art objects will be open to the public for the evening.

This collection is made up of such items as pendants encrusted with diamonds, rubies, and pearls; delicately carved caskets, and elaborate little statuettes.

There are many rings, two of which are especially worth mentioning. One was made for a Venetian gentleman to wear on his thumb, over his glove. It consists of a figure of St. George in a tiny glass case surrounded by two dragons. The other is a mourning ring in the form of a skeleton. This is, of course, rather hard to imagine. One has to see it to appreciate it.

Of special interest to the ladies will be the hat-pin with the amethyst head. About six inches long, it resides in a leather sheath. In the old days, a woman's best friend was often her hat-pin.

Then there is the grandfather of all pocket watches — the pocket sundial. This clever little device has not only a face, and an arm on a hinge, but also a compass with which to adjust the position of the sundial.

And now the rooster needs a word of explanation. His body is a hollowed-out cocoanut, and his head, feet, wings and tail, gold-plated silver. Actually, the bird is a wine jug. His head comes off and his neck becomes a spout. As he is tilted, his wings flap open. He even has a whistle in his tail, and what's more — it works.

The collection also contains three of the oldest books in Canada. Dignified, elegant and learned, they call attention to themselves with brilliant illuminations and strange indecipherable letters. The pages are sheepskin, and the ink is an interesting concoction of charcoal, honey and wine. The most amazing thing about the books is the fact that they were written entirely by hand.

Of course, there are many other things worthy of note. Such curios as the fourteenth century drinking cup supported by a pair of bird's legs, the piece of a head-dress worn by a Chinese empress, and the box made out of solid bloodstone are all strangely fascinating.

And who doesn't enjoy being strangely fascinated?

Duplicate Bob To Be Judged Today At Vic

Today marks the termination of a week's preparation by a select group of Victoria College males who have entered in the Bob Contest. This contest, sponsored by the Bob Revue is to determine which of the contestants is the most like Vic's janitor, Bob Beare, who was in the employ of the College some 79 years ago and who provides the inspiration for the original Bob Revue.

The winner of the contest will receive two tickets for the Revue to be held in Hart House Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 5, 6, and 7. He will also receive two tickets to Victoria College's Informal and Formal Dances.

The judging of this contest will not be a small event. Some of the cast are likely to be present to give a preview of the show. So do not miss the judging in Alumni Hall at 4:10 today.

Tickets for the Bob Revue go on sale for the first time today.

Big Names

The name of ISS has been changed as part of a world-wide plan to effect a gradual transition from International Student Service to World University Service, the name of a new organization formed last December to replace ISS. The change is gradual to avoid confusion. The official name of International Student Service of Canada is now International Student Service (World University Service) of Canada. Further changes will be discussed at the next conference, but world plans call for the next name to be World University Service (formerly International Student Service) of Canada.

HH Movies Show Trip To Finland

Motion pictures and slides of last summer's trip to Finland by the Warden of Hart House and seven University of Toronto Students will be shown in the Hart House Music Room tonight at 8:00 o'clock.

When the Finnish Polytechnical Choir visited Canada and this campus last year, they expressed a desire to have Toronto students visit their school, where they are at present engaged in a ten-year reconstruction program. The trip was arranged through the efforts of Urho Toivola, Finn Minister at Ottawa, and Kingsley Graham, Finn consul in Toronto.

Toronto students in Finland helped in the construction of a Sauna or steam bath.

The Warden was impressed with the initiative of the Finnish students engaged in the reconstruction program. It is the students themselves who are providing the ideas and directive force for the program.

Moving pictures by the Warden, and slides by Bill Harris, II Trinity, a member of the Toronto visitation, will be shown at the meeting, which is open to all members of Hart House.

DVA PAY

The first DVA payment will be made on Tuesday, Oct. 30 to approximately 900 students, a drop of 1300 to 1400 from last year. The faculties of dentistry, engineering, architecture, medicine, OCE, and the School of Graduate Studies will be paid by DVA representatives. All other faculties and colleges will be paid by their own registrars or secretaries. In general, payments will start at 10 a.m. but each faculty will make its own arrangements.

Enrolment Drop Report Reveals

The expected continued drop in enrollment at this University has been revealed in a Registrar's report issued recently. Total registration for this session (to date) is 11,110 (1,399 short of last year's count of 12,509). The 1949-50 session saw a grand total of 14,141 students registered here.

A lessening of the burden on the faculty and administrative staffs, closer communication of students with professors and lecturers, and various budget difficulties result as student enrollment decreases.

The University of Toronto still continues to be the largest university in Canada and the British Commonwealth. A drop of 1,393 ex-service men and women this year partially accounts for the 1,399 decrease in enrollment.

Arts continues to claim the largest number, total registration being 4,290, a drop of 483, with University College claiming 1,373, 1,207 at Vic, Trinity with 451, and 513 at St. Mike's.

Although Skule's first year class has increased 75 (from 413 to 488), the Engineering Faculty shows a sharp drop of 444 to a 1,613 total.

The Skule of Graduate Studies reversed last year's increase by dropping to a 1,107 total, 323 short of last session's 1,430 grads. They include men and women from every Canadian university and many in Great Britain, the United States and other parts of the world. This is by far the largest graduate school in Canada.

Registration in the various faculties, schools and divisions with the 1950-51 totals in brackets are: arts, 4,290 (4,773); medcine, 1,288 (1,303); engineering, 1,613 (2,057); architecture, 211 (218); household science, 20 (15); education, 551 (552); forestry, 157 (194); music, 80 (90); grad studies, 1,107 (1,430); dentistry, 411 (472); law, 79 (106); phys. ed., 173 (160); social work, 114 (204); nursing, 261 (266); hygiene, 34 (33); child study, 23 (17); pharmacy, 420 (364); university extension, 278 (322). Total: 11,110.

Man Shortage Possible?

The Varsity is crying for male reporters. For some unfathomable reason they are not applying for a position which presents at the same time, interest, excitement, and good company. What is the matter?

The Varsity is not alone in its plight, for the lack of male interest has put a serious crimp in other organizations as well. On the night of the last open meeting of the University College Literary and Athletic Society only a small number showed up. In past years seats were to be at a premium. That night there was a wide choice, and half the attendance was made up of graduates.

The All Varsity Chorus is at present trying to get under way. Unless more men enrol they, too, will be seriously hampered through having a weak bass and tenor section. If you are a male with the ability to hold a tune there is a place for you, chorus officials say. Previous experience is not a necessity.

Over in Victoria College they are running into the same difficulties. In the Victoria College Music Club enquiries produced the same news. Men are not turning out to the college functions in numbers comparable to years gone by.

One student asked the question, "Are these the first signs of a female dominance at the university?"

Student Aids Red Feather Selling Cards

A second year Arts student at University College is using a novel idea to aid the Red Feather drive this year.

Les Carter is selling Christmas cards, and to increase sales and at the same time to aid the Red Feather campaign he is turning over 10% of the total sales to the Red Feather. This percentage is considerably greater than 10% of his profits.

Carter is working his way through college and could not otherwise afford to contribute to the drive

There are approximately 200 clubs on the campus and Carter intends to approach them all. If 20 clubs, with an average of 20 members each buy their Christmas cards in bulk, $100 will go to the Red Feather

"Mutual Understanding Bridge To World Peace" - - Cadbury

"The greatest threat to world accord today is the colossal misunderstanding of the USSR with regard to life in the West, and of the West with regard to life in Russia," said Mr. Paul Cadbury in a meeting with a group of friends last Friday. "Any attempt to bridge this misunderstanding is a real move for peace". He went on and pointed out that the West should try to promote a better Christianity and a better Democracy as a model of life at its fullest.

Mr. Cadbury was a member of a group of seven English Friends (Quakers) who visited Moscow in July last summer to attempt some measure of agreement between the two power blocks. His talk was delivered to a number of friends last Friday and this report was given to a meeting of CAMFOR last Monday afternoon.

The group was composed of industrialists, scientists, professors and religious leaders. While in Russia they visited a great number of factories and mills on short notice. They went to a Baptist Church in Moscow where the Minister spoke to a capacity audience of 1500 seated, and another 300 standing at the back.

There were three outstanding things revealed by the visit stated Mr. Cadbury. In general they are, that the people in Russia are well fed and well clothed, that there is a total lack of understanding with the way the rest of the world lives, and that there is a real belief that the western world is being held down by a wicked capitalistic government.

With regard to the standard of living in Russia, it was generally agreed by the whole party that, though the standard of living was not as high as in the United States and Canada, still it was as good as that of England.

Continuing, Mr. Cadbury said that the ignorance of the average Russian was appalling. "As high as 99 percent of the people lack any knowledge of the West's living standards, industrialisation, and scientific progress. This makes for a boundless pride in the Russian advances, a pride which is only seen elsewhere in the United States," he said.

Russians find constant proof for their belief that the West is held down by the capitalist in selected quotations from economic journals, pointing out the peace scare in the Wall Street price indices. These occurred during the Korean Armistice talks in particular.

Summing up, Mr. Cadbury felt that there was a real feeling of prosperity in Russia today, and that if the misunderstanding gap could be bridged, there would be a real chance for peace.

Queen's Fan Dates Horn Is Arrested

Kingston (CUP)—What do you do if you are unable to get yourself a date on a football weekend? One ardent Queen's fan, a member of the Queen's Brass Band, was unable to find a companion at London for the Saturday night frolic. Unhappily, he decided that his horn would have to substitute.

Police did not take kindly to his outpourings of soulful music in a downtown hotel, however. After being warned to stop, the ill-fated musician adjourned to a friend's hotel where a boisterous party was in progress. There he resumed his playing.

Police reappeared and searched the room in vain. But a final blast gave away his hiding place—under a bed! Needless to say, the officers retaliated convincingly.

Balloons

How to advertise a dance a la McGill Engineering School.

The McGill Skulemen, to get up interest in the Arts types for their Fall Informal, showered students with balloons tossed from the top of the Arts building. Ten of the balloons contained tickets for the dance. One hundred and fifty bursting balloons must have added to the ballyhoo.

Players Promise Varied Features

This year, in the University of Toronto Drama clubs, one-act plays will be more prominent than three-act plays. Victoria College, Trinity College and Le Cercle Francais will undertake the larger productions in addition to presentations of one-act plays.

St. Michael's, at present working without a drama chairman, will present one-act plays only, some with the Player's Guild, and others for the University of Toronto Drama Committee. The St. Michael's Music and Drama Club intends to have a closer working relationship between the two parts of the Club and will so spend the time usually alloted to the production of a three-act play.

"Con Puesta y Sin Novio" is the first scheduled play for the Spanish Club. Then, before Christmas, the Club has a novel presentation, something previously not attempted. A Spanish-style Christmas program with a Mexican flavor, "Posados Mejicanas", with special songs and a story peculiar to the Spanish people is being prepared. "El Sombrero de Tres Picos" by Alarcon is the last dramatic contribution for the year, coming at the end of February.

Victoria College has Priestley's "An Inspector Calls" for presentation on Jan. 10, 11, 12. Several one-act plays will be presented for the University of Toronto Drama Committee and others will be presented at the Vic Drama Club's monthly meetings.

Trinity's Drama Club has decided to produce a three-act play for Feb. 5 and repeated for five nights. As yet, no play has been chosen although over thirty have been considered. Herert Whittaker, Drama Critic for the Globe and Mail, will be back directing the play as he did last year. In addition, there will be monthly play readings and four or five one-act plays.

Le Cercle Francais has the shortest program for the year and will present a three-act play, Racine's "Les Plaideurs", while the UC Players' Guild has the longest program scheduled. No three-act play is being planned for this year. There will be a series of one-act plays, produced for the students' enjoyment, but having the definite purpose of giving the actors and those working behind the footlights who intend to make a career of the theatre, an opportunity to learn all they can about it and the mechanism by which it works.

After "Riders to the Sea" on Oct. 20, comes J. M. Barrie's "The Twelve Pound Look" Oct. 24, and for Nov. 21 Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus" and "A Miracle Play," Vic, Trinity, University College, St. Michael's, the School of Nursing and the Conservatory of Music Drama Group will present one-act plays for the U.T.D.C. Nov. 13 and 14, three each night.

A play by Eliot or Shaw will be dramatized for two nights beginning the day school re-opens on Jan. 7.

Most important for UC perhaps is the production of the play or plays of the Robin Godfrey winners. There are from one to three prizes given for three student written plays and the Guild will produce them for the student body.

University College, Vic, Trinity, and St. Michael's will combine to produce several one act plays for Feb. 20.

Beube Sick Legs Kick Show's On

Preparations for the UC Follies are continuing at a normal pace, according to publicity director Joe Goldenberg who is also Acting Social Director. Social director Vic Beube was taken to Mt. Sinai Hospital late Monday night and had an appendix operation at 5 o'clock Tuesday morning. When Goldenberg was told that he was Acting Social Director, he had a temperature of 102 degrees from a fever contracted while operating a sanding machine.

However, Goldenberg rallied and is working on the UC Follies in Beube's absence. The acting social director and publicity director said that this year's Follies contained a wealth of new material, with Judy Godfrey again highlighting this year's show.

When asked about the theme of the show, Goldenberg answered that he was not sure of the details but imagined that legs would play an important part. The UC men have already expressed approval of the talent in the show in a rather unique way. Two pictures of the chorus girls have been taken from the rotunda, and a replacement was not on the bulletin board for an hour before it disappeared.

Pat McRae, in the above picture, is examining one of the pictures which other co-eds will be able to see on Saturday night when the whole of Hart House, including the Art Gallery is opened for the Blue and White Homecoming dance.

Co-ed Art Lovers Get HH Entrance

On authority of the Board of Stewards, the Hart House Art Gallery is to be open every Wednesday from 4 to 5 p.m. to the women of the University, staff and undergraduates. A member of the Art Committee will be in charge.

The beginning of the art gallery dates back to 1916 when Mr. Vincent Massey indicated that if a University Art Club were founded it might be possible to provide quarters for it in Hart House. The University of Toronto Sketch Club was founded in 1917, holding its first meeting in the Chemistry and Mining Building. Except for one luncheon that year, no further meetings took place until March, 1920.

In the meantime Hart House opened November 11, 1919, with the present Art Gallery. Professor Barker Fairley was the first chairman of the Sketch Room Committee, followed in 1924 by Professor Hardolph Wasteneys.

The latter, when interviewed on the subject, recalled some of the early days of the committee. The members used to have meetings at his house to make frames for some of the earlier exhibitions or to make mats for the now valuable collections of prints which they began.

Many local artists took great interest in the gallery. Arthur Lismer and C. W. Jeffreys were among the first speakers to the Sketch Club. In 1922 the now famous Hart House Art Collection was begun with the purchase of two pictures—one by A. Y. Jackson and one by H. S. Palmer—with money partly donated by the graduating year of 1922. Later an advisory committee consisting of Lawren Harris, A. J. Casson and Gustav Hahn was formed to help the committee select purchases.

Throughout this whole period the purpose of the original Sketch Club was maintained by holding regular art classes. This year's class, under the instruction of Carl Schaeffer, held its organization meeting this month, with an enrolment of 80.

In 1936, because of its broadening activities, the Sketch Committee's name was changed to the Art Committee. Typical of these activities is the sponsorship of the Lee Collection of Medieval Treasures presented to the University in 1941 by Viscount and Viscountess Lee of Fareham. This collection is on view in the Lee Room of Hart House from 5 to 6 every Wednesday.

A more recent undertaking, started in 1947, stopped and then reinstituted in 1950 is the showing of documentary films during lunch hours.

Jaywalker's Art Extinct In 'Peg

By ROSS FRANCIS

Reprinted from The Manitoban

In May of this year the city fathers effected a resolution forbidding the crossing of downtown streets between intersections or against a red light. Five months of rigid regulation of this law have resulted in a virtual extinction of jay-walking.

For years Manitoba's two main exports were smoked goldeye and jay-walkers. Someone cutting diagonally across Granville and Hastings in Vancouver, or crossing Yonge street in Toronto in the middle of a block, was known instantly as a Winnipeger. Our fame was dominion wide and extended even beyond Canada's boundaries. Not since the trolley-dodging activities of the inhabitants of Brooklyn earned for their team the name of "Dodgers" had one city given itself so wholeheartedly to the art of eluding traffic.

People from all walks of life jaywalked. On a good day youngsters suitable for kindergarten and grey-haired pioneers could be seen moving swiftly through rush hour traffic at the same crossing. A businessman and his stenographer might both traverse Portage between the same two streets. The art had its followers among old and young, rich and poor, without distinction.

Few motorists or traffic cops realized to what extent the pedestrians they swore at were practising an art. For jay-walking represented one of the highest forms of artistic expression. Winnipeggers had to be trained to it from birth; few outsiders ever became true artists. To see an opening in a stream of cars, dart into it, stop suddenly as danger loomed, pirouette, leap once more, and emerge unscathed with the successfully crossed took keen reflexes and highly developed muscles. To do this in the traditionally graceful manner, showing no concern over possible danger, demanded considerable artistic temperament.

It was not without significance that while Winnipeg was turning out expert jay-walkers, it also developed the finest ballet company in Canada. The same high standards of perfection apply to both. Many was the jay-walker who died for his art.

Now this is no more. A few break the law and cross with the lights against them. But they do so furtively and usually for some practical purpose—to catch a bus or to avoid being late for work. Gone is the old-time enthusiast who jay-walked for the joy of it, whether he was in a hurry or not.

The passing of the art was perhaps inevitable. It placed too great a stress on individual initiative to survive in a society becoming increasingly collectivist. Even though they knew it had to be, lovers of jay-walking may well be permitted to mourn its extinction.

Winnipeg has lost something fine.

Discuss "NATO" At IRC

Mr. A. D. P. Heeney, Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, will speak tomorrow at an open meeting of the International Relations Club on "The North Atlantic Treaty Organization: Its Aims and Operation." Mr. Heeney, former Clerk of the Privy Council, has been with NATO since its inception, as the senior advisor to the Canadian delegation; he attended the recent NATO conference in Ottawa, and will be present at the coming meeting in Rome. After a short talk, Mr. Heeney will lead a discussion and answer the questions of students.

The meeting will take place at 4:10 p.m. on Thursday in the U.C., Women's Union, St. George St. at Hoskin.

Announcing the IRC's reactivated program, Andy Watson, IRC president, said last night that the "Chinese and Korean Dispute" seminar group will begin its study next week. The group will be led initially by members of the faculty but student discussion and participation will increase as the group ages.

The IRC, continued Watson, in striving to promote an enlightened student opinion on world affairs, urges all those who are interested to attend the Thursday meeting.

United Nations...

Symbol

A Fine Ideal

" . . . To save succeeding generations from the scourge of war . . . to reaffirm our faith in human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women . . . to promote social progress and better standards of living in larger freedom . . . to practice tolerance . . . to unite our strength to maintain international peace."

Fifty nations got together and wrote these glowing words. It was at a time when they were most needed, and a real feeling that we were entering an era of peace, cooperation and understanding. A lot of people had their faith in mankind renewed.

Peace was all. Not just by political agreements, though. For the men who drafted the United Nations charter in such words saw how much food, education, self-respect and quality before the law contribute to peace. They said so in no uncertain terms. For it is individuals to whom the United Nations ideally directs itself.

Then came peace and the UN began its real effort to take the ideal and make it work . . . "To save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind . . ."

Attempts to bring nations together to maintain peace are, of course, not new. The earliest, perhaps, goes back to Greek times: the last fatal attempt was the unlamented League of Nations. We thought we had gone the League one better, this time. All the belligerent allies agreed to take part in the organization this time.

This time it was going to work! The UN was going to set a precedent.

There is no denying that the UN had the right principles. They had a ring in them that catches our imagination. We all believed that we had built a strong foundation on which to rest our hopes for the future.

" . . . To practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours . . . to ensure the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest . . ."

PEACE

In Our Time

This Article was Contributed by Professor F. H. Underhill, Member of the Department of History, at the University of Toronto.

Everybody wants peace. It was in my undergraduate days that I read for the first time the remark that the prayer of the statesmen of Europe was not "Give peace in our time, O Lord" but "Give peace on our terms, O Lord." This was in the far-off days when World War I was looming up. The remark still contains the fundamental truth about the problems of peace-making.

Everybody wants peace. But when Soviet spokesmen proclaim their profound desire for peace what they really mean is that they want to overthrow our western capitalist-socialist-democratic system without having to fight a world war for the purpose. And the phony peace petitions circulated by their stooges in western countries are designed to enrol as many western innocents as possible in this project of smoothing the way for Soviet expansion westward. Likewise, when our western statesmen proclaim their desire for peace what they mean is that they want to preserve the present way of life in the West and to stop Communism from overrunning Asia and Africa without having to fight a word war. Though both of the two great political groups talk about peace, their aims are mutually incompatible.

This means that the only peace we are likely to see in our day is the present condition of dangerous tension. But the hopeful feature of this situation is that, while the cold war may flame up into a hot world-wide war, it may also die down into a condition of fairly peaceful "co-existence" when the Kremlin leaders realize that there is no chance of attaining their aims without engaging in a world war. Under American leadership we have set ourselves to build up western military power to the point at which this fact will become clear to them. The purpose of our present rearmament policies is not to fight a third world war but to prevent one.

When the United Nations was founded in 1945 its constitution was based on an optimistic picture of the world situation which has turned out to be quite unfounded. The United Nations organization was quite a piece of machinery that would work perfectly as long as the Great Powers agreed with each other. The system of Collective Security meant that the overwhelming force of the combined Great Powers, backed up by the smaller powers in council, would be turned against any international wrong-doer in future. And with this political machinery of the the United Nations in good working order, the international organization could then proceed to beneficent social and economic activities.

Of course it hasn't worked out that way. When the Great Powers disagree fundamentally the possession of the veto in the hands of any one of them renders the Security Council completely ineffective. But the fortunate accident that the Russians had foolishly absented themselves from the Security Council at the time of the Korean aggression, followed by the brilliant constitutional manoeuvre of the Americans in transferring decision of such questions from the Security Council to the General Assembly (where there is no veto in operation), has restored the effectiveness of the United Nations machinery for the moment. And if a general war can be avoided for the next two or three years, the strength of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization may establish a balance of power which will turn the Soviet rulers away from dreams of expansion for a generation or so.

We North Americans, having lived a sheltered life in the nineteenth century, tend unconsciously to assume that peace is the natural condition of mankind. Now when we discover that we shall have to shoulder the main burden of protecting the western world, and that peace can be secured only by our own strenuous efforts and prolonged sacrifices, we are prone to complain against the hard fate that has flung us into this world which is so unlike our dreams of human brotherhood. We have always had a weakness for constitution-mongering, and we visualized the constitution of the United Nations as a typical piece of North American machinery which would automatically manufacture peace while we lived happily (and irresponsibly) ever afterwards. Such automatic machinery may be invented to produce motor cars and refrigerators, but not to regulate human relations. If we have the patience to work the imperfect machinery of UN and NATO as effectively as possible, improving it as we learn from experience, we may avoid a third world war and then use the time thus gained to lay the basis of something like a genuine peace.

But Can It Work

Just what happened to that ideal. In just six years, there seems to be nothing left of it. It is forgotten in the merry game of cat and mouse. What are principles worth when each nation is back at the old game of: "What is his motive behind this move."

" . . . to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours . . . to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights . . . to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples . . ."

With the failure of the United Nations to find some solution for the difficulty of nations working together, to release jealously guarded national rights for the greater good of all, people have again become bitter and cynical. We pass over the ideal, and look at an attitude of resignation almost at the prospect of another war, at least in North America.

There is no end of pessimism to such contemplation.

Yet let us not overlook one factor about the attitude of nations. They have never ceased to pour their share of money into the UN. They have continued to send their best people to represent them in the world body. Is it just a pipe dream, the last remnant of a will to believe, or make other people believe that we can still "unite our strength to maintain peace and security?"

Strangely enough, there are instances where the high-sounding principles have some meaning! In the declaration of Human Rights, the Declaration of Rights for Women, Relief Work, Narcotics Convention, specialized organizations working for improved health, better education and social conditions. The list of achievements can sound singularly impressive. In this work, the ideals of the UN have some meaning because national jealousies are sacrificed at the work of the individual becomes all important. People are united to help people.

Outside of politics the UN can say it works. To give up pressing on National rights seems to be what it takes.

Poem

When I was one, I was just begun
When I was two, I was very new
When I was three, there was not much of me
When I was four, there was not much more
When I was five, I was barely alive
But when I was six I was full of endeavour
And I hope to go on for ever and ever.

And Party

The United Nations Club will hold an open panel discussion on whether "The Creation of the State of Israel is a Cause of Current Unrest in the Middle East". Mr. Vincent Price, President of the National United Nations Association will welcome the club on its formation.

What It Does

While the diplomats meet at the conference tables in the General Assembly and Security Council to discuss the future of the world, United Nations agencies attempt to improve conditions throughout the world in a very material way.

It is estimated that someone somewhere in the world dies of tuberculosis every seven seconds. To combat this red scourge, the World Health Organization of the U.N. have organized a global war on T.B. During 1948-49, more than fifty million children in Europe and North Africa were examined and some twenty million vaccinated. Large scale campaigns are also taking shape or have been accomplished in China, India, Ceylon, Pakistan and other countries.

WHO has allocated two million dollars for vaccinating in Europe and a further two million for use in other areas. Through the UN agencies, an international health campaign unique in the history of man's struggle against disease, is sweeping to victory. In 1951, WHO's budget is $6,150,000.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the U.N., an organization to raise levels of nutrition and standards of living, is working to improve production and distribution of food products. FAO has turned out studies on quantities of food required in the world, showing that pre-war production was so low that only one-third of the population had enough to eat. FAO prepared a twenty-five year development program for Greece, also recommended improvements in methods of agriculture in Poland, Siam and Venezuela. In addition FAO held agricultural schools in Europe to bring agricultural workmen up to date on modern techniques.

One of the major problems in agriculture is soil erosion and its allied disaster, floods. Nearly half a billion human beings in the valleys of the great rivers of Asia continually face the danger of floods and consequent famine. About one-fifth of the entire population of Asia, 200 million people, live under the protection of dikes. The Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East is making field trips to the major rivers of Burma, South China, Cambodia, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, etc. Meetings have been organized for international co-operation on flood control in these countries, to prevent floods in a neighbouring country. This international co-operation in the East is another "First" for the U.N.

— W. F.

What It Is

...e existence of the United Nations lies in the power of an idea ... perhaps a feeling. It could be expressed as the idea of peaceful co-existence among the world's nations or more realistically the determination to avoid war. The United Nations is a group of buildings in New York and scattered about the world. A picture of the Secretariat Building or the UN flag is a material symbol of its physical existence, but the United Nations is more than an organization, a group of people or a collection of projects, plans and operations.

Where does the essence of the United Nations exist? It exists in the power of this ideal or determination to move men to action along new and broader lines of internationalism. Where this ideal is weak or over-ruled by expediency and parochial ideas there can be no United Nations even in the literal sense of the term. The forms will be gone through but the substance will not be there.

Delegates, technicians and advisors come to the U.N. from the corners of the earth in the role of national advocates to debate the most vexatious questions of a world that is trying to live in peace. Not only the languages are different but the basic attitudes and values are different. This is a kaleidoscopic meeting of cultures. The problem is to find a fair compromise on issues which men are ready to die for. There are few rules or guides.

Already the limitations of the veto are apparent as a means of conducting business. But its abolition will not solve any problem. It merely prevents it from being discussed. The absurdities of voting by national sovereign states in order to decide questions which affect peoples not in a political sense but in their daily lives have plagued the U.N. However in the day to day work of the councils and anonymous committees new understandings and techniques of compromise are being worked out. It is not dramatic or eye-catching work but here the positive advance toward learning to live together is being made. The very atmosphere of such an international institution tends to submerge narrow prejudice or arbitrary nationalist approach.

What prevents people from co-operating on measures to benefit all? Physically all the conditions are ideal. The problem must lie then in the minds of men and whether there is any reality to the United Nations depends on all the people whose attitudes bear on its decisions.

Do the men of the national governments really believe that United Nations organization is a vital way to settle international problems? an their deputies submerge personal and national bias to overcome natural barriers to settlement? Will the peoples of the world give up enough of national sovereignty to guarantee the work of the delegates will not be futile?

To those that believe hope is the proper attitude the United Nations is a living symbol of faith in better things to come.

INTERCOLL TRACK MEET TODAY

Runner

Pictured above is Eric Kofmel, one of the star runners of the Senior Intercollegiate track team. This is the fourth season that Kofmel has run with the Senior Blues and he has shown well each time out, handling the 440 assignment. This afternoon in the stadium he will carry the Varsity hopes in the 220, the 440 and he will be the anchor man on the mile relay, if he is not too tired.

Pitching Sportshoes

By BEAUREGARD YUMPF

The soccer game, played on the front campus at noon hour yesterday, was a real thriller and it is too bad that there are not more spectators for these contests. Dentistry and Forestry battled to a 0-0 draw, with both sides playing some tight soccer.

On the lacrosse front there were three tilts yesterday. In the 1:00 encounter, SPS III edged St. St. Mike's B 2-0 in the lowest scoring boxla contest seen around here for many years. Shimizu was the Engineers' marksman, netting the only two tallies of the game.

In a Group I lacrosse game yesterday, SPS 1 trounced the Senior Vic entry by a 15-2 count. The Engineers took a commanding 6-1 lead in the first quarter and extended it to 8-1 in the second when the Vicksters showed signs of a good defence. McKay was top marksman of the day netting five for the winning Skulemen, while teammates Dewar and Byrnes accounted for four apiece.

In the final lacrosse game of the day, Dents had little trouble in beating Meds III by a 10-1 count.

In volleyball, Meds III year shutout Sr. Vic twice, Wycliffe A beat UC IV 15-0 and 15-10. Pre-Meds II year took Law 15-7 and 15-13, and Forestry defeated the PHE entry 15-4 and 15-9.

Varsity Team Hosts In Stadium At 1:00

Today at Varsity Stadium between 1:00 and 5:00 p.m., University of Toronto students will have a great opportunity to cheer their senior and intermediate intercollegiate track and field teams to the intercollegiate championships in their respective groups.

However, it is far from a foregone conclusion that Toronto will win both intercollegiate titles. It seems probable that we will win the Intermediate championship, as we have won it by a good margin for the past two or three seasons. No such confident statement can be made about the senior championship. McGill won it last year in Montreal by a very narrow margin; and the McGill team is rated as Varsity's chief opposition again this year.

Either McGill or Varsity will likely be the winner of the senior championship, with the other team a close second. The last race will be the mile relay event, an important event for the simple reason that a win in it is worth twice as many points as a win in any of the individual events.

The combination of the two intercollegiate meets into one provides what will probably be the largest and finest track and field meet held in greater Toronto since the Canadian Senior Championships and British Empire Games Trials were held at East York Memorial Stadium in August 1949. Not only will the senior meet as a whole be a very close and hard-fought battle, but every event will be a closely contested one.

Even though competition may not be so close for the intermediate title, many of the separate events will provide some evenly matched competition. This is the quality that makes a meet full of excitement for the spectators as well as the participants. A common complaint of spectators against track and field meets is that there are too many intervals of inactivity during a meet, but this problem will be pretty well taken care of today since the events will alternate between intermediate and senior competition and the waiting for something to happen will be cut to a minimum.

In each of the intermediate and senior meets there are 15 events: broad jump, high jump, pole vault, javelin, shot put, discus, high and low hurdles, sprints, distance runs and finally a relay. An intercollegiate team is composed of, at the most, 19 men. The University of Toronto teams generally comprise the full quota and this year is no exception.

Since there are almost as many events as competitors, it is necessary for most team members to compete in more than one event. The strain and tension of intercollegiate competition makes it almost impossible for an athlete to compete successfully in more than three or four events, especially if one or more of them is a race over 220 yards long.

The first four places in each event count points, with 5 for a first place, 3, 2 and 1 points respectively for second, third and fourth places. No substitutions are allowed in the entries for the various events, except in the mile relay where the team is made up just before the race. This means that if a runner is entered in both the mile and the three mile, and after running one event finds that he is too tired to run in the other then no substitute can run for him.

Each university in the meet must submit a complete list of entries well before the meet starts. A spectator who understands these few characteristics in the running of an intercollegiate track and field meet should enjoy the meet that much better.

It will be quite a feather in the U. of T.'s cap (or bloop, if you like that better) if we can win the senior and intermediate intercollegiate championships in track and field. The students can do their part by treating themselves (and their no strain to their pocketbooks) to an exciting meet, and by showing their teams that they appreciate their refforts. At least, let's have more spectators than competitors out there at Varsity Stadium this afternoon.

Skulemen Blank Dents 7-0 On Fourth Quarter Drive

Junior SPS shut out a luckless Dents squad 7-0 on a muddy back campus yesterday afternoon to establish themselves as the team to beat in their Intramural football group. After missing several chances for a major earlier in the game, the Skule team finally hit pay dirt in the fourth quarter after a downfield march when Bannister carried over from the 15 yard line for the touchdown. The winners held a big edge in the kicking department, and blocked kicks were the most important plays of the game.

Skule kicked off to Dents to start the game, and Dents rolled through for two first downs with Gilbert and Lefebre carrying. The Engineers then blocked their kick and Day ran his left end for fifteen after it appeared that he had been trapped behind his line. Pete Bannister who played well went for three and Day passed to Bob Cockfield for a first down. Dents held on two line plays and then broke through to block Day's kick. Again the Dents had their kick blocked as Jim Clark of Skule booted the ball across the Dents line. SPS only managed a single for Dents recovered.

A couple of short kicks on either side and two pass interceptions by Skule enabled them to hem in Dents in their own end until the half.

The third quarter began with the Engineers kicking off and holding the Dentists. Paul Evans made a nice runback of the punt and Day's quick kick was taken by Jack Wall who was stopped dead. O'Connor hoofed a fifty yard punt from behind his line after two penalties set them way back. Day's quick kick on first down went for a single point, as Fred Smale made the tackle on Jack Simpson.

By virtue of another blocked kick Skule hemmed in the luckless Dents again. Horton's kick for the Engineers was brought out to the one. After SPS took Den't high first down kick, Day passed to Smale on the 5 but was nailed for a loss running the left end as the quarter ended.

The teams changed ends and Day's run off kick formation from the 15 for the major was nullified on account of a clipping penalty. Dents ran for two first downs after they took possession and George Little's good kick set the Skulemen back farther than at any other point in the game. Wall then intercepted an SPS pass and the Dents seemed at last to be rolling. However, their attack bogged down and they failed to advance any farther. Skule took over and marched down the field sparked by Bannister who eventually carried over centre from the 15 for the score. Even's convert failed and the game ended in the dark.

Bannister, Evans, Horton, and Day starred in the SPS backfield, while Smale, Hugh Garret, Fred Spratt, and Bill Jeffry were outstanding along the line. Perhaps it was an off-day for the Dents or the wet field may have bothered them. At any rate, they failed to get an attack rolling like that with which they bowled over Meds on Friday.

Wade New Coach Of Hockey Blues For New Season

The latest communique from the office of Mr. Warren Stevens reveals that thbis year's Blues' hockey team will have a new coach. Bill Wade, by no means a newcomer to Varsity hockey circles, will take over the reins from last year's coach Wally Halder.

Wade brings with him an impressive record as coach of both the Intermediates and the now defunct Junior B's. He succeeded in piloting the former to the league championship last year and before that had brought home two cup winners in his three years as mentor of the Juniors. Previous to this Bill played with the Blues for two seasons after the war.

Filling the shoes of Halder, who has retired due to business obligations, is by no means a small task, but Wade's coaching ability, already highly rated should prove to be the insurance factor in the Blues' attempt to keep the silverware here.

Jack Kennedy now busy guiding the Intermediate Football team will replace Wade this year as coach of the hockey Intermediates. Don Hyde, second year Vic student, has been appointed manager of the Blues for the coming season and will take over the post held last year by Pat McLoughlin, who has since graduated from O.C.E.

Free skating for last year's Seniors and Intermediates will be held today and Friday from 5-6 p.m. at the Arena. Senior practices will commence next week.

Track Team

Members of Varsity senior and Intermediate track teams will meet today at 11.00 a.m. in the Stadium for lunch before the track meet.

Bob Bazos was kept out of Intercollegiate Track competition last season because of a back injury, but is expected to bring in quite a few points for the Blues tomorrow. Bazos will be entered in the discus, 120 high hurdles, 220 low hurdles and the javelin. He won the Cody Trophy in the Intramural meet for the most individual points competing in the same events.

nternational Youth Meetings About The World This Summer

t a recent meeting of the Coinating Committee of Canan Youth Groups, reports were ard on five international youth nferences held this summer. e five conferences were the Inrnational Student Service (ISS) mmer seminar, the annual conrence of the International Union Students (IUS), the annual conrence of Pax Romana, the World stival of Youth and Students Peace (Berlin Peace Rally) d the World Assembly of Youth.

The CCCYG is a committee med to co-ordinate the work of number of Canadian youth oups. Among its members are e YMCA, YWCA, the Young en's Hebrew Association, and e National Federation of Labor outh.

The reports were given respecely by Ian Montagnes, III UC; irley Endicott, IV Vic; Bud rennan, IV St. Mike's; Jean Morson, (of the Canadian Peace ogress); and Jean Campbell, obrver for the YWCA.

The following articles are a sumary of their reports:

Montagnes:

Seminar

The basic concept of the Interational Summer Seminar is, by ringing students from different ountries together for an apeciable length of time, to instill them an understanding of the roblems faced by students of ther lands.

This year's seminar was held ear Ottawa, in a French-Canaian boarding school. It was an xcellent site since, in addition to eing near the nation's capital, brought together the Frenchanadian and English-Canadian ultures.

Eighty people from 11 different ountries were present at the semar, from such different places s Pakistan and India, France, inland, and Israel. In cases here several delegates came rom one country, it was possible o see an excellent cross-section f student opinion; for example in oth the Indian and Pakistan elegations, there were intense naionalists, yet at the same time oderates.

The subject of the seminar was The Needs and Contributions of ast and West", a vague subject hich divided up into an introduction to Canada for the nonanadians, and an introduction to sia for the non-Asians.

An intensive program of lecures and discussions lasting from 45 a.m. to 11:30 p.m. was used o introduce facts to the represntatives. One of the best methds was the panel system, in hich students with personal experience of the subjects under discussion took part.

Trips to various institutions in ttawa, including the Parliament uildings and the National Art allery, played an important art in the introduction of Asians o Canada.

One of the results of the seminar as a mutual introduction of Canadian and Asian culture. The tudents learned about each oth-'s religion, literature, and econmy.

They also learned about the roblems facing Asian students, he Asian resentment towards forer western imperialism, and ome solutions to the problems.

The chief value of the seminar, owever, was the spirit of internaionalism it instilled, a spirit hich transcended race, religion nd politics.

Endicott:

IUS

Ed. note: The International nion of Students is a Commundominated organization. At last year's conference in Prague observers were sent by the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS), who recommended afterwards that there was no hope of compromise with IUS. However, one of those observers, Denis Lazure, returned from this summer's conference with renewed hope of a compromise between both organizations. A meeting will be held in December at which IUS and the western student unions will attempt to find some common meeting grounds on which to base co-operation.)

There was no ranting and raving between east and west at the IUS conference in Prague, but a realistic discussion of the needs of students throughout the world.

Among the recommendations made at the conference were:

1. Material needs, such as books and technical equipment, and hospital equipment.

2. Abolition of discrimination; this is especially true for colonial countries. For example, in Algeria Arabs make up the majority of the population, but only 7% of the university students.

3. The teaching of national history in colonial universities; for example, Jamaicans have to learn about Francis Drake whom they must consider an imperialist.

4. The devotion of science for welfare and not for harm.

5. Full democratic liberties, including a free student press. (Miss Endicott mentioned that the students from Turkey, Iran and Egypt would be jailed if their national governments learned they were at the IUS conference.)

6. A Five-Power Peace Pact and the end of the war in Korea.

7. International cultural exchanges, through summer camps and sport activities.

The editorial policy of the IUS press releases should reflect the policy of the governing body, which should in its turn reflect the opinion of the majority of the members of IUS.

Canada was given a good name at the conference, when Denis Lazure invited a group of Russian students to Canada.

Brennan:

Pax Romana

Canada was represented at the Pax Romana Conference at Rheims, France, by delegates from the Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students, an organization representing fourteen Catholic colleges from Halifax to Windsor.

An important outcome was the solidification, on a national level, of the six major Catholic student groups in North America. Four of these, including Newman Club and CFCCS, are Canadian, the other two are American.

It was decided, following a one-year trial, which proved successful, to publish an all-English edition of the Pax Romana Journal, which was formerly published alternately in four different languages.

Relief and educational activities were also considered. There are D.P.'s studying under the auspices of Pax Romana in France, Holland and Germany.

For the second year in a row, the international president of Pax Romana is a Canadian student.

Morrison:

Berlin

The World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace was a manifestation of the desire of the world's youth for peace. It showed youth's determination to discuss the problems.

104 countries were represented in Berlin, in the largest and most representative student rally of recent years. Every section, class and political opinion was represented.

For example, one-half of the British delegation represented the various political clubs, and had nothing to do with the British Peace Movement. The Festival saw the first Australian aborigine to leave his country for an international student conference. There were Boy Scouts from India, Junior Red Cross workers from West Germany, and DeGaullists from France.

The students were brought together by cultural programs, art exhibits, and games. The Festival showed that the greatest talent comes out when peace is the theme.

Canadian representatives were impressed by the cultural program of Russia, China and Korea, in which performances were done by students and workers, not professionals. The program gave colonial students a chance to show their national cultures to an international body for the first time.

The Canadian and American Press did not give a fair impression of the Festival. In spite of their reports, the meals were excellent (meat three times a day), student relations were free, and everyone was healthy.

The 55 Canadians were well-received and won the admiration of many thousands of persons throughout the world, due to their cultural program which consisted partly of singing "Vive La Canadienne" and "I'm Going to Lay Down My Sword and Shield, Down by the Riverside."

The World Assembly of Youth is an international committee of youth groups of all types, including the YMCA, YWCA, YMHA and general Protestant and other religious and non-sectarian groups.

The WAY Assembly was held on the Cornell campus at Ithica, N.Y. Four hundred delegates were present from 50 different countries; the only major countries not represented were Australia and New Zealand.

A realization was gained of the problems of the United Nations because of language difficulties experienced at the conference.

The topic of the seminar was the Declaration of Human Rights. Discussion centred about the fact that opportunities for men are not on a par with women; the duties and responsibilities of youth; the meaning and purpose of the World Assembly of Youth; the need for support of UNICEF.

Two-thirds of the Canadian delegates were under 26 years of age; it was a French and English-Canadian group.

Myopia Today

Six years ago today, the peoples of the United Nations set forth their aims in one of the most idealistic documents ever written. In retrospect these aims may seem to many, most beautiful, but almost naive.

This is due partially to the tendency of the public (throughout the world) to fix their minds on the political functions of the United Nations and ignore the social and economic programs.

Can the United Nations prevent a Third World War? Here is the one question which is vital to everyone. Here is the one point at which all the peoples of the world feel their interests to be most intimately connected with the future of the United Nations. After all, bombs can drop anywhere, and if they don't get you, rationing will.

However, the events of the past few years have shown all too clearly that the future of the world lies with the decisions of the United States and Russia rather than with the United Nations as a whole. This was undoubtedly inevitable, but has produced a certain cynicism in peoples' minds as to the validity of the ideals expressed in the Chapter. Even the term "United Nations", in the face of the present dichotomy within it, will bring worth a wry smile from most people.

Of course, this view is all very unfair to the United Nations. Every organization falls embarrassingly short of the ideal. Not only that, this failure to measure up to perfection is intensified because of the very narrow view which people have of the United Nations.

As was suggested before, too much emphasis has been placed on the political side of the UN and very little on the very real progress made in the field of social welfare and economic development. This corresponds roughly to our interest in international affairs. While we can sit quite calmly at breakfast while Asia starves, let a dog be hit by a car and we are immediately upset. Whatever fails to touch us directly, fails to arouse our interest. If Asia will starve quietly, let it, but if it is a question of choosing between war and food for Asia, the choice is clear — or so our attitude indicates

Man is essentially a myopic creature. In the Middle Ages he could see no farther than the community round about him and its concerns were his own. Ambitious kings provided him with glasses so that it would become clear that he was part of a nation and its interests were also his. It is becoming increasingly clear that we need some good strong international lenses for our spectacles.

If the United Nations is to be a lasting success, people will have to become world citizens, as they are in fact, if not in awareness. Of course, we have had the international scene foisted upon us, continually during the last few years. But for the most part, we have thought of the United Nations only as a solver of crises, as a means of keeping war away from our doorsteps.

A tremendous act of imagination is required to become a member of the world community. Whether or not man's mind can encompass this idea is a vital question. Up till now the prospect of war has made him aware of the proximity of other nations.

The United Nations is attempting to perform a great task, that of molding the world into one sympathetic unit. Yet, unless the citizens of the world have the vision to see themselves as being just that, the whole work will fail. We are part of the United Nations, if the term has any meaning, and the challenge of internationalism is our own.

Dalhousie Question

Newsmongering ?

Mr. Soberman was the Delegate from Dalhousie University to the International Students Service Conference Held Last Weekend at McMaster University, and Questions The Varsity's Coverage of it.

Editor, The Varsity:

At the present time I am suffering from faint pangs of nausea as I wing my way back to Dalhousie in Halifax, after a very inspiring ISS conference at McMaster University. Unfortunately the nausea is not from the smooth comfort of this aircraft, but from a sensationalistic and newsmongering report of the ISS conference in your usually reputable paper.

The article on page two of Monday's Varsity is entitled — "ISS Conference Discuss Visit of Soviet Students." To quote: "In a close second vote . . . ISS conference defeated what was almost a vote of censure on NFCUS." This is not reporting — it is editorializing and should be on that page of your paper — I take strong exception to it. The ISS conference had no intention of rapping NFCUS. We were vitally concerned with the damage which the NFCUS decision, though done with sincerity, may do to the good name of Canadians as unprejudiced and mature students. Your reporter vainly tried to correct his damaging statement later, in quoting Mel Rotham of McGill University, who stressed this very point, as did the great majority of delegates.

Quoting further, ". . . it was a subject for heated discussion . . . between what amounted to the two rival camps of McGill University supporting it, and the University of Toronto." Fourteen universities were represented at the conference. Was your reporter attempting to set up a pro-Soviet and an anti-Soviet bloc in the minds of your readers? We were not concerned with politics. The question resolved into one of anxiety on the part of the delegates that NFCUS might misinterpret the resolution as being hostile, when as in reality we were acting upon the ideals of international good faith. Our delegation and all others wrestled with the problem in our consciences until the final vote was taken. It was a very difficult decision.

And where are your two rival camps in a vote of 24 to 2 on the final resolution which recommended re-opening the question on the local campus level? Many delegates felt that without such a mandate from their students, they could not decide the issue, though they felt the moral significance of the original motion was beyond reproach.

It is very disappointing that The Varsity has dealt with this far reaching and important discussion at the conference in such a summary and misleading fashion. Although journalistic slander can never be undone, it is sincerely hoped that this letter will help repair the setback to NFCUS-ISS relations which your article abetted on Canada's largest campus.

Dan Soberman,
Dalhousie University.

OUR READERS WRITE

Russian Propagandists

Editor, The Varsity:

The grave concern which some quarters seem to feel about the question of inviting Soviet students to Canada surprises me. Among those who would like to see this happen, one writer in Varsity even expects to see "a free and informal visit of completely representative USSR students". And may I suggest a question, which power takes care of the very selection of this "representation"? Or why haven't ordinary Soviet citizens paid any such free and informal visits to any democratic countries in the West before?

If those optimistic writers have fortunately escaped all personal experience of the regime in Soviet Russia, I can advise them that most unlikely has there ever been a case in the whole history of USSR where any citizen was permitted to travel freely outside Soviet teritory and form any personal opinions about the other countries. This would have a very serious counter-effect on the internal propaganda with which the Soviets are fed daily and which, according to our standards of logic, is full of ridiculous nonsense and deliberate distortion of facts. May I in this connection also remind you of the Russian wives of British citizens in Moscow who were refused permission to leave Soviet Russia together with their legally married husbands?

However, if any Soviet citizen has been sent abroad on a mission, he is most carefully chosen from the reliable and fanatical core of party members and is nevertheless even abroad closely watched for his performance and his contacts. Further, only a person totally and hopelessly ignorant of real conditions in Soviet Union would for a moment suppose that such a Soviet citizen after his returning home would endanger the life of himself and his family and friends by uttering a single favourable word about conditions in the "decadent, blood-sucking capitalistic countries"?

If you really are so eager to build up a goodwill, you should first contemplate over what Soviet Russia hitherto has done at all the goodwill that existed in the Western World after the Second World War? While the Soviet regime made good use of this naive "goodwill", abroad for her own purposes, she continues to preach hostility, hate and contempt against the West at home.

There are sufficient eye-witnesses to support this statement. I, for my own part, cannot find any justification for any "good will against a system of tyranny which has forced millions of its fellow men into bottomless misery and slave labour, and is most likely planning to prepare a similar future for still more.

Bloops Snatched At Queen's

Editor, The Varsity:

Until this weekend I had never considered the men at Varsity particularly chivalrous. However, after a weekend spent in Kingston, my eyes have been opened. It's not that I begrudge the 25c (much) but the idea that Queen's "men" had to stoop so low as to take girls' bloops really burned me up. Those who managed to evade the onslaught after the game, had them snatched at the tea dance. Some people will do anything for a bloop

Work has already started on the sets for the Bob Revue at Victoria College. The Bob Revue is a combination of the Scarlet and Gold Revue with the traditional Bob Show. For some reason, which the photographer did not explain, the men in the above picture are mixing a can of paint with a flag. The photographer also forgot the name of the co-ed, but the picture was definitely taken at Vic, as someone recognized the pail.

Israel's Formation Aggravated Unrest UN Club Decision

Israel is not a prime cause, but she is at least an accelerating factor, or catalyst, in the current unrest in the near East.

That was the decision reached in a panel dicussion held at the first meeting of the University of Toronto United Nations Club in Cartwright Hall yesterday. Subject of the discussion was "The Creation of the State of Israel is a Cause of Current Unrest in the Middle East." Speakers were Jim Peters, OCE, taking the Arab side, and Hillel Vice-President Vicki Sher, III UC, taking the side of the Jews.

Peters described the creation of Israel as a major reason for Arab hatred of the West. After the First World War, the Arabs and the western powers worked together well. However, the creation of Israel was the first serious step to the Arab nationalism and independence.

The Palestinian Arabs were the only ones who had not achieved some form of independence, said Peters. The other parts of the Turkish Empire, such as Syria, Iran and Iraq, were independent nations.

"This roused a natural resentment in the Arabs' hearts," said Peters, "a resentment which turned against the west, the godfather of the new state."

Because of the intense feeling of brotherhood among Muslims, said Peters, this resentment spread throughout the entire Arab League, thus explaining the widespread unrest, as shown by the Suez Canal incident, the Iranian oil question, and the assassination of Abdullah.

"The creation of the state of Israel could not have caused all this unrest," said Vicki Sher, "since all the elements of the unrest were present long before 1948, when Israel was formed."

Unrest was also stirred up by the backward state of the Arab people, who still exist in a feudal landlord society. This was emphasized by the existence of the progressive Jewish state nearby.

"Israel has been made the scapegoat of all the unrest," declared Miss Sher. "Actually, it dates much further back."

Peters agreed that most of the unrest dates back to before 1948, but added that it was started when the Arabs first realized the Zionists were trying to create a new state. The other causes of unrest were being corrected by the Arabs themselves, he added.

Finally Peters was forced to agree with Miss Sher that the creation of Israel was not a prime cause of the unrest, but only an accelerating factor.

The year's program for the UN Club was also outlined. This includes two meetings of a model Security Council, in which students will represent the 11 countries at present on the Council. First Mock Council meeting will be held Dec. 6 on the subject of the admission of Red China into the U.N. Before the meeting, general and group meetings will study the points of view of the member nations of the Council.

IAC Reports

Send Letter To Soviet Delegation

Copies of letters concerning international policy agreed on at the London conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students were forwarded today to university student leaders and newspapers in Canada and to the presidents of national student unions throughout the world.

Of primary importance in the bulletin, the first of regular reports on the work of the International Activities Commission, the foreign arm of NFCUS, was a copy of the resolutions adopted at the London conference regarding the proposed meeting of the council of the Communist - dominated International Union of Students and the non-affiliated western student unions.

These resolutions form, in effect, the mandate of the Canadian delegates to the proposed meeting — a last attempt to work out a means of co-operation between IUS and the western unions. The letter sent to national student union presidents asked for support of Canada's stand and comment on the resolutions to be presented.

Preamble to the mandates states that since the IUS exists on the international scene and by virtue of its representative nature, we deem it desirable to achieve a maximum degree of relationship with the students of the world through IUS. It goes on to say that NFCUS can only accept the IUS constitution if it is in accordance with the NFCUS constitution.

Included in the resolutions is the request that the secretariat be made more representative. In addition no organization is to be excluded from membership because of political or religious belief. The delegates are also to insist that the action of the IUS represent the will of the majority of the members and at the same time respect the rights of minorities and recognizing their opinions. Publicity must not be biassed in favor of certain of the student body.

IUS is also to be requested to decentralize its activities giving clear mandates to national student unions throughout the world and shall not discriminate because of different ideological background.

In the final resolution the NFCUS delegates will insist that the IUS,

NFCUS Stand For Coming IUS Meet

A copy of a letter to the president of the Russian student union informing him of a decision of the conference of the National Federation of Canadian University students not to ratify the invitation made at the Warsaw meeting of the IUS council for a Russian student delegation to visit this country has been forwarded to student leaders and campus newspapers across Canada. The invitation was extended by Denis Razure at the Warsaw conference in September.

This is the first move by the new International Activities Commission to keep Canadian university students informed of the work of the IAC. The letter to the Russan president was written by the chairman of the IAC, Syd Wax, president of the Student Council here, together with Jean de Margerie, current head of NFCUS, on behalf of the Canadian student organization.

"A number of difficulties were raised in conjuction with the financing of such a project," the letter said, "and the technical arrangements for conducting such a tour across Canada. As a result of these discussions, the resolution was not passed by the plenary session of the

Ask IUS Co-operate With WUS

Other items in the bulletin to Canadian university student leaders and campus papers included a copy of a letter to secretary of International Student Relief, IUS counterpart of the World Student Relief (formerly ISS) explaining that NFCUS will continue its program of co-operating with ISS. The letter urges ISR to seek closer cooperation with WUS in order to avoid duplication of services, and bridge the "division and growing conflict between international bodies engaged in student relief."

NFCUS has officially accepted the invitation to attend the conference of 20 western student unions to be held in Edinburgh between January 3 and 8. It is hoped that the conference with the IUS will be held previous to the Edinburgh meeting. Results of the former conference will likely colour the agenda of the latter, Syd Wax, chairman of SAC and president of the Student Council here, said.

Through a regular newsletter on the work of IAC, we hope that the international program of NFCUS may widely known by and shaped according to the needs of the Canadian student body, Wax said, in his covering letter.

Disguised Girl Wins Vic Bob Is Disqualified

Before an audience of 200 souls, the five finalists in Victoria's Bob Contest paraded in their outfits in Alumni Hall yesterday. After much consideration the judges, Barbara Taylor, Pat Ewing, T. K. Lawson and Jim Broughton selected Robert Roy Schatz, III Vic.

With this contest, the tradition of an all-male Bob was broken. Cleverly outfitted in the most masculine-of-janitors outfits was an unidentified girl, who under the name of Bob Sled, was successful in winning the contest. Until the time when all present were asked to remove their hats for the Victoria school song, no one had an inkling a girl was in the contest.

Taken aback at this discovery, Jim Broughton, Publicity Director for the Bob Revue, stated she had violated the rules since the contest was open to male students only. The judging committee hastily reconvened and at this point selected "Robert" Roy Schatz as the modern counterpart of Bob Blare, who has become the Vic tradition.

Phelps Bell, musical director for the Bob Revue, assisted vocally by Monty Koughan, gave a few musical previews from the Revue, coming to Hart House Theatre Nov. 5, 6 and 7.

Tickets ($1.25 each) for the show went on sale to the public for the first time yesterday and are reported to be moving very rapidly. They will be sold every day until the Revue at Victoria College from 9:30 to 2:30 and at Hart House Theatre next week.

If...

. . . we had a Student Union building, campus clubs which meet in the evenings would not have to serve warm gingerale.

See World Gov't As Peace Hope

The solution to world peace is a fourth level of government, topping the municipal, provincial and national governments of today, the president of the Toronto World Federalists said yesterday.

The speaker, Harold Miller, was addressing the first meeting of the year of the University Peace Council, held in the Wallberg Building yesterday at 1 p.m.

"Peace is a product of government," said Mr. Miller. Wherever there was government, there was law and order, whether on the local, provincial or dominion level. "The obvious way to get law and order internationally, therefore, is to create an international government," he concluded.

The World Federalists are an organization advocating a world federal government, with the various states unifying much on the same principle as the Canadian provinces united in 1867. Representatives to the government would be elected by the world citizens, just as all Canadians vote for their federal M.P.'s.

They have no definite plans as to how this will be accomplished, but merely talk about the theory of it. An international conference has been proposed to draw up a world constitution. At the conference, it has been suggested each country would send one delegate for every million persons of its population.

Mr. Miller explained that such a world government would be restricted in its powers to only those affairs which would endanger world peace. For example, it would have the right to stop manufacture of atomic bombs. It would have complete control of armament, just as the Dominion Government has control of the armed services. But it would have no power in domestic matters.

"We must have some kind of world government," said Mr. Miller. "Alliances are no good; they break up as soon as one party finds it to its advantage to leave."

There was hope that the United Nations could be modified to form a world federalist government. Also, the North Atlantic Treaty seemed a possible first step towards world government, since the larger political unit had always grown out of smaller ones.

Mr. Miller said the World Federalists already had considerable support from western politicians, including 100 British M.P.'s, nearly all the Canadian senators, and six Canadian M.P.'s.

"Even if Russia doesn't join the world government, and she is the big question mark," said Mr. Miller, "it is still better and more secure for all the western nations to oppose her united, rather than individually."

This was the first meeting of the University Peace Council since it was taken over last spring by the Engineers. It was an introductory meeting. Council officials say the first business meeting will be held sometime next month.

MILL UNEARTHED

Skule Strikes Rocks

Analagous to a new theory in the scientific world, a new building has been "found" on the campus. Buried deep in the heart of Skule territory is the "Mill."

Since it is now surrounded on all sides by the Mechanical, Mining, and Electrical buildings, direct access is limited to a narrow alleyway just South of the new Mechanical building. Professor Wolfe smilingly stated its case: "We have to expand upwards. They haven't cut us off there yet."

The building itself was built about 1903. In 1931, thanks to a grant from the Department of Mines, two stories were added to give it its present form. For those who haven't guessed yet, by "Mill" is meant that type which is related to a mine, not to flour.

But do come inside for a glance at this most un-university-like building. In the basement are found large bins of various sized rocks just waiting to be crushed (literally). Suspended in mid-air is a three tube wind tunnel where students can experiment with mine ventilation.

On the large first floor (two stories high) is assembled a conglomeration of mine and mill machinery — some full size pieces but mostly working models to scale. Their job is mineral dressing — the separation of valuable minerals from worthless by means which do not change the physical or chemical identity of the minerals.

There are machines to crush the rock, others to treat the ore by such methods as gravitation, magnetism, etc. Laboratories, and displays of practical tools such as drills, etc., complete the arsenal. However, both Professor Wolfe and Professor Barrett, head of the Mining Department, pointed out that in spite of all this practical equipment the department aimed at dispersing general principals of technique rather than specific and localized details.

Floor three was less exciting, having a library, research labs, classrooms, and showers and lockers particularly for the men coming from the crusher room below.

The next floor brought wafting down the halls the nostalgic odor of melting silver. This proved to be the assay department where samples of various crushed ores are very accurately tested for their valuable content. Gold, silver and copper are the chief metals used. Some original work is carried on, but most of the rocks (now crushed) are samples donated by various mining companies in the past.

Behind double sets of doors (to keep the dust out) are found ten balances any one of which was capable of weighing a hair—valuable information no doubt. The radio-active room contained a Griger Counter which ticked merrily away once a second just from the influence of cosmic rays.

In spite of the possible hazards involved, there have been no serious accidents in the Mill's history. Coveralls rather than lab coats are worn; pipes and switches are appropriately colored to indicate their content and danger. The whole building is kept amazingly clean considering the processes going on.

Finally, add to this the cheerfulness of the whole staff and it can be seen that it's a good place to work—and visit.

You Can Now Go To College Via Television

Morgantown, W.Va. (Exchange)—Western Reserve University, Cleveland, has found an almost sure cure for the eight o'clock class and the disastrous effect it has on attendance. It has introduced two classes over television with full university credit. The courses, scheduled for a thirteen-week run, will use visual materials as well as lectures, outside readings and assignments. As in other courses, students pay the regular fee, receive a syllabus, and write a final examination list on the campus.

"This momentous move" has "ramifactions dazzling to the imagination", comments The Daily Athenaeum, a student newspaper at West Virginia U. "The professors will soon find it necessary to use make-up. Textbooks and lecture material will be selected as much for their photogenic appeal as for their content. Everybody will try to get into the act."

CUP Says...

Montreal (CUP)—The Combined Charities appeal and the Blood Donor Clinic will be held during the same week this year, Jacques Tetrault, Student Council President announced recently. Starting on October 27th the thoughts of McGill students will be turned toward the needy. Arrangements have been made with the Red Cross to establish a blood clinic and interfaculty competition will be held for the greatest number of donations.

Twenty-five percent of the funds raised during the Combined Charities Appeal will be turned over to the Internation Student Service for aid to needy universities in Europe and Asia. The remaining $5,000 objective will be distributed among various city charities.

A variety night, speakers and other events have been planned to help raise money.

Montreal (CUP)—With no nominations for eleven positions in the Arts and Sciences Undergraduate Society still unfilled, the president threatened to have the constitution amended eliminating those positions next year, if there is not an increase in student interest.

The ASUS organizes many of the social positions at the university. Thirty-one campus clubs are also responsible to the organization.

The president also condemned student apathy for the lack of interest in Society affairs.

Montreal (CUP) — With enrolment down from the bulging veteran years, McGill still has an enrolment more than double the prewar figure, university authorities announced recently. Final count is not yet available but it is expected to reach about 6,900 students. The prosperous condition of enrolment at the present time wasgiven by university authorities as one reason for growth of the student body compared to pre-World War II.

A Coed Offered Job On 'Mademoiselle'

Edmonton (CUP) — Mademoiselle magazine is now accepting application from undergraduate women for membership on its 1951-2 College Board.

Girls who are accepted on the College Board do three assignments during the college year. Assignments give College Board members a chance to write features on campus life, to submit art work, fashion or promotion ideas for possible use in Mademoiselle; to develop their critical and creative talents; to discover their own abilities and job interests.

The top 20 College Board members win a Mademoiselle Guest Editorship and will be brought to New York next June to help write, edit and illustrate the August College Issue. They will receive a regular salary for their month's work, plus round-trip transportation to New York.

While in New York, each Guest Editor takes part in a full calendar of activities designed to give her a head start in her career. She interviews a celebrity in her chosen field, visits fashion workrooms, newspaper offices, stores and advertising agencies.

October is the deadline for applying to the College Board. The application is a criticism of either Mademoiselle's August 1951 College issue or the September issue.

Successful candidates will be notified of acceptance on the College Board the first week in November; the first College Board assignment will appear in Mademoiselle's November issue.

McGill All Out For Tour

Montreal (CUP)—McGill plans to bedeck itself in all the colours of bunting, flags and standards of eleven years ago in honour of the Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh. Like Toronto the visit will last only fifteen minutes, greater part of which time will be spent in an informal reception to be held in the Arts building.

Stands will be erected along the route on which the royal couple will drive, with seating arranged by faculty. All women students, however, will assemble in one section wearing scarlet blazers and grey skirts. University cadet contingents will also be in attendance.

Students are taking an active part in the preparation of the reception as volunteers are helping in organization and decorating. "Many co-eds have turned out in response to a call of assistance," Col. Forbes, in charge of decorations, reported, "and they have already sewn hundreds of yards of cloth. He also pointed out that a great variety of work like painting, rivetting, boring holes and fastening shields, is available for the volunteers he requested through the McGill daily.

Coeds Not Worth Dating Skule Debaters Decide

"In this debate we must strip off all pretences and lay bare the naked truth" said Heinz Feldberg, Engineering grad, first speaker in support of the motion that "Coeds do not make good dates." Five courageous females, one of which spoke in opposition to the motion, attended the first debate of the Engineering Debating Society this season. It was finally decided by a vote of 116 to 48 that coeds did not make good dates.

An audience that overflowed into the aisles and even into the hallway jammed a room in the Mechanical Building at noon yesterday to "find out how other Skulemen feel on coeds."

Feldberg said that coeds were of two species—the sexless work animal, and the workless sex animal. "The first species," he commented, "is of no importance to us. But the second, those with sex, came only to university to catch a man," he said. Referring to the recent debate at St. Hilda's (asking that men be forced to marry at 25), Feldberg declared that "feminine graces had sunk to a low ebb indeed, when they had to rely on the long arm of the law." The coed only offered her date academic interest, he concluded.

John Cocking, III Elect., second speaker for the motion added that coeds who are exposed to higher education were different from other members of their sex. While the high school girl just wanted a good time, the university coed wanted her man to be able to talk on a high intellectual level. A date with a coed was full of criticisms, he said, and ended in front of the residence where "a dozen girls and boys are standing around wondering which of the others will go in first."

Speaking in opposition, L. Samuels, IV Eng. Bus., asked if women were necessary and answered with an emphatic "what else is there?" "Girls are here to stay," he said, "and in Engineering our motto is 'Beggars can't be choosers'." The coeds of the University of Toronto are beautiful, graceful, intelligent, and have no morals, he added. "Just give her a little squeeze, then get drunk and have fun," Samuels concluded.

The only female speaker, Gerry Johnson, Engineering Stores clerk and former Western coed, warned the audience that she had never had a date with a coed. Opposing the resolution, she said that girls did not look forward to expensive dates and campus-popular escorts, but rather favored a "good time" and a "nice boy." Speaking personally, Miss Johnson felt that "doctors and engineers were much more intriguing than a boy in pass arts."

A speaker from the floor asked Miss Johnson what she considered a "nice boy," to which the blushing answer was "a boy who is presentable, intelligent, and lots of fun." "Lots of fun means originality in ideas and new places to go," she replied to another question from the floor.

An ex-artsman believed the coeds in residence had to "give their all" on one date because house rules only allowed a few free nights a month. He suggested that coeds made good dates.

"I've never been to a debate in all my life," commented Bob Ross, I Civil., "but (sigh) I just wanted to see Gerry." That was an opinion of many Skulemen.

Stadium Show

No Head Tells All It Offers

The Blue and White Society announced last night that they have arranged for the appearance of a famous team who have been attracting record crowds wherever they appear, for the stadium show on Friday night. Unfortunately publicity director Hugh Niblock forgot their names and The Varsity was unable to find out who they are before the paper went to press. However, Niblock says that they are a truly great team and possess plenty of talent.

Long John Northmore and his Helldrivers are coming back to the campus after their thrilling race around the track at Varsity for last year's stadium show. Assisting Northmore will be Sam Aaron, Jack Marigold, Harold Nashman, and Irwin Pasternak.

The Skule Quartet is also returning. The Four Flushers won the first Hart House Barbershop quartette contest two years ago and were in last year's stadium show. They are perhaps best remembered for their renditions of the "Tennessee Waltz" and "Cigarettes, Whisky, and Wild, Wild Women'.

The Blue and White Band will be joined by the Queen's Pipe Band at the show. A new sets of lyrics for the song "Follow the Blues" have been written and will be introduced at the stadium show. Bruce Snell, assistant director of the All Varsity Chorus, has formed a singing chorus of 60 voices to sing the new lyrics as well as other university songs.

The show will also have a dancing

Where's The Horse

The Varsity horse has not been at any of the football games this year after four years of confounding Varsity's enemies and chasing cheerleaders. The Varsity horse is a tradition now and it is hoped that he will be back out at the Queen's game this Saturday to do his part in welcoming back the graduates.

Residence Raids Mean Summons

(Reprinted from The McGill Daily)

An attempt at raiding the women's residence at Queen's would mean a summons to court, student leaders warned overspirited young men at Queen's.

And at Queen's University disciplinary action could mean just that, for law enforcement is a student problem on that campus.

In practice, the offender is apprehended by a constable or chief of police. He is summoned to court at the order of the sheriff. The crier declares the court open, with the Chief Justice in attendance. If the charge is serious there may be a trial by jury.

But everyone concerned is a student.

Essentially a court of justice, Queen's Alma Mater Society Court —by constitution the supreme tribunal of the student body — decides on question of student discipline involving individuals and organizations under the jurisdiction of the Alma Mater, Queen's Student Council.

The Court, officially responsible for the punishment of all violations of regulations, resolutions, orders and governing laws of the Society, is entirely composed of appointed students. Its decisions cannot be overruled by the executive of the AMS.

A Chief Justice, appointed by the AMS at the recommendation of the retiring justice, is responsible for the proper conduct of the court. He is in his final year and serves a one-year term. Two Junior Justices assist him.

Order on the campus is maintained by a vigilante committee. A prosecuting attorney heads the committee, prepares evidence, and prosecutes all cases brought before the court.

A sheriff is responsible for the reporting of "improper conduct." A chief of police and as many as three constables attend major campus events.

Constables receive a small remuneration for their attendance (unaccompanied) at major social events. Dressed in plainclothes, they wear an armband for identification. They remain throughout the evening, responsible through the court for their own conduct and the conduct of others. It is their stated duty to evict disorderly patrons, whether AMS members or not, and to file charges against students, who, in their opinion, behave in an unbecoming manner.

If a jury is warranted, a woman's student organization representative is required on the jury in the case of a coed defendant. A unanimous decision by the jury is invariably required.

If no major issue is involved, a ruling of the judges is final.

"We are proud of our student court," a Queen's student has remarked. "It really works."

One World Foundation Said Faith

"The Baha'i World Faith is a world religion embracing people from many lands, creeds and colors," said Mr. Pem Piggott, B.Sc., P. Li., at an open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group yesterday. "Baha'i —a new world leadership—is prepared to lead the world to peace, to a divine solution to international economic problems, to unity in government, language, race and religion".

The speaker went on to suggest that there is a need today for a concept greater than nationalism and racialism. "Religion will be the basis for world unity in all spheres," he said. "There is only one God, and He will remain the same for all peoples, no matter what concept any given religious group may have of Him."

"By universal education, another Baha'i principle, we will learn to understand the actions and thinking of those on the other side of the globe. In this way only can we hope to abolish prejudice. There is only one race, the human race; and there is only one religion, the religion of God," Mr. Piggott continued.

"Traditional attitudes condition our thinking and prevent absorption of new ideas. We must learn to sort out our thought by careful analysis and then independently investigate until we find the truth," he concluded.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Nobody yet has solved the difficulty of making opera into successful cinema. (There are rumors that Gian-Carlo Menotti has made his THE MEDIUM into a good film in Italy.) That grandiloquent effort, TALES OF HOFFMAN, is good proof of the usual failure.

Messrs. Powell and Pressburger tried to dress up the opera and do succeed in holding your interest most of the way. But sometimes opera intrudes and bogs things down. This is of course apart from the fact that in HOFFMAN imagination overwhelmed taste.

So it seems that until somebody comes up with a different approach or compromise, or writes an opera especially for the screen (somebody like Leonard Bernstein perhaps), we have to take either opera or film. When the both are combined, it's like having large raw lumps in your mashed potatoes.

IL TROVATORE (at the Studio) is an ambitious try to solve the problem. It doesn't get anywhere. But if you like this Verdi opera, you would enjoy it.

To start with, director Gallone was faced with a corny melodrama, of violent deaths and passionate love, couched in some stirring and often heavy-handed music. Gallone has inserted an introduction with no singing. The acting is sometimes reminiscent of the obvious silent flicker technique, but things happen and move.

Then the opera starts in earnest. We get passable singing. The tenor sounds better tonally than swooner Mario Lanza, but perhaps that is not much of a comment. The music is fine too. But every time the singing starts, things slow down.

The cinematic bits come in the introduction, the tournament where Manrico Trovatore proves himself before the fair and adoring Leonora, and in a gigantic spectacle of a battle scene. In this last, when hundreds of mounted knights engage in combat, we see that the director remembers his D. W. Griffith well.

The English sub-titles are happily scanty and well-placed, but they are augmented by an English narration which is often superfluous or corny.

The short features are two vintage technicolor sport shorts and a cartoon. The sport shorts are dismal — the glare of the color process makes you fish for sunglasses. But the cartoon is one of the Mr. Magoo series put out by the UPA people (Gerald McBoing-Boing). It is fun.

The Studio Theatre is the renovated former King or Kine Theatre, of course. The front has been completely modernized, and the plan is to embark on a first-run policy that will fit the Studio in with the other art houses, The Towne, the International, the Odeon-Hyland.

BIG LITTLE THEATRE

Hart House Drama

By DAVID PEDDIE

In the thirties Hart House Theatre had a reputation of being the best "Little Theatre" in Canada, and under different directors a number of now well-known Canadian actors and actresses got their start in the theatre. After the war the Board of Syndics appointed a new director, Robert Gill, and at his insistence granted permission to cast all plays from the student body of the university. Mr. Gill was warned that he would not get enough students, but his decision proved a wiser one than was generally thought. He was besieged by aspiring actors and actresses all clamouring for parts and he was able to present plays with enormous casts, such as JULIUS CAESAR and THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH. These first years were extremely successful. There seemed to be a large group of adequately trained people who were willing to give up a lot of their time to rehearsing, and working on their parts.

This original group has now graduated and the most notable among them have made acting and the theatre their permanent field of activity. The Straw Hat Players in Muskoka was made up completely of university actors, and most of the other "SUMMER stock companies" in Kingston, Peterborough and Niagara Falls have had a number of the Hart House group. Many of them have gone on to New York and London now, and they all seem to be having reasonable success for young performers who have not had too much profes ional experience. It is a noteworthy achievement that so many have been able to make the jump to professional theatre.

Also it would seem to indicate a growing interest in serious theatre, as opposed to the highly social (fashionable) "Little Theatre" of the thirties, and this social aspect is still strong in the smaller communities of the province.

With all these talented people Mr. Gill was able to bring along less experienced students. It was his policy to give first-year people small parts and let them work up to "leads" slowly. In this way he could assure himself of a permanent group, although its memoers were always changing.

That was the case—but now there seems to be a change. After years of slowly building up an audience, and making university students more stage-conscious, Mr. Gill is finding that performers are becoming scarce. There are too many stage shows on the campus, and the talent must be spread thinner. The college revues and drama club productions, plus the ALL-VARSITY REVUE all take students away from Hart House shows. To top it all off—students are not attending plays as they once did. Perhaps there is so much going on that Hart House Theatre is the first to suffer. But if this lack of interest increases Mr. Gill will be forced to bring in actors who have graduated from the university. It seems a pity, when the university has provided them such an opportunity to act in, and see good plays, that students should not capitalize on it.

Perhaps it is also a result of increased apathy that the plays in the last few years have not been of the same high calibre as in previous years. Mr. Gill has to attract an audience, and the only classic dramas that are acceptable are the works of Shaw and Shakespeare. But there are other plays—good plays, that are not as acceptable to—shall we say—a Broadway audience, and these plays Mr. Gill dare not put on the boards in case he loses money. If the students supported Hart House Theatre as they should he would not have the same worry, and the students would be treated to something that cannot be seen in any other theatre. Such a play is THE INFERNAL MACHINE which was one of the first shows that Mr. Gill produced.

Beside this criticism of the type of plays now being done, we might lodge a complaint against the "big" productions which are the rule at Hart House. Such preoccupation with paint and lights, costumes and colours can only "make the judicious grieve". Certainly many of us would be just as happy to see plays that have not quite such elaborate settings—that do not "o'er-step the modesty of nature". Surely there could be more attention paid to the words of the dramatist and the acting of the actors. For though there is a lack of experience in the students at Hart House Theatre, a good play, seriously and honestly acted, can be equally enjoyable and commendable, even in the mere attempt. Lister Sinclair, Toronto writer and actor, once said, "It is bet-

Players Guild Present Play, Fry Records

The U.C. Players' Guild held their October meeting in the Women's Union last night. A few ventured through the rain to see Barrie's famous TWELVE POUND LOOK, and listen to some recorde of Christopher Fry's success THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING.

Pearl Parnes, June Rowatt, and Walter Stanwick acted out the Barrie play somewhat seriously but they could be easily heard, and they managed to convey the characters with ability. It was a thrill to be able to hear the noted John Gielgud reading Fry's remarkable poetry during the latter half of the program. It is fortunate for student-actors to be able to hear this kind of careful elocution.

Quebec's Artists Featured At HH

The shows at the HH Art Gallery are changed every two weeks or every month. The present group of paintings were all done by contemporary Quebec artists. John Kamenicek, IV Architecture, one of the committeemen looking after the art gallery, said that the noon talks on artists will be held from 5 to 6 on Wednesday alternatively with the Wednesday night recitals. Women are not allowed to enter the Gallery from 4 to 5 on Wednesday afternoons.

Dave Gardner said the next show from October 29 to November 12 will consist of about forty to fifty paintings and drawings by John Alfsen. Mr. Alfsen teaches at the Ontario College of Art. He studied in Belgium and the continent. He draws his inspiration from Rubens. Durer, and Rembrandt. He has had a contract with Ringling Brothers Circus for the past two years. Some of the drawings shown will be of circus animals; also there will be oil portraits and interesting paintings, said Mr. Harper.

After Mr. Alfsen's show, an unusual set of paintings by Aba Bayefsky will be exhibited. Mr. Bayefsky saw the concentration camp in Germany after the last way, and was deeply touched by the sufferings of the war's unfortunates. His painting are "clever" drawings of sufferings, with a pacifist theme, said Mr. Kemenicek. Mr. Bayefsky will also speak to the students.

Track Meet Today

The Intermediate and Senior Intercollegiate track meets have been postponed due to inclement weather, and will be held today at Varsity Stadium. The time of day is unchanged, still 1 p.m.

Competing in the Senior meet will be Toronto, McGill, Western, and McMaster. In the Intermediate meet will be Toronto, Ontario Agricultural College, and Waterloo College. These meets are held in Toronto only once in every three years, so few students will have a chance of seeing the spectacle again during their undergraduate years.

The members of the track teams will meet again in the dressing rooms at 11 a.m. today.

The opening track events will be the Intermediate 440 and the Senior 120 yard high hurdles, and the opening field events will be the Intermediate and Senior discus.

Blues Take Int. Soccer

The Intermediate Soccer Team handed out a 5-0 defeat to the Mustangs' Colts yesterday afternoon in London. The score is indicative of the play, as only a wet field, heavy ball prevented the Blues' forwards capitalizing on their chances. Play was concentrated in the Western area of the field and at times it appeared as an extremely one-sided affair.

Munday, Blatty and Mat Denzia scored one each for the Blues while Howard Ashbourne netted two.

Victoria Overpowers Medsmen 11-5 In Interfaculty Football Struggle

By BRUCE NORTH

An improved Victoria football squad which showed a few flashes of power edged Senior Meds yesterday afternoon by an 11-5 count. Although the game was played on a greasy gridiron, with a heavy ball, fumbles didn't play too important a part. The Meds team just wasn't as strong as the Scarlet and Gold, especially in reserves where they were completely outclassed.

Both teams showed little in the way of a pass attack. The Victoria team stuck almost completely to the ground. The Doctors threw more passes, however they weren't very successful with them.

Victoria's freshman quarterback, John Fowler shared the pivot spot with veteran Lorne Lodge and capably directed his team to both their touchdowns. If the ex-North Toronto boy can throw a forward pass, and it is said he can, the Victsters have found the missing link in their offensive.

Victoria took an early lead in the first quarter when Georg Hevenor got off a low kick that landed in the middle of 3 Medsmen and bounded another thirty yards behind the goal line. Wheeler fell on it and was rouged.

The first Vic touchdown was set up when a Meds pass rebounded into Goodfellow's hands. Goodfellow then carried the ball twice for a first down. Goodfellow took the ball again for another two yards and Fowler's pro pass was good for six. Atkin carried it down to the four yard line for a first down. Atkin then took a handoff from Fowler and went over right guard for the major. Wooton missed the convert.

In the third quarter Victoria made their first real display of brilliance. Stipec's fumble was recovered on the centre stripe. Wooton, Goodfellow and Gowdie then carried the ball on five successive plays for thirty yards. It looked like the Vic march was stopped when the next two plays advanced the ball only one yard. However George Hevenor faked a kick on the third down and tore off fifteen yards around the left end. Goodfellow went for six more. After his pro pass was knocked down, Fowler made a long pitchout to Goodfellow who went over the goal line standing up. Wooton's convert failed.

The doctors finally hit the scoring sheet in the late stages of the game. Victoria's Alexander took a Fowler pass and fumbled when he was tackled by several Meds players. Meds recovered and then on the next play proceeded to fool the Victsters with a real oldie, th sneaker (the cads). Coppolind took a pass from Wheeler at the Vic fourty fi and scampered the rest of the wa for a touchdown. The convert failed.

Coppolind played a great game for Meds especially in the pass catching department. Wilkes at quarte did the best he could with a team that dressed only 17 men. King of Meds and Rogers of Victoria were tackling well from the centre secondary position. Black Bob Godson wasn't (sob) in action.

Down Mustangs In Sr. Soccer Tilt Blue Defence Tops

The Blues had a field day of it. A wet field, a heavy ball, and plenty of determination sent them away on an errand that paid off to the tune of 7-2 against U. of Western Ontario Mustangs. They took the lead early in the first half and at no time showed signs of letting go.

The game started off under a fine drizzle of cold rain. For the first five minutes we shook in our shoes, but it wasn't soccer jitters, we soon found out, but the cold damp air that had the Blues playing the way they did. But ten minutes after the kick-off the Blue and White machine was in gear. Newt Reid — that unpredictable booter — opened at the tally sheet. This infuriated the Mustangs. Despite fine clearances by their backs and Herculean efforts on the part of their net-minder the Blues were determined to win in London.

But throwing the Mustangs wasn't an entirely easy affair. Jimmy Martinez, their centre-forward, made a beautiful pass to Kent Hay, playing left half, who made a tame shot, but which nevertheless was an equaliser. An even more alert Blue team was on the field. Newt Reid made a try on goal on a pass from Manuel Atucha. It rebounded from the goal post and back to Manuel's feet, who made no mistake.

Thus encouraged the Blues seemed to decide that it ought to be all or nothing at all. Settling down to constructive passing, confident because of having the better run of play, and encouraged by the thought of a few players who enjoyed playing under the conditions that existed, the Blues played a type of soccer rarely seen in the College League.

The Mustangs, every one of them, were now playing as if they were full-backs. The goal-keeper was hackeneyed, as only weak shooting prevented the Blues from doubling the margin of victory. Manuel Atucha with two goals to his credit, played his best game in many moons. Newt Reid was as sure-footed as he has ever been. Gil Toppin, Ken Jessop, Bobby Ross each with one goal, were standouts and deserving of more than mere passing mention.

If the Blues had a strong forward line, the defence was a tower. The fine clearing of Tom Broadhurst and Wally Eze, were fortresses of power, and prevented the net-minder from showing his worth.

Western, with the material at their command, played well. Their forward line shows promise and in Martinez, Hay, Church and Campbell they have promising players. Their defence was extremely tame.

A 2-1 lead together with playing conditions that were favourable to them sent the Blues hunting. Manuel and Gil Toppin were machine-like with their passes. One of these passes soon paid off beautifully. Gil made a pass to Manuel, was cleared after some bungling in front of the Mustangs' net. But Gil was determined and immediately upon receiving the nicest pass we have seen for a long time from Ken Jessop, made a shot which paid off handsomely. The score was now 3-1, and after a few offside penalties against the now anxious Blues the half time whistle went.

Early in the second half Newt Reed again opened the tally card. On a strong pass from Bobby Ross, Newt made a fool of the Mustangs' net-minder. Soon after, Ken Jessop had the keeper lying in one corner as the ball trickled past him in the other. Manuel Atucha had more ambition. London and one goal did not seem to be all he wanted and after a strong and valuable combination which Ken Jessop found that he had none but the goal-tender to beat, faked and tricked him to the wrong side of the net. Bobby Ross had up to this time stayed on the forward line without personal reward and seemed not content to leave it at that. He used his head to push between the bars a pass that came his way.

The game at this point became somewhat rough as the field, now more wet and slippery, gave the impression that players were intent upon playing each other rather than the ball. Both sides suffered as penalties were handed out. The Blues pulled up their socks perhaps with the desire to bury the dead. But the Mustangs were not quite dead. A fine backline clearance by Whites sent their forward line down. The Blues' net-minder in an effort to get the ball had gone to far out in the field of play. He failed to collect the ball and Church claimed at outside left scored Western's second counter.

Two minutes of fair exchanges followed and the game ended. The Blues had once more chalked up a convincing victory

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

The Intercollegiate Track meets, scheduled to be held yesterday at the stadium, were postponed on account of the three-day downpour, and will be held today at the same time, 1 o'clock.

Most of the track this morning was under two inches of water, and when the Toronto teams met at the stadium the prevailing mood was for everybody to take the first streetcar home. Even the pigeons picking worms on the field were floundering a little. Field events in the rain are dangerous as well as very uncomfortable; a javelin thrower if he skidded on his long step before the throw could gnarl himself up pretty badly, while a pole vaulter, I imagine (not being able to pole vault any higher than one of our office chairs, myself), wouldn't even get insurance from Lloyd's on a day like yesterday.

This is the first time since long before anyone around here can remember that an Intercollegiate meet has been postponed because of rain. Time was when the meets used to be held on Friday, which meant that they couldn't be postponed because of the football game the next day. That is why they are now held on a Wednesday.

Putting the meet off a day meant a considerable financial sacrifice to McGill and Western, who have to keep their teams in hotels for another night. Ivor Wynn, McMaster Athletic Director, was here this morning while his team awaited word in Hamilton as to whether there would be a meet or not, and OAC's squad was poised in their bus at 11:30 this morning when wired not to come.

All in all, the postponement should do the Toronto Senior team quite a favour, since Murray Gaziuk, depended on in the 880, has a charlie horse which he is treating and hopes will be okay tomorrow, and miler Chuck Wortman has a wee dose of the flu.

The Jim Thorpe story now showing at the University should have inspirational qualities for any of our trackmen who might happen to see it. Thorpe's first athletic feat at Carlisle (in the movie) was to run the 220 in 23 flat with his street clothes on — and then keep on running a few more miles. Nobody at Varsity has done 23 flat for a long time even in a track suit (or without one either, no doubt. A moot point, whether times made by men not wearing a track suit are official or not. Will refer it to the Hart House sub-committee in charge of determining proper standards of dress).

The movie devotes several good sequences to Thorpe's almost superhuman track and field accomplishments, which are much less publicized than his football exploits. The biographical side of it is a refreshing departure from the routine Hollywood theme of three-cheers-for-the-hero, which has marred several sports movies of recent years.

The St. Mike's A lacrosse squad took the Meds I team into camp yesterday by an 8-6 count. Murphy of the double Blue was the chief threat for the winners, getting five counters to lead the individual scoring of the game. Two of his goals were on penalty shots. The Medsmen got off to an early start, and were two goals up on St. Mike's at the end of the first quarter, but the Mikemen roared back with three counters before the half to take the lead and hold on to it for the rest of the game.

Both teams notched a single in the third quarter, and the final stanza saw St. Mike's score 3 to the Medsmen's two and put the game on ice. Rope, Gross and Talion were the other scorers for the winners, while Gear and Kilty with two counters apiece, and Vance and Sims with one apiece were the goal-getters for Meds. Three of the Meds goals were counted on penalty shots.

In the first of two Intramural soccer games played yesterday, SPS III downed Junior Vic 1-0. Trillia scored a single in the other game to lead Architecture to a 1-0 win over the Trinity B team.

The Trinity B volleyball squad defeated a crew from St. Mike's 15-8, 8-15 and 15-12. The Trinity A team were defeated 11-15, 15-11 and 15-3 by the Junior SPS volleyball team.

5 Champions On Swim Team For Varsity

By ALLAN ROGER

The 1952 Olympics loom large these days for four swimmers at Varsity. Almost any day at four in the afternoon Bill McIlroy, George Stulac, Doug Gibson and John Bate can be seen pounding up and down the Hart House pool or working on the weights in the boxing room — all under the keen eye of the new Varsity Swimming coach, Cressy McCatty.

Let's take a quick look at the records of these five top members of Varsity's coming acquatic powerhouse.

Bill McIlroy, II Pre Med, swam on the Blue team last year. He set meet records at Rochester and Syracuse. He holds Ontario and Canadian Junior back stroke records and placed second by a split second in the Canadian Senior backstroke event in Vancouver this summer.

Doug Gibson, III U.C., was a member of the 1948 Canadian Olympic team — need we say more save that he won three events, breaking three Intercollegiate records last year.

George Stulac, I PHE, is an all-round swimmer who placed second in three events in the Ontario Championships and went to the Vancouver meet where he was rated among Canada's top seven swimmers.

John Bate has a similar record in the breast stroke department. He holds several Ontario Junior Championships and placed second in the Ontario Senior competition this past summer. He is now in I PHE.

The fifth member of the power quintet is Cressy McCatty, the new Blue swimming coach. A Varsity aquatic champion in his own right and U. of T. graduate, he has been coaching the strong West End YMCA swimming team. He has been coaching McIlroy, Bate, and Stulac for the past several years during which time they have set together several Medley relay records on the Ontario and Canadian Championship level.

These four big Blue swimmers and their coach are working at breakneck speed on their training for the Olympics. They will also be the nucleus of the strongest Varsity swim squad in many years. Good luck to these Big Five. We'll be hearing from you.

The girls from St. Mike's downed the POT squad 38-13 in a league basketball game played yesterday afternoon. Kay Schenk paced the winners with a 21 point effort. St. Mike's took the lead right from the opening whistle and had run up a 19-4 lead by half time.

End Dispute Smash Steps Radicals Call

Montreal (CUP) — The Campus Radical Club is the latest organization to be formed on the McGill campus, the McGill Daily reported last week. The club is designed to provide dissatisfied students with an opportunity of doing something, either constructive or destructive, about their dissatisfaction.

Among the proposed plans is the settlement of the Arts steps problem. The Club proposes to blow up the steps and end the dispute entirely.

Most of the work of the organization will be handled by the committees. There will be the Committee on Demolition and Explosives, on Rabble Rousing, on Cruelty to Animals (including humans), and on Social Tension and relaxation, The Daily said.

SCIENCE NOTES

Clouds And Men

By JIM ANDERSON

I marvel at the ways of God,
For time and time again
I see Him paint such lovely clouds
Above such awkward men.

Some of these awkward men have not only marvelled at the beauty of clouds, but have tried to understand them. The many cloud forms have been labelled with Latin tags which classify them roughly into four main groups.

Cirrus clouds are four to five miles high and contain only a small amount of water vapor in the form of ice crystals. Their appearance has been compared to feathers, locks of hair, and mares' tails.

Lower than these are the billowy white cumulus clouds. Their thick dome-shaped upper surface and flat horizontal base gives them a shape similar to an anvil. The thunderhead cloud which looms on the horizon whenever the science editor forgets his rain coat is a beautiful but nasty member of this family.

Stratus clouds cover the sky with a fog-like blanket. They are usually within 3,000 feet of the earth's surface.

Enter the villain. The Nimbus cloud is low, ragged, and dark. From it fall the gentle rains from heaven which gladden the crops but cause profanity in human circles.

The rain it raineth on the just
And also on the unjust fella;
But chiefly on the just; because
The unjust steals the just's umbrella.

A cloud contains infinite numbers of solid particles such as dust, smoke, and pollen, which form a nucleus for liquid particles. These remain suspended due to the lift of air currents from the earth which originally formed the cloud.

The air around us contains varying amounts of water which is present as an invisible vapor. However, as the temperature of the air decreases, less water can be held in this form and so it is condensed and becomes visible as steam. This occurs in nature when a body of surface air rises by convection, reaching a higher and cooler atmosphere. There the original water vapor content is too great for the new air temperature and the excess forms a cloud.

In the evening when convection currents diminish due to decreased heat energy from the earth, clouds descend. As they become warmed, the water particles evaporate and again become invisibly "dissolved" in the air. If convection has been sufficiently strong to cause coalescence of large visible droplets, some may be precipitated as rain.

Recent experiments in rain making have shown that every rain drop originates as an ice crystal. Artificial rainstorms have been made by dropping small pellets of solid carbon dioxide through supercooled clouds and thus initiating precipitation. Richard Armour thinks that it is easier than that:

The Indians chant and dance about
To break a crop-destroying drought,
But I've a simpler means by car;
I only have to wash my car.

THE FRENCH CLUB

Gallic Savoire - Faire

What do people think of first, when trying to call to mind things typical of France? Gay and spicy things—Paris . . . wine . . . the can-can . . . crepes suzette . . . the Eiffel Tower . . . Pigalle . . . taxicabs—these are the first pictures; the more more serious ones don't come till later.

Why does French express the inexpressible? Why do we fall back on piquant words and phrases so hard to translate, like chic, sangfroid, savoir-faire, or roue?

What is the appeal of a perfume named "Toujours Moe" or "Indiscrete"? and why does a rabbit coat look less scruffy when called "Lapin"?

Maybe it is because living, to the French, is an art, and not just a function. Maybe it is because they know the secret, better than any other people, of how to enjoy themselves.

In any case, this is the idea which, under the surface, animates the U.C. French Club. Its meetings are attended by people who know that they have been bitten by the French bug. They come, not with the sole purpose of systematically improving their French by elevating conversation, but primarily to have a good time in a way as close to the French way as possible. The entertainment (never too frighteningly highbrow) varies—a short play, a novelty of some sort, or often a skit written by the students. Whatever it is, they try to make it good. Then everybody sings—songs like "Vous oubliez votre cheval", or "Boum", which can't be beaten by any other songs in any language. After that, there is usually dancing, and always food. Since it would be a betrayal of French principles to be content with stale cookies, the Victuallers-in-chief of the club always try to get something a bit special, and good.

For the first meeting tonight, (Oct 25) there will be two skits, "Les Memoires Criminels de Napoleon Bonaparte", and "Vive la Grenouille!". Nobody has to be Charles Boyer to enjoy these.

Let us all up and disobey the prudish verse which warns:

"Say 'yes' to the bashful
young lad at a dance,
But 'no' to the man who's been living in France."

Just 10 Days Left For UC Debaters To Enter Series

UC students have a week and a half left in which to register for the Robinette Debates. So far, around twenty teams have entered for the series of impromptu debates and Lit. officials hope to have 40 teams in the competition before the lists are closed.

The next debate of the UC parliamentary Debating club will be next Tuesday, when the effect of television on Canadian culture will be considered. The debating parliament has debates every second week at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room.

The Prize

According to the British bookmakers, we are writing this editorial on the eve of a Conservative election in Great Britain. And bookmakers, being the cool dispassionate souls they are, are not too apt to be wrong. But, with anything that concerns people, you never can be entirely sure.

The campaign, for the most part has been quiet — at least by North American standards. It has seemed almost as if everyone, from the contestants to the electors has been waiting with considerable interest for the results.

By and large, the campaign has been concerned with personalities rather than with issues. At least this is true of domestic issues. A Conservative victory will not mean a return to free enterprise to the prewar days and the abandonment of the welfare state.

The whole trend towards socialism is far too strong for the Conservatives to stop. They can only be conservative within the socialist framework of present day Britain. So far they have been playing their role of mild socialism with a faintly disgruntled air. They promise to play the Labour game better, but beyond this there is very little for them to say.

The Labour Party is superficially at least in a worse position. They have held office during six years of repeated economic crises. In addition to this, they have been forced to witness the progressively dwindling power of Britain in her overseas possessions.

As a party dedicated to the principles of socialism, the Labour government cannot but view with some sympathy the nationalistic aspirations of heretofore British colonies. You cannot be the imperialist and espouse the ideals which some of your colonists have adopted at the same time.

Yet in some ways the Briish people, if not the Labour Party, can do just that. While they can believe in the welfare state at home, the fine traditions of British imperialism, of their place of leadership in the past is too strong for them to give up without a whimper.

Undoubtedly, the split between the moderates and leftists, the Attlee and Bevan groups in the Labour party did as much to precipitate an election as the virtual stalemate within the Commons. Yet this would hardly assure a Labour victory. On the other hand, this split at the present time had been nicely covered over by the general support of Attlee policy.

It would seem that the election based on the domestic problem alone is just a question of "who will do the dirty job best". The Labour Party has shown on the whole that it can do the job as well as can be expected. The Conservatives promise to do better but have very few concrete proposals to offer.

It is in the international field, however, that a change of government might result in a new and different approach. "The last prize I seek is peace" is Churchill's final pre-election war cry. Here, if anywhere, lies the key to a Conservative victory. Here is the one point at which Britons may rally to the side of their gallant old statesman. Peace would be a fine prize, and if the British would happily accept it if they are convinced that there is any possibilty of success.

Seminars

Why But How ?

By PEARL PARNES

Last weekend the International Relations Club held its first seminar at Caledon Hills Farm. The subject for discussion was "the effects of the US-USSR clash on the other countries of the world".

The weekend was a success. We came to no world-shattering conclusions. We didn't even plan another club to set out to change the world. But we learned something. And more important, we threw out some ideas we had been collecting and let the members toss them around. Some ideas were rejected, some were added, all were modified and organized into a cohesive form. And this was the purpose of the weekend.

The main session of the weekend came Sunday morning, when we talked about what we, as Canadians, could do to relieve the tension that had resulted from the clash of ideologies. One of the most important ways, we felt, was to sponsor more of these seminars, particularly extended ones like the International Student Seminar held during August, where students of all political opinions and cultural backgrounds could get together and air their peeves. There is a tremendous difference between lashing out at a country, and remembering a citizen of it with whom you talked and sang and walked. It makes you a little less sure of generalizations. Maybe before you believe too much propaganda, you can write a letter and try to find out the other side of the story. And you remember that students of all backgrounds can get along, and become friends, really close friends.

But you've got to have support for projects such as these. Last summer, the International Student Seminar almost failed, due entirely to financial reasons. Not until last spring was the national office of ISS confident enough in its ability to hold the seminar to begin choosing delegates.

As a result, little publicity could be given to inform students, and many already had summer jobs. Because the site was in Canada, due again, largely, to finances, it held less appeal to potential candidates than had seminars of previous years, when Canadians could get off their own soil for broader perspective.

Finally the choices were made, and even then there was some doubt whether sufficient money would be raised. But a miserable month of begging, cajoling, headaches and jaunts around the country ended in scraping together enough money to make final arrangements.

So the seminar began, and before long we were told that unless $2,000 was found somewhere, the originally-scheduled five weeks would be slashed to four. Some of the sources of money that had been expected, like the Duplessis government, had failed to come through. And it resulted what should finally silence all disgruntled people who give no money themselves, but resent the idea of sending a few students on a "free holiday".

We were angry — and just a little bitter. Two thousand dollars isn't very much money, not when you've let down some barriers that expensive diplomatic conferences couldn't budge. Particularly when you consider the expense of the many daily take-offs of the many jets at the Canadian National Exhibition.

So we were mad. Not mad that we couldn't extend our "holiday" (most of which was spent in hard work), but because we knew the importance of the seminar. We had aired some of the problems involved in the touchy question of Kashmir. We had heard the Germans' side of the last war, and the pro-and-con arguments on rearmament and conscription. Even if we disagreed or thought some of the arguments were weak, we at least had some facts to back up what had only been prejudice.

But we, the Canadian hosts, had failed. At the IRC weekend, we had talked about what we, as Canadians, could do towards securing a permanent peace. We decided we could set an example by the co-operation which members of the Commonwealth shared. Canada, with many of the same ideals and desires of the United States, but the object of far less distrust and attack than our more powerful neighbour, could play an important part in leading the way into countries that feared the United States. Above all we could be more critical of propaganda, less afraid to face issues clearly, and less ready to fall into a general mass hysteria. We could learn a lot more facts and think a lot more like the Europeans, almost without exception, had shown us to be their habit at the ISS Seminar.

And this again underlines the importance of propects like the ISS Seminar and the IRC Weekend. The response last weekend was excellent. The easy atmosphere of living together for a weekend or a month leads to much more letting-down of hair than formal discussions around a conference table.

Surely this real student action deserves support. The ISS conference could not have prevented war in Korea, or the crises in Iran or in Egypt. But more of these seminars, a lot more of these chances for students, who really are the future leaders of their countries, to talk together, can go a long way towards getting rid of misunderstanding and prejudice.

OUR READERS WRITE

Keenleyside Again

Editor, The Varsity,

Mr. Engelbert has, happily, seen fit to clarify his point of view. It is amazing that a person with no opinion can suddenly develop a firm and unwavering conviction. Evidently my remarks (The Varsity, 17 Oct.) were misconscrued as a personal attack upon Mr. Engelbert. It was not my intention to become involved in a puerile personality joust. Shame Mr. Engelbert, was the issue not greater than that?

Before continuing I wish to make it clear that this will be my last letter to The Varsity dealing with a question that is rapidly degenerating into a mere verbal conflict.

Broadly speaking, Mr. Engelbert is not to be censured for his latest literary effort. On the contrary he should be complimented on certain aspects of his letter and encouraged. It is evident, not from the content, but from the style in which it was written that, basically, we stand together on the question which he originally so enigmatically posed. I am always gratified to see a mild-mannered person with an admittedly sheltered "upbringing" so vociferously assert himself in defence of an opinion.

I regret that I cannot follow Mr. Engelbert's sggestion to re-read his first letter as I have not had the foresight to preserve a copy. However, he does, in his second letter, corroborate the tenor of the first. And this I find very disappointing. I think the whole thing can be reduced to this. He condemns in principle, and by his own admision, the public expression of a moral conviction. Public opinion, in most cases, would hardly find this a justiable attitude.

The Keenleyside incident is only a much publicized example of an event that is duplicated again and again in everyday life; on the street corner, in the theatre, in schools and in churches. And that is the subordination of immediate personal interests to a collective ideal, or have you noticed, Mr. Engelbert.

Certainly, life does offer so many complexities that confusion is bound to occur. But let's take the cue from those who have passed this way before and not haphazardly censure their views and actions.

Had a similar incident occurred in your home or in mine we might corectly have called it "bad-manners". But in such a formal setting, where the action will have a profound and far-reaching effect, not only in diplomatic circles, but among the Joe Citizens of many countries, we cannot dismiss it as merely a serious breach of etiquette. I should think that Mr. Engelbert would feel a sense of humility and shame for his derogatory and uncalled for criticism of the episode.

Regarding his final remark about terming Peace a "dirty word", I can only venture to suggest that his thought were again confused and not on the matter at hand.

Iron Curtain

Editor, The Varsity,

In the letter "Russian Propagandists" in Wednesday's Varsity, the correspondent stoutly defended the originality (?) of what he said by witholding his name.

In his refusal to consider any opening for international understanding he is typical of an ardent, and by no means necessarily patriotic group who prefer to shink from sifting of what might be fects and what easily could be Western propaganda. Since that line is a hazy one to draw, surely no one with a claim to intellectual integrity would recklessly and unobjectively lap up as fact what at best can be accepted as true only in a tentative sense. "Russian internal propaganda" he deplores, yet is the gullible victim of a similar instrument in the West.

His desire to thwart any overtures to understanding in the particular case of the proposed visit of Russian students, is indicative of an attitude which has put up a Western iron curtain against any international understanding. In this crucial time, no one can afford to turn his back on any effort towards peace.

T. H. Cain, III Vic.
A. A. Lee, III Vic

Ed. Note: We have printed two letters on the refusal of the NFCUS to exchange students with Russia, in which the authors' names have been witheld. In each case they have been written by students from Iron Curtain countries, who have good reason for not wishing their names to be used.

THE GRADS ARE COMING

We Introduce

The Old Grad

Games, Teas, Dances, Stag ---All Part of Homecoming

This is the big weekend of the year when both grads and undergrads swarm over the campus. A good rugby team should attract thousands of alumni, but many will be coming back to see how their campus has changed over the years, and it is up to the undergrads at Varsity to be good hosts to those who have gone before them.

For the graduates the Homecoming Weekend will start on Friday night with a Homecoming dinner in the Great Hall of Hart House at which Chancellor Vincent Massey will speak on "Reflections of a Graduate". Then the grads and undergrads will meet at a giant Grandstand Show in Varsity Stadium.

The Homecoming Weekend will continue on Sturday with a large float parade containing for the first time, alumni floats the Toronto-Queen's rugby game, a tea dance after the game, a six-orchestra dance in Hart House, and tours of the campus. On Sunday there will be a Homecoming Church Service in Trinity College Chapel, followed by teas at the different colleges and faculties. The whole university will be open for visitors.

The Homecoming Weekend is being planned by the Blue and White Society of the Students' Administrative Council and by the Alumni Association. The Blue and White Society is sponsoring the Stadium Show, the Homecoming Dance, and the Tea Dance after the game.

This year is also the triennial Homecoming Weekend for the Engineering Grads who are holding a dance on Friday night at Royal York and a stag after the rugby game.

The Blue and White Society hopes to make a slight profit on the Stadium Show and dance, weather permitting. The Stadium Show is covered by rain insurance so that any students buying tickets tomorrow will have their money refunded if it rains. So far over a thousand tickets have been sold for the Stadium Show and only about 50 dance tickets remain for sale today.

This is the fourth annual Homecoming Weekend on the Toronto campus. Originally designed as a means for students to welcome alumni and to show them the spirit the undergrads of the university have, the weekend is now becoming a permanent part of university tradition.

Many of the problems and difficulties raised by the Stadium Show and the big dance are much more easily handled now than they were three years ago. For example the searchlights for the Stadium Show need their own generators for power, and each year there is trouble getting a stage. By now the Blue and White Society knows where every searchlight, generator and portable stage in Ontario can be located. Last night the Society had a dress rehearsal of the Stadium Show and felt confident that anyone attending would have no trouble either seeing or hearing the show.

The weather man says that tomorrow will be sunny and warmer to make a good start on what should be the best Homecoming Weekend ever.

Oldest Grad Comes Back

The oldest living Varsity gradu- Dr. Augustus Sohr, B.A., ., LL.D., Ph. D., O.L.S., .S., D.V. Sc., B. Comm., FCIS., .C., B.L.S., and his wife, Dinad r. will return to the campus at p.m. today and will be met reception committee in front Hart House.

Sohr has a wealth of material ed in his brain concerning the ly days of the University. His nly were amongst the early porters of higher education in province and one of his rela- kept pigs on the site of the ent Skule Building. Dr. Sohr undoubtedly notice a conrable change in the University ite.

It is hoped that the students of University will give Dr. and Sohr a hearty welcome when return to the campus after any long years.

Welcome Back Grads

University President:

Once again I join with the undergraduate body and with the University of Toronto Alumni Association in extending a warm welcome to the graduates and friends of the University on this occasion. During this weekend the campus will be in a very real sense your home, where memories will be charged with a fresh vividness, and associations will be renewed.

We want you to feel that this is your University, that you are not merely interested spectators, but active participants. We need your support and encouragement, especially in these days when the role of the University has never been more central and its problems more insistent. Your Alma Mater lives and grows in the loyalty and affection of her sons and daughters.

Sidney Smith,
President.

SAC President:

The Students' Administrative Council, on behalf of the 11,000 students of the University of Toronto, welcomes back to the campus the graduates and alumni of the years gone by.

It has always been a fond hope of the students of this university that some means could be found to bring together the students with the members of various alumni groups.

The creation of the Homecoming Weekend project has made such a meeting possible.

It is hoped that from this Varsity Homecoming Weekend of 1951 will emerge a spirit of renewed friendship between undergraduate and graduate; a feeling of unity in devotion to a common ideal—the University; sense of understanding and faith in this great college which has left and will leave its mark on all of us.

The students extend their sincerest regards to the Homecoming Graduates. May your visit be a happy one and may the spirit of Homecoming thrive and grow.

Velut Arbor Aevo.

Sydney L. Wax,

Ever Like This?

Color, Culture, Spew and Spray In Big Faculties' Float Parade

To give the smaller faculties and courses a chance to win the Alumni Cup for the best float in the Homecoming float parade, entries this year are limited to 200 feet in length and must not cost more than $20. One of the best floats entered last year was from the comparitively small course of Art and Archaeology. The float parade committee of the Blue and White Society are trying to get entries that stress quality, like the Art and Archaeology float, rather than quantity, like the Skule entry which took up half the parade last year and included a peanut company's float.

The Blue and White band, the Lady Godiva Memorial band and the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade band will be in the parade. Last year there were musical organizations from UC (the Dragon Stompers), Dentistry (the Dental Chompers), the Institutional Management trio and the faculty of Music Hillbillies.

The float parade will be the only time that students will be able to see all the cheerleaders from the different faculties as well as the Blue and White cartwheelers. Last year the Engineers managed to find as many cheerleaders as the more fortunate faculties and colleges. The School of Social Work had Marge McGregor, the original Queen's drum-majorette, leading a flock of co-eds while Helen Mackie twirled a baton for Victoria. In front of the parade was the one and only Hilka Pilpula.

The Alumnae Cup was won by Medicine last year for their display of 2000 years of Medical Science. The entry was an obstetrical super-market which manufactured babies with varying sex-appeal (all the way from George Drew to an Engineer to Hilka). The machine was guaranteed to supply a baby without fuss or muss so that any lady could take one home to surprise her husband.

Architecture won the Alumnae Cup two years ago with a "Train of Tomorrow", which clanked and tooted around the rugby field at half-time to display a smoking-car full of cigar store Indians, a sleeper with a pair of newlyweds, and an observation car containing several fur-coated explorers. The parade that year was described in The Varsity as "exuding violent color, imagination, smoke, soapsuds, beer and coconut cake".

Forestry won the cup in the first float parade three years ago with a display of Forestry conservation, which included a bear cub, a fire place and fire fighters. Trinity was second with a beer-wagon turned into a grave-yard. Six draught horses pulled a scene in which a Western player was buried with clergymen, coffin, church steeple and grave-diggers adding realism. A group of Saints from St. Hilda's followed in the wake of the burial incanting and intoning with appropriate solemnity.

The route of the parade this year will be from Hoskin and Devonshire place to Bloor; along Bloor to Yonge; down Yonge to College; along College to the Mining Building; and then around the front campus. The judges stand will be on the front steps of University College.

Last Year

You may not be able to see it, but last year's float parade offered shapely legs galore, besides bubbles, water sprays, and other odd things that fertile minds of college can devise. It is all meant to overwhelm the crowds that watch the display and carry off the coveted trophy for the best float. This year they say that the emphasis is more on sense than nonsense. And then there are the trusty Engineers.

Grads Take Big Part In Homecoming Do's

The Alumni Association is doing more work for the Homecoming Weekend than ever in its history. For the first time, Alumni floats will appear in the float parade.

Open houses and teas will be prevalent during this weekend at many of the colleges and faculties.

The Annual Alumni Meeting, at which annual reports will be discussed and executive officers elected, will also take place.

Rev. Dr. D. R. S. Owen will preach at the Homecoming Church Service at Trinity College on Sunday. The Alumni Association is planning to have this service at a different theological college each year. Last year it was held at Convocation Hall, but not enough people turned out to fill it.

There will also be various reunions, such as the Engineers Triennial which takes place every three years and is prepared for a year in advance. About 1,700 graduate engineers are expected to come, bringing their wives. One item on their program is a visit to the Downsview Airdrome.

Doctors from all over Ontario will be coming to the two-day refresher course this Thursday and Friday. The course is given by the medical staff and also includes discussions.

Special additional class reunions will be held for those who graduate in the years ending in one and five.

House Will Echo To Myriad Events

One of the biggest dances of the year will be the Blue and White Society's Homecoming Dance and Open House on Saturday night in Hart House. Leading their bands in different parts of the House will be Art Hallman, Bobby Gimby, Bob Cringan, Len Duke and Tony Giomettelle. A group of strolling troubadors will wander through the Halls of Hart House.

The lower gym is being decorated with huge balloons and other ornaments to help welcome back the grads. The Blue and White Society is conducting tours through Hart House and will have signs showing where the different club exhibits are. There will be directory of activities in the rotunda as you enter Hart House.

Ticket sale for the dance is being limited to 1,100 couples, including grad ticket sales. If there are any tickets left today they will be placed on sale at the observatory, in front of Hart House, the evening of the dance.

The dance will form only part of the Blue and White Society's plans for the evening. The Archery Club, the Ham Radio Club, the Art Gallery and the Lee Collection will all be open for visitors. The Ham Radio Club of Hart House will be sending and receiving messages all over the world on Saturday night. Anyone wishing to send a message home should go to the Map Room where the club is setting up a voice sending and receiving unit.

The art gallery in the basement of Hart House will be open as there will be a demonstration of painting and sketching.

Very few students have seen the Lee collection in Hart House. Curator Russell Harper will be on hand Saturday night to show the treasures collected from ancient Greece and the medieval period. The collection includes some of the oldest medieval books in Ontario, coconuts set in silver mountings and early Gree pottery.

The Archery Club will be in the Rifle range and will have the Dominion Champion archer, R. Frost, giving a demonstration of what the modern William Tell can do.

The romantic highlight of the tour will undoubtedly be the Camera Club exhibit. For the Homecoming Dance the Camera Club are opening their dark rooms for interested couples who want to see what can develop. The club will also display their permanent collection of prints.

The only parts of Hart House which will not be open for the dance will be the theatre where there will be a play, the swimming pool, and several private rooms.

Mayor Present At 1927 Parade

By PAT POTOCHNIAK

University of Toronto celebrated a big homecoming back in the days before most of our parents were parents. The event was the Centenary Celebration in 1927, when the University of Toronto observed its 100th birthday.

It featured an impressive parade honoured by the presence of such distinguished visitors as the City Mayor. Stretching along city streets for more than 2 miles, 40 gay and brightly painted floats entered by various colleges and faculties stopped the wheels of commerce in Toronto's business section for one and a half hours.

After a 21-year break, University of Toronto took up the idea of the Homecoming Weekend again in 1948. This more recent history of homecoming goes back to April of that year, when the Students' Administrative Council approved the idea in principle, but made no concrete plans. In the autumn of that year, it accepted the proposal brought forth by the Blue and White chairman Joe Potts, calling for an All-Varsity reunion without registration. The Board of Directors of the Alumni Association, which is really the backbone of the whole scheme, gave the proposal its full support, and with the approval of President Smith, Operation Homecoming forged ahead.

The Alumni's aim in the promotion of such a project is to bring back the grads in a reunion, to renew old friends, to refresh old memories of their days at college, and to foster in the grads an active interest in their Alma Mater. To welcome the grads, a dinner is planned for Friday night with Chancellor Massey as the guest speaker and also an Alumni Open Meeting on Saturday morning and different class reunions in the various colleges.

Heading the organization is the Homecoming Committee whose 12 members represent eight different faculties and colleges. Sponsoring the Homecoming and Open House is the Blue and White Society, an undergraduate organization formed to promote an All-University Spirit.

Each of its eleven members comes from a different colleges or faculty, typifying the all-university theme which abolishes faculty and college boundaries.

Last year with Western, this year with Queen's, the weekend of the University Homecoming and Open House is three days packed with exciting activities for all grads, undergrads, and parents. Starting with the Stadium Show Friday night, the Homecoming continues with a gigantic float parade Saturday morning, in which all the faculties that enter vie for the coveted Alumni Cup donated by the Alumni.

The rugby game on Saturday afternoon is followed by the Homecoming Dance and Open House in Hart House Saturday night.

In 1948, the Homecoming was promoted with the hope that it would grow to be one of the many traditions in the colourful life of the University. With each successive year, the activities of this project have become more popular and numerous until they now operate on the present gigantic scale. With such evident enthusiasm for Homecoming, it is quite certain that its future as a tradition is secure.

These two Injun maidens aren't as dangerous as they look, but are mighty talented. Ben Wise, producer-director of the stadium show, has worked fast and furiously to whip things into shape for presentation tonight, 8:00 p.m., at the Bloor Bowl.

Chancellor Is Alumni Dinner Guest Speaker

Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, Chancellor of the University of Toronto, will speak at a dinner in Hart House tonight as part of Homecoming weekend. Chancellor Massey will speak on "Reflections of a Graduate" at the dinner, sponsored by the University of Toronto Alumni Association.

Recently Mr. Massey chaired the Massey Commission for Arts, Science and Letters for the Dominion Government. Among other things the Commission recommended further financial aid to education.

Mr. Massey was appointed Chancellor of the University in 1947. He succeeded Rev. H. J. Cody in this position.

In 1925, Mr. Massey was Minister without portfolio in the Dominion Cabinet. He has also served as Canadian Ambassador to the United States, and later as High Commissioner to London.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

It is with some temerity that I have approached this revie STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE (at the Victoria). There was n temerity when I went to see the Elia Kazan movie version of th nessee Williams' play. The buildup had been tremendous, and wholly favorable. STREETCAR, to hear them tell it, brought Hol right up on top again. This was THE picture. We'll show the Olivi the Italians.

But for me it wasn't THE picture. Don't misunderstand, STRE is composed of some exceptional ingredients. Vivien Leigh and M Brando breathe life into their performances, with Leigh perhaps a slight edge. And Kazan has managed, with only a few convincin tings, to surround us with the Kowalski flat. We share in the business that goes on, and a lot of it seems to splash onto us.

The music is superbly used, etching in mood details at the moments, and always going away when not wanted. The tone is set opening with a cheap jazz melody mournfully suggesting the Kowal mosphere.

Kim Hunter and Karl Malden head the supporting cast, and too give full measure. Everything seems to be in place to make STR CAR a tremendous experience. But I was not gripped in the pit stomach as I had expected to be.

It is timely to say about here that I went to see STREETCAR have not seen it on the stage. I have not read the play. All I knew Blanche DuBois and the Kowalskis was what I had read in the and the magazines.

This makes me different from most of the critics huzza-ing the picture. They seem to know the play well. They probably share common opinion that transference to the screen was impossible STREETCAR was too fragile for the crudities of the screen sensib But the play is obviously relatively unimpaired. Only the ambiguous ing, and the rearing away from mention of the homosexuality of Bla dead husband are concessions to the morality lobbies.

Subtly but mercilessly, Blanche DuBois' pathetic pretense of gen and her complete defeat at the hands of the Kowalski animal vul leaps at you from the screen. Not only do we feel that we are i Kowalski flat; we wince with Blanche and Mitch and Stella from roaring coarseness of Stanley Kowalski. Delicately in taste but bru in expression, the tale of lust and hopelessness is torn open.

With camera and soundtrack at his nimble command, Kazan us share in the thinking of his characters, and even more, in the te ing tensiono f the inescapable trap in which helpless Blanche D finds herself.

There is all this, and STREETCAR seems a great picture. It amazing achievement to come out of fearfilled Hollywood. But THE BICYCLE THIEF or ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT HAMLET, this picture did not get under my skin.

Perhaps this is because of wrong premises on my part. Per STREETCAR is not supposed to do what I looked for.

At any rate, you must see STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE. Eve $1.13 a shot in evenings. It's worth seeing at least twice. But meanw in a Balcony Viewpoint next week, The Varsity's drama critic, D Peddle, will also review A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE. Perhaps we will have a better perspective.

Starting next week, Balcony Viewpoint will be shared by Mr. Pe and myself. This was, of course, the original plan, with both Drama Movies to be considered under this one heading. Mr. Peddle's inaug contribution will deal with the Hart House production of THE M WOMAN OF CHAILLOT.

Mysterious Stars In Stadium Show

The Blue and White Society claims that they have gone to great trouble in trying to obtain the famous team of entertainers for the stadium show on Friday night, but their identity, like that of tweepers, must remain a secret. Director Ben Wise said last night that the team coming to the stadium show had proved to be one of the greatest attractions in the history of show business, but that the team had relatives "on the other side of the curtain" and their names could not be revealed.

The Queen's Pipe Band, a singing chorus of 60 students, and many grads who starred in campus shows over the past years are part of the program. Jack Northmore and his Hell Drivers are returning to amuse and confuse the audience. Along with Northmore will be Sam Aaron, Jack Marigold, Harold Nashman and Irwin Pasternak. Wise said that the Blue and White Society guarantees that Nashman and Pasternak will not do their famous golf routine.

The Skule Quartet, the famous Four Flushers, will return to the campus. Two years ago this quartet won the Hart House Barbershop Quartet contest when the Warden's cup was offered for the first time, and they returned for last year's stadium show on Homecoming Weekend. Most students will remember them for their technicolor version of "Cigarettes, Whiskey, and wild, wild women."

The Blue and White Society are planning to make a presentation to the coach, Bob Masterson, when he appears with the team.

For the lovers of cartwheels, the cheerleaders will be on hand to lead cheers, and help out with tweepers, whatever they are. The cheerleaders do not know what tweepers are but are confident that they can handle them, if they are not too wet, big, sticky, or gooey. The Blue and White Society will not say whether tweepers are wet, big, sticky or gooey.

Some students feel that cartwheels are not inspiring enough. For these critics, the society has brought back the famous Charleston chorus from last year's Scarlet and Gold Revue.

Tickets are on sale at Hart House, UC., Trinity, Vic, Engineering Society Stores, and St. Mike's. Grads can buy tickets at the Alumni Office, 42 St. George St.

Potts' Pride Has Big Day

The Blue and White Society was founded in 1948 by Joe Potts. The Sporting Activities Committee of the Students' Administrative Council, responsible for student participation at football and hockey, etc., was worried. In 1947 everyone was becoming anti-social and not supporting their teams.

Joe Potts, U.C. representative to the SAC that year decided to try to solve the problem by founding a society to include all students interested in the All-Varsity spirit in other things besides athletics. So in 1948, Joe with coonskin coat became chairman, and the Blue and White Society became a formal part of the SAC.

Pep rallies, dances and intercollegiate weekends followed. Joe climaxed the year when, the day before the crucial game of the championship race he solemnly sacrificed the coonskin coat of his fathers in a gigantic sacrificial pyre on the front campus. Poor Joe's heroism did not go unrewarded. Varsity won the game and the championship.

In 1949, under the guiding influence of Bill Turner, the Society continued on much the same lines. However, an Art Gallery Night was instituted with the co-operation of the Art Gallery, and the plans were carried out in the fall.

In 1950, under the auspices of Gord Cameron, the Art Gallery Night was held and had an attendance of 500-600 students.

The Varsity Christmas Tree was held at Convocation Hall. Carols were sung, collections for the All-Varsity Aid were brought in, and suitable gifts (such as teething ring for Dentistry, a steam-shovel for Tolke Olke) were exchanged by the various faculties.

This year the Society is featuring a dance using all the facilities of Hart House.

Tweepers will be on sale at the Stadium Show on Friday night. Not before then will the secret of Tweepers be disclosed. Only Tweepers will be sold on Friday night, although 700 bloops will be sold by Blue and White Society girls. Tweepers will be in the custody of the cheerleaders in the Float Parade Saturday, and at the game—if they last that long. Ribbons, buttons and bouncers will also be on hand as usual.

1962 Varsity Float Parade Ties Up Helicopter Traffic

By CHEEKO

I took another look at the 103 page pamphlet that the machine in the book store gave me for five cents. There was no mistaking its title. "Homecoming Program 1962" blazed forth in red, exuberant letters.

A glance at the table of contents assured me of my untrained inability to read this blurb, and I threw it onto a passing football coach. I decided not to exert myself, merely to follow the stream of blank old grads wherever it chose to go.

First off, I ran into a float-parade. A 207-foot naked woman was dragged past by teams of well-yoked freshmen, and from a door in the statuette's heel red-eyed sciencemen kept yelling for "Helen". The way helicopter traffic in Bloor Channel got tied up by this float-parade was a pleasure to see.

I was so terrified by the mammoth cash-register crawling by on the back of an academic spider that I tottered away.

After a rousing dinner of food pills and gin concentrates, amply chased with pitcherfuls of loyalty tea, I directed my eyes up at the Hart House dais. Although my gaze was somewhat obstructed by the regulation blinkers, I did make out three elderly figures dimly trying a "pogo-stick basketball" skit they had staged in the 1910 Bob Review. The show was broken up rather abruptly when the Revolver Club insisted on having its bi-weekly practice, and on using tear-stained Jack Gray ('51) as target.

As I wandered about the campus, I heard great roars of cheering from the direction of the old library. I fought my way over. The homecoming contest between the bookworms of MacPee College and Varsity was on. Books and librarians were falling on every side. Ten English Grads brandishing indelible pencils tried to referee, but the MacPee worms got the better of them all. As trophies, the victors carried away two complete filing-cabinets of catalogue cards.

By now the only activity worth attempting was the display of frantically creative dancing in what had once been Convocation Hall. To the anapestic strains of a professorial chorus from Aeschylus, a number of recent graduates performed the Dance of the Seven Parchments. During intermission, a squad of chancellors and deans in full acarugby strip scurried around distributing ball-point pens.

Just as I stepped towards my jet-powered, rainproof communial scooter, I heard that all future homecomers were to be contacted by feelavision. I clutched convulsively at my pick-ax and stepped abroad.

WE FOLLOW

On these two pages The Varsity presents some of the stars who will not be playing in tomorrow's game between the Blues and the Golden Gaels, but who are at the same time an essential part of the game.

The top left and right pictures are, in technical terminology, described as "Flying Angels." Bev Secord is the angel on the left and Gwen Yeates is the angel on the right. Their supporters are male cheerleaders.

The Varsity staff photographer asked Nancy Elliott, another cheerleader, if she would please whisper "cheese". The left hand side, the second picture from the top shows just how much emphasis can be put into a little word.

The third picture from the top of the page is of that "angel", Bev Secord. Miss Secord is in second FOT and this is also her second year as a senior cheerleader. Her success is undoubtedly due to long hours of hard practise.

At the last game in Toronto, between Western and the Blues, the weather office noticed a sudden rise in the temperature in central Toronto. This was at least partly due to Helen Mackie and the Hawaiian War Chant. The photographer forgot to get the drummer's name in the prevailing confusion.

Cheerleaders perform many worthwhile services besides leading cheers. In the centre picture at the bottom of the page, two cheerleaders can be seen aiding the Knights of Madness in attracting attention to the Red Feather campaign.

There are other things at rugby games besides cheerleaders and rugby players. Pictured below is Harvey III, a rabbit with the habit listening to jazz.

But back to Helen and the finer things in life. It takes hours of practise, as well as natural ability, to produce a cheerleader like our Helen. For that reason The Varsity has included two pictures of Helen practising.

And to show the terrific competition that Helen must face, just look at Peggy Dyer from Queen's. Helen and Peggy leave The Varsity just speechless . . .

Redmen Defeat Skule 10-0 For Season's First Victory

By DAVID ROTENBERG

The University College Redmen chalked up their first victory of the season yesterday afternoon as they downed the Engineers 10-0. The UC team went over for two unconverted touchdowns in the first three minutes of the game and held off a fighting Skule team for the rest of the game.

Except for the first few minutes, the Engineers had quite an edge in play, but this was nullified by some sloppy ball handling in the Skule backfield. The SPS team bobbled the ball no less than eight times, and the alert UC linemen picked up five of these.

The Engineers kicked off to open the game and before they could turn around, the Redmen were over for their first major. Ed Richardson took the kick on his own five and kept going until he reached the Skule 38, on the best run of the day. Ralph Brown took a plunge and went right through to the 13, from where Richardson went around the left end for the TD. This was the last time the UC team moved the sticks during the game. Byron Peebles, the UC quarter, tried a pass for the convert on a fake place kick formation, but unable to pick out a receiver, he elected to run the ball, and was brought down on the two.

Skule chose to receive, and gained possession on their own 18. Bob Ella went through for four, but it was called back and the Engineers were given a 10 yard penalty for holding. They were held on the next play, and on the third down, a bad snap over the kicker's head went back over the goalline. George Lewis recovered for the Skulemen but instead of giving up the two points, he came out over the line, giving UC possession on the one. Larry Skitch went over centre for the major on the first, and the convert attempt was blocked.

That was the end of the scoring and for the rest of the game the Engineers tried in vain to make up the two point deficit. The Skulemen racked up seven first downs on the fine running of John Prendergast and Lewis.

The SPS crew took to the air when their ground attack was bogged down by a bad case of fumbilitis, but they were able to complete one pass in nine attempts, and the Redmen intercepted two of Lewis' tosses. The UC team tried three passes, all incomplete, and their quarter had little time to get the tosses away as the Skule line, led by Bob Beattie was charging in.

Mac Lister, who coached Forestry to their Mulock Cup victory has been added to the UC coaching staff. Lister was scheduled to take over the team at the beginning of the season, but was kept off his feet because on an injury suffered in softball this summer. He will take over some of the duties now handled by Byron Peebles who doubles as quarter on the UC squad.

Sportswoman

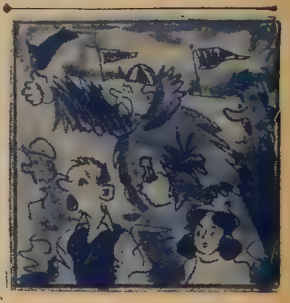
The UC girls softball team successfully protected their unbeaten record yesterday, as they overpowered the Vic I squad 12-2. The hard-hitting Red and White crew drove in seven runs in the first inning. The Vicsters were powerless against Mary Craw's pitching and some fine fielding. The second session was a repeat of the first as the UC co-eds hammered home five more runs. The Scarlet and Gold came to life in the third frame but managed only two runs, on Barb Johnson's double.

There were two basketball games scheduled in the OCE gym yesterday afternoon. The Vic sophs defaulted the opener to PHE II as they were unable to produce a full team. In the game that was played, the UC sophs had little trouble in trouncing the St. Hilda's sophs 21-5. Led by Deanne Conacher and Jane Firstbrook, the Red and White girls built up a 9-0 lead in the first half and extended it to 15-0 by the end of the third frame. The Saints came to life in the final frame scoring 5 points, but it was too little and too late.

The sports staff is still looking for a Woman's Sports Writer to be in charge of Sportswoman and general coverage of women's athletics. A number of applications have already been accepted, but no definite choice has been made as yet. Interested persons should check with Sports Editor Bruce MacDonald immediately.

Gaels Look For Revenge At Homecoming Contest Garside, Johnson Out

By IRWIN GUTTMAN



Despite a 26-2 win over the Golden Gaels last week, the Varsity Blues are taking nothing for granted when they line up opposite the Tricolour tomorrow at 2:00 p.m., especially so since the comments emanating from Frank Tyndale's camp bode no good for Bob Masterson's crew.

For alas and alack, those perennial cellar-dwellers of the Rah-Rah circuit have indicated to the Kingston press that the Varsity squad "were simply adding insult to injury in piling up such a big score against us, and we will be in there from the start to show Varsity how a game of football should be played." This is an indication that a "knock 'em down, drag 'em out" battle will be the order of the day at the "Bloor Bowl".

The Blues, who will be protecting a seven game winning streak, are hampered somewhat by the loss of several key defensive men, most notable of which is the enforced absence of Bob Garside, Garside, who has starred at left secondary for the Blues, and has been a vital cog in the Varsity Machine to date, has a bruised shoulder, and as another injury to it could result in a permanent handicap, Bob was ordered to the team physician to view proceedings from the sidelines. His place at left secondary will be taken by Tony Adams.

Bruce Johnson, the able defensive end, will also view the contest from the sidelines, as he has a severe limp, sustained in the game last week. Joe Harris remains a doubtful starter, also because of an injury to the shoulder.

However, the rest of the Blues are intact, and will have halfback Bobby Rumball back in action. Al Dancy at centre, flanked by guards Hames and Miles, with Captain Johnny Evans and Colizza at tackle and Bell and Brown at ends, will start on the Varsity front wall. The Blue backfield will have starters Alex Lawson at quarterback, Bill Bewley and Bill McFarlane on the half line, "Ones Steve" Oneschuk at the fullback slot, and Al Haig at wingback.

Queen's will be without the services of their captain Harry Lampman, but otherwise they will field the same team that absorbed the one-sided defeat last Saturday. Their front line will be composed of Wright at centre, Wadell and Johnston at guard, with Varcoe and Kennedy at tackle and Harrison and Fleming at the outside wing spots.

The Tricolour's starting quarterback will be Wally Mellor; Ross McKelvey, the best played on the field at Richardson Memorial Stadium last week will be back on the Gaels' halfline along with Ken Atwood. Don Bahner will be the fullback chores, and Don Ball returns to the flying wing position.

Baby Blues, RIT In Exhibition Tilt

The Intermediate football Blues, undefeated in league competition so far, take on Ryerson Tech in an exhibition game this afternoon at 1:30 in Varsity Stadium. The Baby Blues didn't pick any pushover to fill in their schedule as the Techmen have a good outfit. The only basis of comparison between the two teams is the fact that they both lost to the Cobourg Galloping Ghosts by close scores. Judging from this it would seem that the Intermeds will have to go some to come out on top.

Coaches Kennedy and Mustard have had their charges working out nightly and they are improving each time out. It's a tough job to put together a good intermediate team since it acts as a sort of farm club for the Big Blues, with players either going up or coming down. However, this year's squad has shaped up well and has an excellent chance for an undefeated season.

The starting line-up will be in the main the same one which has racked up wins over OAC and Western Colts. The Intermeds will depend chiefly on their terrific passing game which accounted for 12 out of 16 passes completed against Western and for two of their three touchdowns. Doug Geekie and Gerry Fitzhenry will be the men directing the attack from the quarterback slot, and if they can keep up that average of successful passes, they'll give their opponents a busy afternoon. Speedy Don Fawcett who carried over for one major in the Colts game, is expected to be one of the spearheads in the ground attack.

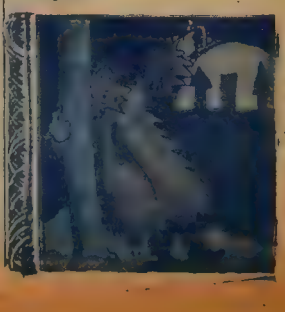
The line too appears in fair shape and today's game will more than give them a workout for next week's tussle with Western. There's one little thing that would make it a good season for the little Blues and that is some people to watch them play. It's not much of a thrill to make a stirring touchdown run when the only spectators are the caretakers and someone who stopped by to see what the noise was.

The Intermediate teams are largely responsible for the success of the Seniors, since they develop and provide experience for the players before they go up to the Big Team, so it's only right thatt a stadium which is crammed for a Senior game should contain at least 1,500 for an Intermeds encounter. Game time again is 1:30 at Varsity Stadium. These boys play a good brand of ball so the time will be well spent.

SPORTS PROFILE

Bobby Dale

Bobby Dale made a couple of coaches and a lot of sportswriters raised their right eyebrows slightly while they were watching him in pre-season practices with the Varsity Blues this fall, but it was not until last Saturday that Varsity fans realized just what all the eyebrow-raising was about.



The fleetfooted young halfback from Lawrence Park Collegiate here in the city romped through the Queen's backfield all last Saturday afternoon and three of the excursions resulted in touchdowns for the Blues. "I guess that is the most touchdowns I have ever scored in a single game," stated Bobby. There must be something to be said for a young man that waits until his first year of college football to turn in a performance like that.

Bobby spent five years at Lawrence Park and played his first football for the school's junior squad when he was in third form. He graduated into senior high school ranks the next season and was away with the city championship in 1949. The same team lost to Humberside in the city semi-finals the next fall, but Mr. Dale sat that one out with a broken ankle.

Enrolled in the first year of the new General Course, Bobby, at 19 years of age is one of the youngest members of the Blue team. He is also one of the smallest, standing 5'9" in his socks and being unable to push the scales any higher than the 165 pound mark. Bobby started out his football career at the left half spot and is still holding down that position.

The No. 33 sweater that Bobby wears was occupied by Gerry Washington last season, and the similarity in both size and playing ability between he and Bobby Dale have amazed many a fan who saw Gerry perform last season.

Bobby may not score three touchdowns against the Gaels tomorrow, but visiting dignitaries will sit up and take notice when he demonstrates how a football should be carried.

Pole vaulter Bruce Rawlinson tops the Varsity men in this event, but lost to two McGill stars. Footballer Hank Sliwka won the event with a jump of 11'6", and Aird was close to the same mark. McGill cleaned up on field events winning 38 points out of 66 possible.

McGill Captures Sr. Track Meet

McGill won the Intercollegiate track meet for the second straight year yesterday, defeating Varsity by 74 points to 59. Western had 17 points, McMaster 15. McGill and Varsity both had six firsts, but McGill picked up a large part of their margin on seconds and thirds.

Two records fell, one to McMaster's Don MacFarlane who did the 100 in 9.9, one tenth of a second better than the jointly-held previous record, and one to McGill's Dave Blair, who bettered his own record by two inches with a high jump of 6' 2¾".

Wilson Paces Blues Win Intermede Track

Paced by Doug Wilson who garnered two firsts and a second place, the Intermediate Blue track team walked away with the Intermediate Intercollegiate championship yesterday afternoon at Varsity Stadium. OAC earned second place with 51 points as compared with 95 for the Blues, and Waterloo College, the only other entrant, brought up the rear with 8 points.

Wilson, a participant in the British Empire games, was ineligible for Senior competition as he transferred here from Western last year, but his efforts yesterday afternoon were certainly of senior calibre. Some of the best times in the meet, were turned in by OAC athletes, but they failed to show enough depth to collect a winning total of points.

RESULTS

Discus—108'3½"—Black (T); Wilson (T); Allore (W).

Pole Vault—10'¾"—Kendrick (OAC); Hare (OAC); Ridpath (T); Parsons (T).

Half Mile—2:07.5—Philpott (OAC);

Skule Will Help In Feather Fair

"It is the opinion of the Engineering Society that returns from the Feather Fair are not in proportion to the effort put into the Fair. But the Society, realizing the need for Skule participation in the affair to make it a complete success has agreed to support it wholeheartedly now that the SAC has decided to have the Fair again," said Doug Sherk, president of the Engineering Society, Tuesday night.

At last year's SAC meeting, Skule representatives voted against the motion to have the Feather Fair because most members felt that too many time-consuming activities were taking place on the campus at the present time. The motion was reversed at Tuesday's meeting of the Engineering Society Executive.

Several appointments were made at the meeting in addition to the declaration of support. Frank Yamada, 3rd Engineering and Business, was appointed Director of Publications and Publicity. Also appointed was John Arrowsmith, 4th Engineering and Business as the Torontonensis representative for the year.

Camera Club

Chemistry And Color

A club which has a current membership of 130 and facilities for up to 200 members, which makes provision for both the greenest novices and very experienced amateurs, and which has had experts such as Karsh, Randolph MacDonald and Rex Frost to judge its members' work, is a very active organization. Such indeed is the camera club, which has its own common room in Hart House, just off the hall leading to the tuck shop, and its dark rooms in the cavernous depths below that.

The club has very good equipment. The black and white section has three enlargers of different sizes, a De Jur, a Leica and an Elwood, a print dryer, washing facilities and locker space for use of the members. An array of half-filled bottles load the shelves which stretch along the walls, and presents a rather confusing picture to the tenderfoot who happens in, thinking he is somewhat of an expert on chemicals. He leaves with the sad realization that his chemistry set did not teach him everything.

Using this equipment, the members develop their own films and print them on the type of photographic paper they prefer. Instruction is given in developing and those who become reasonably proficient can usually obtain better results than the rushed commercial studios which cannot give each negative individual care.

The colour section is growing in popularity now since advances in the science of colour photography have brought the expense involved within the range of a great many more people. The colour lab is often described by those who use it as "wonderful."

Its modern equipment includes automatic temperature controls, and an electronically timed enlarger with a voltage regulator. It also has a fine Kodak Precision enlarger for 35 mm. and 2¼ by 3¼ inch film.

The autumn colours of red and gold, and the colours in the snow, awaken the enthusiasm not only of artists with brush and easel, but also of these artists with camera and colour film. In this connection the club has an annual fall hike at Caledon.

There are monthly shows of the members' work called "Salons," and near the end of the season there is a large show. There are prizes for colour photography and the K. B. Jackson and A. F. Coventry awards for black and white. The winning pictures in this contest are given a place in the permanent collection of the club.

It is a fairly prevalent opinion among many of the members, that the club needs additional facilities for those who wish to engage in portrait photography. These additional facilities would be, namely, "models." Then the club would be just about complete. Without these it is very good. With them its membership would probably jump immediately — perhaps one or two hundred.

Photography is a hobby which can be indulged in by most people with very good results. Painting requires an eye for beauty and then the ability to put it on canvas with a brush. It is a rare combination. Photography, however, can be carried on successfully by the amateur who merely has to pick out the spots of beauty, get it in his lens and let the camera do the rest. A person with an aesthetic ability can reproduce on paper, with a camera, what only a painter can do without one. This is the most important aspect on the club — creating an artistic sense in its members.

Machine-Age Man's Dilemma Is Subject Of Modern Writers

...The best creative writers of the ... quarter century, and of to-..., have concentrated on outlin... the dilemma of modern man in ...chine-age society," said James ...ott, book review editor of The ...legram, speaking at a Hart ...se Library evening last night. ...he first important writer to see this dilemma and to realize that a new "shock tactic" technique of writing must be developed to reach the modern audience, was Gertrude Stein, said Scott. She saw that Man was so surfeited with sex and with a blind belief in efficiency, that a violent style of writing was necessary to make any imprint on him.

She was able to influence a school of writers, such as Hemingway, Faulkner, and Steinbeck, to present this dilemma in novels, emphasizing violent action.

Ernest Hemingway, Scott said wrote in defence of individualism. His hero was not the epic hero; he was a man attempting to realize himself as an individual despite the all-pervasive conditioning of the machine and of the media of mass communication. He was a violent man in act and thought because that was necessary for self-assertion.

Wm. Faulkner, continued Scott, treated the same problem by examining the effect of these influences on a mythical region. He developed the history of the town, but always his characters had to face this problem, and then there were no compromises in the violent denouement.

John Steinbeck and John Dos Passos expressed this problem more from a political angle, but the revolt against automatism was there Scott thought, in their attack on moral taboos. T. S. Eliot's first poetry—'The Waste Lands'—managed to evade and sublimate this problem, and then Eliot fled in retreat without facing up to the issues, said Scott.

In Scott's opinion the most tragic example was Ezra Pound the man of genius who could not resolve the dilemma but "allowed it to become a festering sore within him." Writers of today presented a similar 'warped' view of modern humans but so consistent was their interpretation said Scott, that the reader was forced to realize an element of truth.

Security Failure Formed NATO

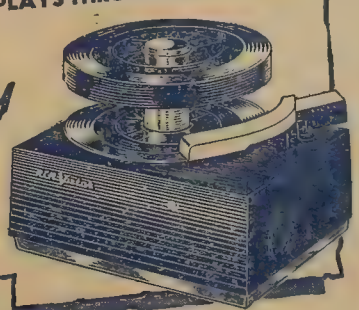
Co-operation in the long term things are more important than the military aspects of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, but have recently been pushed aside by military matters, said Mr. A.D.P. Heeney, Undersecretary of States for Canadian External Affairs addressing the International Relations Club yesterday afternoon.

He emphasized that a faith in collective security and the failure of the Security council to provide this was the principle reason why NATO was formed. Its primary purpose, he said "is to provide sufficient determent to Russian agression so that it may never come."

"NATO is not a bloc"; he said, it is simply recognizing the mutual co-operation and community on cultural and economic matters which was there already. The admission of Turkey and Greece, he added later was a contradiction of this but was a "material addition to the deterring force". All members of NATO would prefer the whole United Nations body, were it capable of providing the necessary security, he said: "Anyone in his right mind would prefer the whole cake to part of it".

George Brigden, IV History, asked if NATO's hope for the peaceful co-existence of the eastern and western worlds meant allowing existing boundaries to stay. He was referring to Poland and Czechoslovakia now under Russian control. Mr. Heeney replied that it is a mistake to talk about liberation unless we mean military liberation, which we don't. Such a thought, he declared would be "madness".

Worms In As Sophs Kill Revolt



Trinity "Worms" failed in their annual revolt, yesterday, to discard their "Worm" ties for a day. The unsuspecting freshmen, resplendent in new ties, met in the Trinity front hall by a large group of upperclassmen, mostly sophomores, who had been tipped off to the affair. The brawl was brief and to the point. The freshmen emerged sans ties but still undaunted in their quest to better the sophmores.

Previously the freshmen had planned to emerge from the locker rooms and proceed en mass to Strachan Hall where they had expected the battle to take place.

The Sophs, warned beforehand, had massed on the stairs beside the entrance hall. This yelling horde then proceeded to cut and pull the ties from the unwary freshmen. In a few minutes the front hall was again back to normal, while freshmen meekly donned their "Worms" ties till November.

The Gentle Art

Coonskin Coat

All graduates wear coonskin coats and carry a bottle of whisky. Whether this is true or not makes no difference whatsoever, because this is the way we choose to think of them. We may not see one coonskin coat over the weekend, which would be rather disappointing, or maybe no one will get drunk at the game Saturday, which is extremely doubtful. But our mental picture remains the same — you cannot be a graduate without a coonskin coat.

For us, all graduates attended university in the mad wild twenties. Their whole undergraduate career was devoted to making life miserable for those in authority. They constantly attended all night parties, drank whisky out of teacups and read H. L. Mencken. They rarely knew what course they were in, and if they did, made a special point of avoiding it in their reading.

All we would like to say is that things have changed. Whisky is no longer drunk out of teacups, and H. L. Mencken is no longer read. And worst of all university students are as gentle as lambs.

There have been no kidnappings this year. No one has attempted to steal the Skule cannon and the UC dragon remains undisturbed. No on has been tarred and feathered and left on top of the flag pole. There has been no mass movement to tear the turnstiles out of the University Bookstore and deposit them in President Smith's office.

In fact, the whole Meds-Skule-Arts rivalry seems to have been transmuted from a thing of fire and colour to an attempt to out-silence the others. Each faculty seems to be bent on proving that it can be less obtrusive than the other. And we are achieving a fine degree of anonymity.

There isn't even an atheist club on the campus. The anarchists are entirely unorganized — we even wonder if they exist. Indeed, few students are interested in belonging to clubs at all, although there are still some who like to organize them.

Indeed, things have got so bad that the Students' Administrative Council has formed a Co-Ordinating Committee —and at a time when there is hardly anything left to co-ordinate save club executives.

Few people would have thought it possible to have achieved such a high peak of dullness. But somehow we have managed.

We would like to ask you, Mr. Coonskin Coat, to have a talk with the undergraduates on the gentle art of raising hell. If it were not impracticable, we would suggest a lecture because they are so depressingly well attended nowadays.

But how will you recognize an undergraduate? It will not be easy and he will slip past you if you're not very careful. Generally, he is a tall young man with brown hair and horn-rimmed spectacles and a trench coat. He is always hurrying — we don't now where or why, unless it's to lectures — and has a serious preoccupied look on his face. The future of the world lies with him, you know, and he's taking it awfully serious on the surface at least.

The one really encouraging thing that can be said about undergraduates today is that they will eventually graduate. Then they will become part of the Coonskin Coat tradition and talk about the Wild Things They Did As Undergraduates.

However, we can't help regretting the fact that the graduates have taken the Coonskin Coat with them, leaving us with the trench coat. It is awfully hard to be wild and woolly within the conservative confines of a tan trench coat.

OUR READERS WRITE

We Are Not Us

Editor, The Varsity:

This is the University of Toronto and you are its voice. It is not the University of McGill, nor the University of British Columbia, nor the University of Saskatchewan, nor the University of Manitoba, nor any other University in Canada. It is the University of Toronto, our University. It is the largest University in the country and one privileged and honoured with a tradition second to none, and a tradition Sir, which we ourselves deny. A tradition Sir, which you deny.

Have we nothing left to say ourselves that we must half-fill the pages of our paper with some worthwhile but mostly second-rate reprints from other University papers? Are the students from other Canadian Universities more intelligent, more vocal, more far-sighted, more hopeful, more capable, more aggressive, more vocal, more dynamic than we? Or are we ourselves dull and blind and torpid that we cannot fill the pages of our own university paper, five times a week for a mere hundred issues a year with something new and fresh and thoughtful that we can call our own?

Have we nothing left to say? Are not the vital issues which surround every plane of our life, international, national, political, social, legal, cultural, academic, scientific, religious, artistic, poetic, personal issues; issues whih are broader and more magestic and more fearful than ever in the history of mankind, worthy of some comment?

In a world which looks to us for leadership do we remain silent? Dare we remain silent? Dare we to spend four years of our lives in the highest institution of learning that our society has produced, privileged as few are privileged, and yet to remain silent?

Dare we to accept that privileged position wherein we share in the greatness of the knowledge of mankind; wherein we see and understand and feel the power of the dignity of learning; wherein through circumstance and discipline and vision we are gifted with the future of our nation, and yet say nothing?

Dare we to fight and to sacrifice and to die for our freedom, for our precious freedom of expression, and then turn aside and ignore it?

Do we know our privilege? Do we know the greatness of our ancestors? Do we know the challenges they met and triumphed over to make us what we are? Or do we think our heritage is something which grew of itself through time and the inclination without effort or courage or conviction?

Have we really nothing to say? Have all the frontiers been pushed back and all the land explored? Have all the arguments been settled and all the issues put to rest? Has everything been said? Has all the beauty been described? Has all the poetry been written? Has all the living and the longing been experienced; all the evil and the selfishness condemned. Have we nothing left to say?

Sir, we are the heart of a great University. We are a mighty body of students; young, hopeful, courageous and powerful and holding in our hands not only our own individual destiny, but that contribution to the destiny of our nation and race which we by our good fortune inherit. But we must speak.

We must rise and stand and speak and tell what we know, regardless of our mistakes and yet regarding our mistakes. If we know, we must speak, and if we don't know then we must ask. But we must speak.

R. W. Shepherd,
III Meds.

Ed. Note. We quiver with shame. But, honest injun, we only printed them because we thought you'd be interested, because we thought you'd hate to be narrow and local, because we thought you'd want to know how people elsewhere were thinking, what they were doing on other Canadian campi. You should, you know; nationalism is so in style in Canada.

Soviet Propaganda

Editor, The Varsity:

In recent editions, The Varsity has opened its columns to a discussion of the proposed visit of Soviet students to Canada. I propose herein to set forth my reasons for supporting the NFCUS decision to withdraw the invitation presented by Mr. Lazure to IUS.

I do not necessarily agree with their reasons for doing so, but rather with the principle involved.

As a recent nameless correspondent has pointed out, Communism is the enemy of Democracy and should be foiled at every turn. I do not propose, however, that this can be successfully achieved through military action alone, for the problem is one of ideology. Mr. Churchill's words of Jan. 15, 1942, while speaking to the House of Assembly in Bermuda, will serve a double use here, for the case is parallel: "We are confronted with totalitarian States which deny as a fundamental principle the right of free debate and the expression of popular opinion."

It would be a mistake to deny a visit to Canada of any students of the USSR who could, without serious personal danger, make the trip. By this danger I mean, the political significance such a visit would have in the eyes of the MVD or Russian secret police. I cannot help but suppose that this very danger threatens the correspondent who has had his "name withheld on request." If this so (and I have no means of knowing) I must quickly condemn the brief blurb contributed by Vicki Sher in the Oct. 23rd issue. The thought comes to me that her thought concerning the matter was as brief as was her letter. I would recommend to her that she search the halls of UC for a person who has experienced Russian "Peoples Democracies". If she should fail to find anyone there, she might consider visiting the faculty of engineering where several dozen, at least, may be encountered by one with patience to do so.

The offer made by Mr. Lazure was a splendid one if it could conceivably be accepted with the objective spirit intended. As Mr. Paul Cadbury whose address was reported in the Oct. 24th issue said, "As high as 99% of the people lack any knowledge of the West's living standards, industrialization and scientific progress." WHY IS THIS SO? Not because we don't want Soviet students to come to Canada, but because it is not in the interests of the Soviet government to allow the circulation of such information.

Thus a visit by Soviet students here would serve no useful purpose except to further Soviet propaganda. At the same time the personal freedom of those students who did come would be in jeopardy upon return to their homeland. Another series of pre-dawn arrests would take place. A few months later more "volunteers" would join the labor camps on Silberia. Thank God I'm a Canadian!

Good Will

Editor, The Varsity:

A letter in Wednesday's Varsity expressed a negative view to the question of inviting Russian students to Canada. It seems to me that the writer of this letter has not calculated sufficiently the possible effects, psychological and political, of a point of view which in effect that no act of goodwill towards Russia can be justified. Let us consider for a minute that our proposed invitation to a Soviet student delegation followed an initial invitation to Canadian students by Russian students, and that this reciprocation of invitations apparently earned a warm response from the student representatives assembled at the IUS Council meeting at Warsaw. With these invitations exchanged the question before us is not whether we like or dislike the Soviet Union. The question we Canadian students must decide is whether or not we are going to show ourselves as willing as the students of Russia today to be friends If the Soviet students hold their invitation open at this critical juncture in world affairs, and we Canadian students shut the door, then we, not they must accept the reputation and the responsibility for being unfriendly and creating barriers. If this doesn't matter to us personally, should we not consider what this will look like to the millions of people around the world who have been through war, and who at this moment are determining who are their likeliest peace bets among the cold war powers.

Tricolor Has Spirit But Loses Tilt 15-7

By BRUCE MACDONALD

It was a fighting Queen's team that absorbed a 15-7 defeat at the hands of the Blues before a homecoming crowd of 25,143 people at Varsity Stadium last Saturday afternoon. The Gaels hit hard, and Ross McKelvey all but ran his heart out for the Tricolor, but they simply didn't have the goods to upset a league-leading team that on occasion looked as if it were about ripe for the picking.

That Blue line is powerful, and when it made up its mind to work, there seemed to be nothing that the Gaels could do about it. But too often, runners like Bobby Dale found themselves trying to push their way through a wall of charging linemen.

The game was an exciting one to watch, with the issue in doubt until Varsity notched their fourth quarter touchdown. Queen's held their own with the Blues in the offensive department, gaining 17 first downs to 16 for the Blues, and completing 7 forward passes as compared with two completions for Varsity. Tony Adams, taking over from Al Haig in the kicking department, collected himself three singles, two of them booming 70 yard punts.

Varsity were offside nine times throughout the game, and some of their best gains were neutralized by this error. With only a few moments gone in the first quarter, Oneschuk had the crowd on its feet with a spectacular 30 yard runback of a Gael punt. Queen's were awarded a 5 yard penalty and made a first down. The next Gael kick was good for a point when McFarlane was rouged behind the line.

The Blues took over on their 25-yard line and started to roll. Oneschuk picked up 21 yards off right tackle behind some beautiful blocking. McFarlane's 30 yard run on the next play was neutralized by another Varsity offside, but he carried again for 13 yards and a first. Bewley cut around the left end for 26 yards. Oneschuk was stopped after a gain of 4 yards. Then Lawson dropped back and pitched one to Al Brown from the 33 yard line. Brown gathered the ball in on the Queen's 18 and staggered his way across the line for the major. Bell converted with 45 seconds left in the first quarter.

Charters pounced on Dale's fumble in the second quarter to give the Gaels possession on the Varsity 13-yard line. McKelvey travelled around right end for 8 yards, and then bulled his way to the Blue 1 on an unorthodox spread formation. The Blue line held for one down, and then McKelvey knifed over for the major from the same strange formation. Dyson converted to put the Gaels ahead for the second time. Adams kicked two singles for the Blues in the dying minutes of the half to make the score Varsity 8, Queen's 7 at half time.

The turning point in the game arrived when the Blues elected to quick kick on the last play of the third quarter while the wind was still at their backs. The kick was a good one, and left Queen's in possession on their own 7-yard line. The Tricolor kicked on their first down and the Blues had the ball with only 36 yards to go. Oneschuk, Rumball and McFarlane teamed up to score the second Blue major in only 5 plays, with McFarlane doing the honors. Bell again made the convert good.

Queen's took to the air with a vengeance, but failed to get back into the race as the game ended.

No Yells For Injured Players Spectators Boo Cheerleaders

In the last quarter of the Queen's-Varsity rugby game on Saturday afternoon, fullback ve Oneschuk was injured. The Varsity cheerleaders did not lead a yell as the crowd xpected, and as a result the cheerleaders were booed by some of the students. To most of he students that was all that they knew about the booing incident.

The head cheerleader, Jim Dooley, was instructed by the Blue and White Society not o lead cheers for individual players when they were injured, as it was felt that applause was in better taste and would make the players feel better than a yell ending "fight, fight, ight." However the Blue and White Society did not tell the students about the new pro-re nor the reasons for clapping nd of yelling. The cheerleaders e been leading applause rather han yells for injured players roughout the season, but it was ill Oneschuk, who is probably est known Varsity player this was injured, that the students ged the change.

Oneschuk was first injured, ey ran out on the field to see serious the injury was. Later, ner male cheerleader, Hugh lexander, asked the manager of eam if the cheerleaders should a yell or just applaud as they instructed. Alexander was told applaud.

Coach Bob Masterson said last night that he felt applause was in much better taste than a yell and that he personally felt that applause was appreciated more by the players. Masterson pointed out that the crowd never knew whether a player was seriously injured or just had his wind knocked out.

A statement issued by the Blue and White Society concerning the incident reads as follows:

"The Blue and White Society wishes to clarify the stand taken by the cheerleaders at the football game Saturday, with regard to a certain group from the student section who showed bad taste in expressing their attitude towards the Varsity cheerleaders while an injured player was still on the field.

"The Blue and White Society decided at the beginning of this fall that the cheerleaders would set an example of good sportsmanship and respect towards the injured player by leading the spectators in applause rather than a 'fight, fight, fight' form of yell when the injured player is assisted off the field. This method of expressing approbation to an injured player, regardless of on whose team he is playing, was endorsed by Bob Masterson and the Varsity team.

"The Society regrets that it did not convey to the students, at the beginning of the season, the form in which the cheerleaders would lead the spectators in cheering by applauding with a more sincere feeling of respect and gratitude towards an injured player.

"We hope therefore that the students will agree with us that applauding an injured player as he leaves the field pays a better deference to him."

Director,

The Bracken trophy, given to the Canadian University newspaper with the best editorial, was removed from its display case in The Varsity Office last Friday night. In its place was a copy of Friday's editorial complaining about the lack of "hell-raising" around the campus.

The Bracken trophy is presented each year by Canadian University Press (CUP) to the paper which three independent judges consider to have written the best editorial of the year. It was presented to The Varsity at the CUP convention last Christmas.

The Varsity is asking the persons who took the trophy to come back for the sample case. The office is usually vacant from midnight to 9 a.m.

Varsity Stages Contest – Cat Food As Prizes

In the interests of National Cat Week, which aims at restoring the Cat to its rightful position in contemporary civilization, The Varsity is sponsoring a contest for Cat photographs. Prizes of one tin of cat food will be given for the cutest and the most repulsive photographs of our feline friends.

Last year The Varsity sponsored a limerick contest. The number of entries submitted by deadline time almost exceeded our wildest expectations. It is sincerely hoped that the response this year will be worthy of the cause to which the contest is dedicated.

Deadline will be at 2:00 p.m. on Thursday, November 1. Entries should be submitted to The Varsity News Office. Admit to Lectures cards must be checked before entries can be accepted. Members of The Varsity staff are not eligible for this contest.

After nearly winning the Alumnae Cup for the best float last year, Art and Archaeology finally won the cup this year with the float shown in the above picture. The man standing on the end of the float, Wilf Pegg, II Vic, wore only a little loin cloth and some green paint. When he was climbing off the float at the end of the parade, his first words were: "Do you think I can get into Hart House like this?" It is doubtful whether the Board of Stewards would accept green paint as a substitute for a coat when eating in the Great Hall.

The department of Art and Archaeology won the fourth annual float parade on Saturday morning with a float which brought sincere applause from the great crowd of alumni and students who were gathered to see the competition.

The winning float was awarded its prize on the basis of three things: originality, ingenuity, and appeal. Anyone who was there and saw those statue-like forms shivering in the cold for the sake of a float that would have all of those things at any cost had to admit there was no other float in the parade with the complete all-round quality than this one had.

Said Dr. R. G. Romans, one of the three judges of the competition, in commenting on the parade as a whole, "It was more consistently good from beginning than it was last year. The was really tops." The oth es, Syd Wax, President SAC, and Warden Ignatieff House, were both of th opinion.

OVERCROWDED ?

Combination Night

By JOHN BAKER

For the first time since its start three years ago the Homecoming Dance was combined with the annual Open House. The result of this combination of two very popular events was inevitable: Hart House could not cope with the crowds, which, according to one official exceeded 2,300.

The exhibits of the Art Gallery, the Camera Club, the Lee collection and the Ham Radio Club of Hart House were attractions of Open House. Nobody stayed at one exhibit as long as they probably would have liked because there were so many things to do and to see.

The general opinion seemed to be that a big dance and a House are two entirely things and should be kept "This is wonderful," said Donald (4T9 Vic). "I ma dozens of old friends, but I I would have seen more i just a dance without the o tractions."

'Varsity' Lecture On Make-up Art At 1 p.m. Tuesday

"Make-up" will be the subject of the third in a series of lectures on University Journalism given by The Varsity staff. This lecture will be given by Make-up Editor Marg Welch at 1 p.m. Tuesday, in Room 13, University college. All make-up staff are expected to attend.

The lecture will include lessons in copy-reading and headline-writing. Miss Welch will also discuss the technique of making up a newspaper page, and (it is rumored) will say something about the Philosophy of Makeup.

There will be a fourth lecture Thursday at 1 p.m. in the same place on the "Art of Reviewing". This will be given by Jack Gray, an occasional student. All interested persons are invited to attend.

Newswriters and sports staff are requested to attend, so that they can learn some of the mechanical dificulties which complicate newspaper work.

after the intermission of THE MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT rday night I had an uneasy feeling that Hart House Theatre ing off to a very poor start indeed. The scene in the cafe ancis is very difficult, of course, especially when, for purely reasons, the director (Robert Gill) finds that he can use only half of the stage. This cramped the already naturally cramped the bit-players on whom the whole atmosphere of the act and gave the impression that here was just another awkward show. The act came to life only twice in two delightful episodes ountess Aurelia's (Ann Murray) description of her contact with ery morning, and the Ragpicker's (George MCowan) disclosure ountess that everything in the world had fallen into the hands nts. But these episodes relieved only momentarily the tedium cene.

ething which I shall never understand is why the central figure irst part of the play — The Prospector (well played by Henry n — should not be made more of. Mr. Jackman and his wonder- ressionless face (to which there is so much reference in the ere kept in a dark corner of the stage, practically out of sight, such a sunny morning a dark corner on stage will itself need an a little explaining.

he end of the first act one is tempted to shrug one's shoulders French manner), sigh heavily and turn to the program to find ng of interest, when Act II opens on a new and quite hopeful he set is really superb — for the small Hart House stage it is flaring. We move quickly from a really insane "mad tea party" ree madwomen to an imagined love scene between the aged is and the long-lost Adolphe Bertaut, then to a trial of the rich brilliant in writing and acting. The capitalists, exploiters and s are whisked off into the bottomless pit; the Countess dreams w world and everything is set to rights — "Nothing is ever so n this world that a sensible woman can't set it right in the f an afternoon." This seems to extend to a play that starts off n.

the play itself, let us say only that it is a cleverly written bit Jean Giraudoux has a genius for atmosphere that compels us e anything he tells us while we are under its spell. But where sonably easy to translate M. Giraudoux's lines from French to it is not so easy to translate atmosphere. It is the product of ent world and for serious young Toronto actors it is impossible eve. That particular Parisian-type zaniness that attains a peak two policemen could never reach the stage. There is, of course, e lesson to be learned from the play — but by the simple.

old lady who made the play and story end so felicitously for ience was Miss Murray. She had her first entrance when the at its lowest and it was not easy to bring it back to life, but esurance, pace and sincerity to her part she did just that. I ay that she was a younger madwoman than was originally d, but that would be like saying that the English translation was French as the original.

McCowan's part, which was small by comparison, was the high the show. His part in Act I had an ironic seriousness and a adness that I would call the atmosphere of Act I and his defence rich in Act II was brilliant comedy — especially in the matter of the others (not already mentioned) — James Armour as The ent and Joan Armstrong as Mlle. Gabrielle, the Madwoman of pice, were good. The only extra who acted was Robert Jackson Deaf-Mute.

Team, Tweepers, 'Royal Pair,' All In Mammoth Stadium Show

By JERRY BROWN

An estimated crowd of 7,000 watched the mammoth three-hour production put on by the Blue and White Society last Friday night. Producer Ben Wise and a wide variety of talent thrilled the audience with everything from the Royal Couple to Tweepers. Although the long show lagged at times, the talent procured by the Blue and White Society lived up to previous press notices.

The events were ushered in by a 50-voice choir led by Bruce Snell. M.C.'s Ben Wise and Harold Nashman started things rolling with the Nixbees, Harold Bee and Joe Tenenbaum, two well-coordinated muscular gentlemen with a talent for gymnastics.

Coach Masterson was introduced next and stressed the good work that The Blue and White Society was doing to encourage the All-Varsity spirit. He introduced the team members one by one as they ran across the field to line up, first and second teams to the right and left of the stage. John Armour, Director of the Blue and White Society made a presentation to the coach on behalf of the University for the splendid work that he has done in the sport field. Masterson then hustled his charges off to bed.

The show then continued with solos from blonde Margo McKinnon who sang "Halleluiah, Come on Get Happy," and Desmond Boult, III Trinity, who gave his version of "Because of You."

One of the most amusing performers during the whole show was Jack Marigold who constantly reappeared, each time with a new line and a new costume. His rendition of Mother Goose nursery rhymes will keep many student awake finding out what really happened.

Jack Northmore with his imitations, was another of the fine performers. Jack had the audience roaring with his takeoffs on popular styles of singing.

Among the other attractions was a chorus line from the Vic Bob Revue, the Queen's Pipe Band and the fine singing of the choir with their renditions of the Whiffinpoof Song and the new Follow the Blues. No account would be complete without mention of the fine work of Sam Arron, Edith Greenberg and Martin Myers. Their imitation of a French play with English sub-titles (given by Sam Aaron) was a masterpiece of understatement.

The evening drew to a close as a quartet, the Four Artsmen, George Tovell, Monty Coughan, Larry Heisey and Ernie Ball, gave several lovely renditions. The Blue and White Red Feather float climaxed the three-hour show with an appeal for a worthy cause.

All were displaying their talents for the benefit of the Red Feather Campaign at the Stadium Show on Friday night. The squaws told about the rising birth rate in the tribe to native talents and Irwin.

Two U.C. Students Running For C.C.F. In Coming Election

Two University College students, Marvin Gordon and Walter Parker, both III UC, are running in the coming provincial election as CCF candidates in the Toronto district. Parker is running against W. J. Dunloy (Con.), minister of education and former director of university extension, in Eglinton riding, while Gordon will oppose Joseph Salzberg (LPP) in Spadina riding.

Parker has been active in the CCF Youth Movement for six years and is the president of the movement. He told The Varsity that he is actually undertaking two campaigns at the same time as he is running for the University Mock Parliament as well as for the Legislative Assembly. Parker said that important issues in the coming elections are the increased fee and the drop in enrolment. He quoted figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showing that one out of every 100 persons in Canada go through university; 32 drop out before they finish Public School, only 22 finish junior matriculation, 13 finish senior, and nine start university.

Parker said that the CCF feels the individual lacks real educational opportunity and that these figures make a mockery of Liberal and Conservative claims to have given Canadians an adequate standard of educational opportunity. Inosfar as such opportunities are denied Canadians, democracy itself is denied.

Both Dominion and Provincial governments, in Parker's opinion, can do more to improve the university fees situation in Canada.

He said that the CCF in Ontario is calling for the Ontario government to build 50,000 houses, particularly in the Toronto district.

Parker felt that the deplorable housing situation, which makes more difficult the problem of living while at university, needed immediate action.

Debates Promote Closer Relations

Antigonish—CUP—Friendly relations between French and English speaking universities in the Maritimes may be furthered this year by the Maritime Intercollegiate Debating League. The highlight of the annal conference of the M.I.D.L. will be a discussion of the feasibility of including the French universities in the league. This would necessitate French debates.

It is hoped that it will bring about a closer understanding between French and English students.

Queen's Speed Nets Post

Last Saturday's game ended with one of the best fights for the goal post to take place in the last two years. One post and the cross-bar were torn down by the engineers from Queen's before the Varsity students could get down to the south end of the field, but the other post was surrounded by fighting students for at least 40 minutes.

The Queen's men rallied around a group of engineers for five or six rushes to get at the post, while the Toronto men kept their backs to the post and rolled back anyone trying to get near it. Finally one short Queen's man climbed on to the shoulders of a tall friend, and then the two charged the defenders. The bottom man was stopped dead at the edge of the defenders' circle, but the top man jumped from his shoulders in an attempt to reach the goal post. He didn't make it to the post.

One big Toronto man, a light-heavyweight boxer, complained that he couldn't get into a real fight; every time he tried to trade a few friendly blows with a Queen's man, several would rush up to shake hands with him and pat him on the back. He stood about waiting for the goal post to fall and was disappointed when nothing happened. For four years this particular student has been hit at least once during each rugby season by a falling goal post or cross bar.

Very little happened on Saturday afternoon except for the booing of the cheerleaders, the goal post fight, and the rugby game. The Varsity horse was not at the game, but Ajax the mule might make it to the McGill game. During the past few years the horse has represented the university, in an equine way, and has confounded the enemies of old Varsity. Last year the horse chased the Queen's bear (Mr. Boo Hoo the VIIIth), and carried tired cheerleaders about the field.

Also missing were the great Canadian drunks who usually wander onto the field to show the amount of liquor they can drink, or play leap frog or annoy cheerleaders. The cheerleaders annoyed by two drunks but "gentlemen" stayed in the st while they pleaded for a smile for "just a little cartwheel".

When the stadium was emp after the game, there appeared be more empty cans of beer are normally left after a Q game. Perhaps the Queen's dents are buying their beer Quebec this year.

One student had a pair of that held a mickey apiece he walked about at half time other had his supply in what like a bladder while a third bro several thermos bottles full of punch.

However the unsung heroes of game were the City of Tor Police. A sergeant and nine stood around while the goal fight was in progress and le students settle their own dif ences without interference. was quite a change from the sack detail that broke up a post fight several years ago.

Tweepers Arrive At Stadium Show Reception Feeble

Jeepers Creepers, Tweepers are here! But they don't seem to be quite the sellout bloops were.

Tweepers first came to the campus towards the end of the Homecoming Stadium Show, in a rocket from interplanetary space. From the space-ship's depths cheerleaders plucked bamboo sticks from which blue and white streamers dangled. Tweepers were here!

Just what tweepers are good for, no one seems to know. The cheerleaders waved them enthusiastically at Friday night's show, but scarcely touched them during the game.

The spectators didn't seem much better informed. A few waved them around when flies came around. Others held them up to keep the sun out of their eyes. One genius discovered they're good for flicking dust off your shoes. But there was no concerted Tweeper Effort.

However, certain clear-cut rules did emerge from Saturday's game. If the team makes a touchdown, wave the tweeper wildly at full arm's length over your head. If the team gets a first down, lower and bend arm, but still shake vigorously. If the team just manages to hold its ground, a few feeble wags will do. And if the other team scores, hide the tweeper under your coat.

Blue and White Society officials aren't quite certain how many tweepers were sold. But they certainly didn't spot the stands on Saturday the way the bloops did.

SCIENCE NOTES

Venison Land

By ORIE LOUCKS

Every year there comes a season the fall when the human male s a feeling of wanderlust. This ight be the result of a natural esire to get out and get some resh, cool, air; or it might be just carry-over from the summer's ac- ivities. Nevertheless, when deer unting season comes, thousands f men from all walks of life leave heir quiet homes and head into he deep back-woods to try their uck at roughing it and get a taste f venison.

In the last few years hunting has ome within the range of nearly everyone's pocketbook, and everyone is making use of the new opportunities. Since the war the umber of deer hunters that go into the bush every fall has more han doubled the number that went efore the war. Yet there is little difference in the number of deer aken per man. This means that here are nearly twice as many deer eing shot now as there were ten ears ago.

However, you may go into almost ny rural community today and be old that there are more deer running wild over the agricultural and than there ever was. The explanation of this apparent paradox s simple if you will only consider he recent changes in the natural nvironment of deer and the ways hat they have affected the deer opulation.

Like any other wild animal, the eer require two basic things for uccessful living. These are food nd shelter. They must have both inter and summer food, and lenty of dense shelter in a fairly mall area, if they are to reproduce and promote life normally. Contrary to a popular opinion, this condition is not found in the primaeval forest such as in Algonquin park.

The environment most suited to supporting a sustained yield of deer population is the condition found through the greater part of the counties of Haliburton, Muskoka and Hastings. Here we have a great many old farms which have proven unsuccessful agriculturally reverting to second growth hardwoods and mixed woods, interspersed with dense cedar swamps, all of which combine to provide a nearly perfect environment for deer. Young growth hardwoods mixed with grassy patches provide the ideal condition for summer feeding for deer. The ideal condition in winter feeding is found in the dense cedar swamps and in the twigs of the young second growth trees that are so common in this second growth area.

But this is not the only condition that tends to promote deer population. Other places which provide plenty of good food and shelter are recent cut-over areas, and recent burns. These are good only as long as the material stays in a condition such that it provides all the requirements of the deer population feeding on it. For a sustained yield hunting program one must take into consideration the fact that nature changes, and for that reason hunting parties should try to create the best conditions on their hunting grounds themselves, to keep up the deer population.

It is not impossible to hunt for a long time on areas other than like those I have mentioned and get good results. But the fact remains that in areas such as Algonquin Park where the hardwood forest is virtually untouched, heavy hunting such as is experienced farther south, could not be sustained.

We see then that, despite the fact that there is more and more forest area being cut every year, yet for the same reason there will be more and more deer for the hunters every year.

SPS Beat Meds 29-1, Newell Gets 3 Majors

After an even first half, Jr. S.P.S. unleashed a splurge in the second half, and walked all over the Meds II's and took a 29-1 win Friday afternoon on the back campus Passes from B. Horton to N. Newall almost told the story of the game, this play accounting for three of the touchdowns as well as plenty of long gains. Horton's passing was close to perfection; he ran out a fourth TD and took care of some of the kicking. Newell was the big scorer with 5 points. No one in particular stood out for the doctors for they were pretty well overwhelmed by the engineers.

The teams fought on even terms during the first half. After the kick-off, Skule moved deep into Meds territory, right to the five yard line but they lost the ball on a fumble and the threat was ended. Meds had the Skulemen backed into their own zone during the second quarter but were held out of pay dirt. Long kicks and offside penalties on S.P.S. were the features and the half ended on a typical note with Meds unable to get anywhere with the ball on three straight plays.

Skule kicked off to begin the second. Meds lost the ball on a fumble at their 20. Horton passed to Newell in the end zone for the first major but the convert attempt was no good. Meds kicked and Babirad ran it back to the 48. A pass to Newell was good for a first and then he gathered in another Horton pass and went around the end for a TD. Smele converted. Then Meds got deep in S.P.S. ground where Jones kicked over the deadline for one point. Skule took it on the 45. Horton completed two passes to the 20 and carried it over himself. He passed to Smele for the extra point on the last play of the third quarter.

Meds kicked to Evans who got it up to the 0. Horton passed to Lyons who went all the way to the Meds 10. Then Horton threw to Newell for another score. Lyons booted the convert. Now came one of the odd plays one expects in these games. Skule kicked but Meds fumbled and Bannister recovered for the engineers. As he was going down under a pile of doctors, he lateralled to Day who ran it for a major. Bannister converted. Skule was threatening again as time ran out.

Baby Blues Smother R.I.T. For Third Straight Victory

Displaying a consistently good passing attack and an almost equally potent running game, the Intermediate football Blues smothered Ryerson Tech 29-7 last Friday before a small crowd in Varsity stadium. It was the third straight win for the Baby Blues, the other two coming in league competition against OAC and Western.

Ryerson managed to hold the Intermeds to an 11-7 margin in the first half, but Fitzhenry and Geekie opened up in the second to pass the Techmen dizzy. Kay's terrific booting was all that kept Ryerson from absorbing a worse defeat.

Varsity scored first after Bob Kimoff returned a Ryerson punt to his own 30. Fawcett took the ball on the next play and swept around end all the way to the Tech 43. Two plays later Geekie passed to Danny Nelson in the clear for a touchdown. Earl Ford's convert made the score 6-0.

Ryerson ran the kick-off back to it sown 28. After an exchange of kicks, Bolton of RIT went 20 yards to his own 38 on a double reverse. Varsity held and Kay hoofed a long one that rolled to the Toronto 23. Two plays later Fitzhenry loosened up his pitching arm and hit Bob Milne with successive passes to bring the ball to Ryerson's 42. Two plunges put Varsity on the 32 from where Kimoff galloped around end to the 4, hurdling one of his own players en route. Don Fawcett carried over for the major on an extension play. The try for the PAT was low and the score at the end of the first quarter was 11-0.

Ryerson finally hit the scoresheet in the second session after they took possession on Varsity's 45. Mudry faded back and tossed a flip pass to Kay standing on the line of scrimmage, and he went to the 22. Fear took a short heave for 9 yards, and Tech worked the Mudry-to-Kay play again for a major. The convert made the score 11-6. Fawcett was rouged on Kay's kick before the end of the first half to put Ryerson within four points of the Blues.

The third quarter saw the Intermeds capitalize on a Tech fumble to run the score to 17-7. Earl Ford picked up a fumble in the Ryerson backfield and ambled 35 yards for a converted TD.

Fitzhenry really began to click on his passes in the last quarter as the Blue and White ran away with the contest. He pitched one from his own 30 to Fawcett on Ryerson's 40, and Don dashed the rest of the way. Ford converted and the score was 23-7. Later in the quarter Fitzhenry threw strikes to Don Smith (twice) and Harrison to put the Blues on Tech's 5. Housley split the line for three, and Harrison took a pitch-out from Geekie to go around end into pay dirt. Geekie passed to Chorestecki for the PAT to make the final score 29-7.

Fitzhenry, Kimoff, Fawcett, and Geekie were the best for Varsity while Mudry, Kay, and Bolton were standouts for Ryerson. The Intermeds' Moe Morris was taken out of the game with a shoulder separation, and Hugh Knox of RIT suffered a possible head concussion.

Steve Oneschuck

Dalt White, assistant coach of the Senior Blues, announced last night that Steve Oneschuck, injured in the game against the Queen's Gaels last Saturday would definitely be able to play this coming weekend.

Steve's injury was a severe leg cramp that comes with fatigue. It has troubled him in the past, and although not serious, it is extremely painful. Blue trainers feel that with the proper treatment, Steve will be back in action within a few days.

Steve Oneschuck, who caused the fans so much concern last Saturday afternoon, is shown skirting a couple of would-be tacklers while making a kick return in the game against the Gaels.

Steve ran one Queen's punt back 30 yards only to have the play nullified by a Varsity offside in the line. Until he was injured in the fourth quarter, Steve was one of the top ground-gainers for the Blues.

Varsity coaches report that he will be ready for action this coming weekend against the Mustangs.

Soccer Blues Win 1-0 In Clash With R.M.C.

By TOM BROADHURST

Last Saturday the University of Toronto Senior Blues eked out a close 1-0 victory over the R.M.C., to continue on their winning ways in the Intercollegiate Soccer loop.

The cadets made a much stronger showing in this game than the game played at R.M.C. last week. They were quicker on the ball, tackling surely, and the defence cleared well to make the going a little rough for the Blues.

As the close score indicates, this was a game in which the defences of both teams excelled, giving both forward lines little opportunity to score. The cadets came very close to scoring on occasion, but they were plagued by poor shooting. The Blues were also poor in this department, but one shot taken from an almost impossible angle by Jose Atucha provided the difference between the two teams, as the only goal of the game resulted, and the Blues were able to take in those two valuable points to bolster their position in the league standing.

The game opened with R.M.C. attacking strongly, and Bobby Lane, the Blues' goalie was called upon to make some good saves to keep Varsity's score sheet clean. However, the Blues perked up, and began to force the Cadets back into their own half. But no goals were forthcoming, as R.M.C.'s defence held on, and shots by Manuel Atucha and Bob Antoni went wide

R.M.C. then began to press again as their forwards sailed down the field with some nice passing movements, and Don Hargraft, and Tommy Pierce were unlucky in shooting over the bar. Then the Cadets missed their golden opportunity, as a goal mouth scramble sent the ball scurrying to the right of the goal, and Hargraft was again Johnny-on-the-spot, but he shot the ball wide of the post.

The second half opened with the Blues resuming the offensive, and were unlucky when Ken Jessop shot wide of the post. The Cadets were not out of the picture by any means at this point, and nice combination between John Riffenstein, and Tommy Pierce brought the play deep into Varsity territory, and a wild goal mouth melee resulted. Pierce shot—the ball hit the goal post—Riffenstein fired in the rebound—it was blocked, and finally cleared up the field by Dave Johnson, Varsity's right half.

That proved to be the last real threat by the Cadets, and minutes later John Atucha raced through on a loose ball, and though harried by R.M.C.'s left back, Al Hampton, hooked the ball into the net to open Varsity's tally sheet. This was all that was needed to spark the Blues, and they continued to press hard, but no more goals were scored as R.M.C.'s defence held on. The final whistle blew with the score 1-0 for the Blues, as they marked up their fifth win in six starts.

Sportswoman

Several important games were played in the Women's Basketball league last Thursday night, at O.C.E.

The first game saw P.H.E. 3's take a one-sided 14-4 defeat at the hands of the U.C. Seniors. Joan Mooney was high scorer for U.C. with 8 points while Lenore Elliot and June Plante shared P.H.E. honors with a field goal each.

The second game saw the P.O.T. Frosh B squad playing a fast and seemingly inspired Nurses' team. The future R.N.'s took an early lead and kept well ahead of their opponents for the remainder of the game, ending up on the long end of a 20-8 score. Donna Parr of the R.N.'s was high scorer with 14 points.

Revenge Is Sweet, Trinity Victors 13-0 Against Foresters

Although it took almost a year, Trinity College finally came back to whitewash their opponents in last year's Mulock Cup final, by beating Forestry 13-0 in a bitterly fought contest wihch was played on a greasy field.

The first half went scoreless as both Trinity and Forestry deadlocked in a tight see-saw struggle. Although Eddie Marcus and "Boomer Booth" of Forestry ripped off three or four long gains, the Woodsmen were hampered by penalties which seemed to come at the wrong moments. The same half saw gains by Steedman and Lawson of Trinity but never long enough to be of any real danger to Forestry.

The third quarter saw an invigorated Trinity team hit the field and after kicking off to the Woodsmen, they soon bottled them up for very little gain, and aided by two penalties handed out to Forestry, they punted deep into Forestry territory to make the task even harder for the green-clad squad. Later in the same quarter, Forestry lost a chance to be in potential scoring position when they were called on an offside penalty after blocking a Trinity kick and booting the ball downfield to Trinity 10-yard line. Minutes later, Harry Merideth of Trinity lifted a long high punt of at least 65 yards to the Forestry deadline to open the scoring in the game.

Sparked by their one point lead, Trinity completely outclassed the Woodsmen in a wide open fourth quarter. It was only a very short time before Steedman, on two beautiful runs, advanced the ball to the Forestry five. Tom Thomas took a wide pitchout and sliced off tackle for the major, with Doug Anderson booting the convert. Forestry received the kickoff and after two incomplete passes were forced to punt to midfield. Trinity then made use of the old sleeper pass with Anderson throwing to Corcoran, who took the long pass on the dead run and went over standing up for Trinity's second touchdown. Anderson again hoofed the convert.

The final minutes of the game saw Forestry, as expected, open up with one desperation pass after the other, with playing coach Gord Whitcombe at the quarterback spot for the first time. Although two of the passes were completed, Forestry could not get the ball over the line. They were evidently trying for the major, for they were close enough at several points to break the shutout by kicking a single. The game ended with Whitcombe being ousted for fighting and Trinity making sure by intercepting one of the "Greenshirt's" passes on the last play.

This win puts Trinity in first place in the second group with St. Mike's in second and Forestry in last place. Tomorrow St. Mike's will be gunning to tie up the lead when they meet Trinity in a renewal of the close battle they had in the opening game which the "Black-Men" from Trinity took by a one point margin. It is fairly evident from the last two games of this group that unless Forestry come up with a brand of football that is considerably better than that displayed so far this season, last yera's champions will not be in the running when playoff time rolls around, but the season is not even half finished and there is still plenty of time for the balance of power to shift either way. One thing, however is sure, and that is, whoever does finish on top of this group, will have to work hard to beat the winner of group one, which is currently being led by Vic

Pop Concert

Nino Martini, the Metropolitan opera's leading tenor, was the soloist for Friday night's 'Pop' Concert, and won the audience with his modest, almost shy stage manner and with the effortless character of his singing.

His two arias "Non piangere, liu" from "Turandot" and "Ch'ella mi creda libero" from "The Girl of the Golden West" combined the melodious quality characteristic of Puccini with an emotional depth which gave an indication of Mr. Martini's ability in more serious music. In the group of songs which followed, Mattei's "Non E Ver" showed the power of Mr. Martini's voice, while the playful "Comme un Petit Oiseau" by Paladilhe and the joyful "L'Alegria del Batallon" by Serrano displayed his Latin charm. He gave four encores of light love lyrics — the last one completely impromptu — delighting the already enthusiastic audience.

Though rather mechanical and lifeless in their first two selections, the Norwegian Dance Number One by Grieg and the Overture to Rossini's "L'Italiana in Algieri", the orchestra — and audience — were brought to life by a good brass section in the Grand March from Verdi's "Aida". However they remained most effective throughout the evening in their quieter selections. Their performance of Sibelius' "Valse Triste" — a work so familiar that it is apt to obscure his deeper works — was exquisite in its control and delicacy.

Mr. Sherman wisely reserved until the end their best performance, Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody". The power of pastoral description of the first part of this work, especially in the soaring violin passages, contrasting so effectively with the wild abandon which follows, is unsurpassed. Following a vogue which is becoming Toronto tradition the orchestra closed the program with the trivolous but clever "Syncopated Clock". —Joan Langley.

A Poor Show

Saturday's football game was a dull and insipid affair as far as the sport itself was concerned. It was, as someone remarked, "the kind of game you never remember". Luckily or unluckily, however, the afternoon was saved from utter anonymity by the rudeness of Varsity spectators partly as a result of mismangement by the Blue and White Society.

The lasting impression which the afternoon made on many people centred about the unfortunate injury received by the popular halfback Steven Oneschuk. When the cheerleaders did not lead a special cheer for the injured player, as has been the habit in past years, the crowd, or part of it, was furious. A round of applause was not enough for the hot-blooded enthusiasts who, up till then, had been watching the game quietly.

Yet the cheerleaders were only acting on orders from the Blue and White Society.

After asking the opinions of Coach Bob Masterson and members of the team this fall, the Blue and White Society instituted a new policy. Cheerleaders were instructed to lead a round of applause for the injured player, rather than a special cheer.

Yet, for reasons best known to themselves, the Blue and White Society shrouded this change of policy in the utmost secrecy. But it was the cheerleaders who took a lot of unnecessary blame for this piece of negligence.

While the Blue and White Society may have blundered badly, it was the crowd that behaved most inexusably. Their response to the whole situation, aside from being merely rude, was a fine example of mass action.

Until the Oneschuk incident, cheering in the Varsity sections was sporadic and uninspired. There was little enthusiasm. Immediately after the injury, booing and hissing was begun by a determined and annoyed minority. Yet the bad temper, having been introduced to the stands, caught on like wildfire.

The cheerleaders, who for three-quarters of the game had slaved to arouse the spirit of the spectators, managed, through no fault of their own, to bring down the wrath of the righteous upon themselves.

They deserve a lot of credit for continuing to lead cheers amid the increasing ill-feeling of the crowd. It must have been very hard to exude good feeling and warmth towards a standful of spectators whose pettiness was exceeded only by their noise.

Comment

Tweepers cannot have been an outstanding success. We heard of one case where a youngster insisted on giving his to someone who was more obviously a university student. Scorn of the young! . . . At one point during the game Saturday, beer was being sold (or rather kept) at fifty cents a pint. Students can be ridiculously obtuse about the principles of salesmanship. At thirty-nine cents, it still would have been a sellout and a profit-maker. . . . The theft of the Bracken Trophy has left us somewhat disconcerted. We cannot decide whether the copy of Friday's editorial left in the case was considered worthy of replacing the Trophy or whether it was decided that the only way to keep the Trophy this year was to take it and hide it away.

Athletic Code

To Avoid Duplicity

This is the First of Two Articles on The Current Problems of College Athletics. The Second Article, Appearing Tomorrow, will Deal with the Reasons for Giving Athletic Scholarships.

By MAL CRAWFORD

An occasional look at the newspaper headlines, magazine feature titles, or the movie pages should suffice to make the most csaual observer aware that college athletics in the United States are in the most uncomfortable position of their brief, stormy history. Announcements of the "de-emphasis" of intercollegiate sports (mainly football) in certain colleges have in the past come at regular intervals. Not until this year, however, has there been such widespread condemnation of the whole system of heavy athletic programs with subsidization of athletes in major intercollegiate sports.

The press, true to its traditions, has taken full advantage of the situation, perhaps playing up the sensational aspects (and there are plenty of them) more than they deserve. Periodicals have hit the stands carrying everything from vehement articles explaining why Cowpath State Teachers dropped football, to weighty editorials calling upon American Youth for a complete reassessment of its values. A movie appeared in Toronto recently which synthesized practically all the evils which happen or can happen to subsidized college football players.

In considering the causes of the situation, one immediately thinks of the basketball scandals in which college players accepted money from gamblers for throwing their games. Actually this has nothing to do with subsidization, since players would be more prone to accept bribes if they needed the money (there has been no similar instance in legitimate professional sport in over thirty years), but provides devastating commentary on what is of foremost value to the players, and on their reasons for being in college — and life. It also brought to the public's attention, even if only by association of ideas, the general deterioration developing in intercollegiate sports.

Colleges, mostly small ones, are cutting out intercollegiate football right and left. Rising costs, both to players who must be subsidized and of athletic equipment and so forth, mean that capacity crowds must be gotten for games in order that the athletic department breaks even. With decreasing enrolment in colleges today this becomes more difficult. Moreover, many small colleges' reputations depend to a great extent on their football or (more commonly) basketball successes, and not being able to compete with the biggies in the inflationary scramble for good teams, they suffer in more than just their athletic departments. Each year more are finding that they cannot stand the pace.

Then on top of all this came the news last July that practically all the West Point football and basketball teams had been breaking the honor code in order to pass their exams. Greatly strengthened was the impression that team players in colleges were, or at least thought they should be, on a free ride through college, a sort of gladiator class meriting special considerations and freedom from the academic responsibilities of other students.

Canada has had little experience with problems of this sort. Football is important only in the four or five big colleges of Ontario and Montreal, which all have academic reputations capable of keeping the enrolment and the finances up to par (and consequently also the athletic departments) without having to rely on high class football teams. This year at Varsity there has been even less talk than usual about football scholarships and so forth, no doubt because we have a winning team.

McGill, through the alumnae Touchdown Club, openly recruits and loans money to football players. Western, though not admitting it officially, brings high school stars around for a look see and takes them to sports events, and then if they decide to enrol, pays their tuition and expenses. All this is done by "interested parties," no money is taken from the funds of the university itself. Queen's have had much less luck with their ventures in this field; I personally do not know anyone at Queen's at present receiving athletic aid.

Toronto does not give aid to any players officially, though it is always possible that a few may be receiving help from alumni. Dr. Smith made clear the position of the University last year when he stated that under no circumstances would subsidization of athletes be tolerated at Toronto, and felt the student body would back him up on his decision. What he based this feeling on, I would be interested to know. But be that as it may, there is really nothing to stop a "friend of the family" (or two) from putting a promising pigskin toter through Varsity.

It would seem to me that if we wish to avoid the difficulties our American counterparts are experiencing, the present policy of duplicity is not the best. The Intercollegiate Union, possibly in conjunction with the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union, should agree upon a workable code defining what practices regarding the subsidization and status of athletes should be accepted — and followed.

OUR READERS WRITE

The Exlax Slogan

Editor, The Varsity:

In Friday's Varsity you carried a letter sputtering with indignation and overflowing with rhetoric which dared you to be a Daniel, and condemned your policy of printing articles from other papers. Instead of replying with a defence of that excellent custom, you simpered "honest injun" (ye gods, but ain't we cute?) and backed out, blushing.

Your coy attitude is all the more remarkable in that your editorial, printed a scant few lines from Mr. Shpherd's earnest rebuke, was the most aggressive and invigorating piece you have produced all year.

Mr. Shepherd wants to know whether we are so dull that we cannot be "fresh and thoughtful" five times a week. The almost illiterate pages of The Varsity answer him every day, with a salvo of outstanding "dullness, blindness and torpidity". Your editorial explains why.

The Varsity is dull because we, the students of this "privileged and honoured" university are dull; because we are a group of the most narrow-minded, unimaginative, sodden students that ever didn't do anything on a campus. It is time we gave the little group of serious thinkers who worry about our intellectual integrity, and who regret our irresponsibility something to fret about. We are letting our studies interfere with our education.

But more than the lure of books has brought about our present Utopia of Apathy; we are as dull in the pursuit of knowledge as anywhere else. For open and handicap all-round dullness, we are unequalled anywhere.

I have a suggestion, which I expect to be received in a resounding burst of silence. It is my privilege, as President of the newly-formed SEPFLABAV (Society for the Encouragement and Propagation of Free Love, Atheism, Boozing and Allied Vices) to solicit the membership of the entire university. It is the purpose of our organization to inject some overdue adrenalin into the veins of the student body. Our projects include:

—Converting Simcoe Hall into a House of Ill-Repute (a minor task).

—Filling The Varsity with suitable selections from Flash.

—Dynamiting the architectural monstrosities represented by Victoria College and other college buildings, and moving the lecture rooms across Bloor Street.

—Dynamiting the intellectual monstrosities represented by nine-tenths of the clubs on this campus.

—Hissing at anyone who wears a suit-coat in Hart House.

Driving a steel shaft into the centre of the Great Hall, and dragging Hart House over to Whitney Hall, which will become a readily available annex.

—Carrying on with anyone who cares to carry on.

Remember our slogan, which coincides with the Exlax slogan—"Don't just sit there, do something".

MOCK PARLIAMENT ELECTIONS IN DOUBT

ere is a good chance there be no campus elections for Mock Parliament this fall, in of plans to hold the first pus-wide campaign Nov. 15.

e final decision will be made meeting of the Mock Parlia- Committee of the Political Club this Friday. As the ce stands now the Liberal, er and LPP clubs on the cam- want the elections, but the donald-Cartier Club (the Pro- sive-Conservatives) are op- ed. The Political Science Club, sh is running the election, n't think that elections uld be held without the sup- port of all the parties.

The Mock Parliament is an annual event on the campus. Previously members were any interested students, who could affiliate with any party.

This year, however, a new system of election will be tried for the first time. There will be no constituencies; each party will go to the polls as a party. If the Liberals, for example, win 40% of the vote, they will receive 40% of the seats in the legislature.

All students are eligible to vote. This system has been tried on other campi, including Saskatchewan and Manitoba, with success.

The question of the continuance of election plans came up last Friday at a meeting of the Mock Parliament Committee, attended by delegates from all four campus parties. The President of the Liberal Club, John Medcof, moved that the elections be carried out as already planned. The resolution was supported by the Liberals, CCF and LPP, but opposed by the Conservatives.

The President of the CCF Club, Walter Parker, commenting on the new turn of events, said, "We feel that the Macdonald-Cartier Club is being very irresponsible as a campus political party in not coming out in the open to fight an election." This attitude was also supported by Shirley Endicott, LPP Club President.

"Though there was some justification for the withdrawal of the Macdonald-Cartier Club from the elections, yet their open reluctance to participate in campus politics is a betrayal of their duty as a campus political party," said John Medcof for the Liberals.

The president of the Macdonald-Cartier Club, David Fry, presented his party's reason for their stand at the meeting Friday. He stated that the representatives from the club at previous meetings of the Mock Parliament Meeting were not official, and that he had known nothing of the obligations involved.

"We oppose the election on the grounds that elections and a noisy campaign are both out of place on a university campus," he said.

He also pointed out that there were still several alternatives available to the club, and that the Conservatives might go ahead with the plan as outlined even yet.

ite Blue & White, tudents' Rudeness n Booing Incident

Student comments on the opposition of Varsity fans to ir cheerleaders at Saturday's game indicated that most not been aware of the Blue and White Society's ruling, ich appeared in yesterday's Varsity for the first time.

Said Herb Tilson, II PHE, "No one understood the situa- n when they booed the cheerleaders. Personally, I think e Blue and White Society are a bunch of clowns" (for not blishing their directive to the cheerleaders).

The ruling was mentioned in the statement issued by the Blue and White Society last Sunday. It directed the cheerleaders to "lead the spectators in cheering by applauding" rather than "a 'fight, fight, fight' form of yell when the injured player is assisted off the field".

"I did my best to boo the cheerleaders," said Alec Langford, II Vic. "Even though the crowd was wrong on this occasion, the cheerleaders have displayed poor spirit all fall and thoroughly deserved it," he concluded.

Brenda Gregson, also II Vic, believed that the jeers directed at the cheerleaders "were understandable at first, but after a while it was disgusting and childish — something that might happen in Grade eight."

Approached last evening on the soccer field, Ole Friele, IV Eng. Bus., commented: "I don't think the cheerleaders have enough spirit this year, but I don't think the booing from the crowd was justified."

"I thought it was a poor show by the students," remarked George Clark, IV C.&F. at UC.

The lack of co-operation by the Varsity fans was "an example of mob tactics", said Bob Macdonald, I Pre-Meds. "It was uncalled for to carry on throughout the game. They should have realized that the cheerleaders were doing their best," he added.

A few of the students interviewed are personal friends of some of the cheerleaders. They all indicated that the female cheerleaders were disheartened by the opposition of the spectators.

Helen Mackie, attractive Varsity Drum Majorette, said that the episode should be viewed from both sides. "The crowd didn't realize that the cheerleaders had orders not to cheer individual players, but the cheerleaders weren't in a position to inform the crowd of the rules. It didn't sound right, especially on Homecoming weekend, for the students to boo the cheerleaders, and they should be given credit for carrying on in spite of the opposition of the crowd," she said.

"Player number 23 for Queen's (Kennedy) felt badly because he thought the crowd was booing him for tackling and injuring Oneschuk," concluded Miss Mackie.

Letters about the Oneschuck incident will be found on page four.

Coed Capsule

The Ontario College of Pharmacy float took second place in the float parade on Saturday. It showed 50 years of pharmacy and the feature was a capsule enclosing a pretty coed. The Art and Archaeology float took first prize and the Dentistry and School of Music floats won honorable mention.

Choose Reps Scot Meet Unanimously

The regional vice-chairman of the National Federation of Canadian University Students have given their unanimous approval to the choice of delegates to the conference of twenty Western student unions at Edinburgh in January, so reported Jean de Margerie, president of NFCUS, in a letter to Syd Wax, VI Meds, chairman of the International Activities Commission, the foreign arm of NFCUS, and president of the Student Council here.

First choice will be Wax and second choice de Margerie, depending on funds. The regional vice-presidents have also informed de Margerie that they are going on an all out drive, through the student councils in their regions to raise sufficient funds for the trip. It was noted that the presidents of these councils and the NFCUS chairman have offered to give all their support to the fund raising campaign.

This is an impressive sign that campuses across the country are taking an active interest in the foreign program of NFCUS and lending it their support, said Wax.

Skule Detonator May Bring Suit

As a result of the explosion of a Faculty of Engineering detonator beneath the School of Law float in the Saturday parade, a panel of eminent jurists are considering what appropriate action can be taken. Serious damage amounting to the complete destruction of one disguised scrubbing pail, two sixty-watt light bulbs, four Liquor Control Board of Ontario beer glasses and one dazed and damaged law student was the result of the explosion. a spokesman of the panel said yesterday.

The real problem is not the damage or the fact that it was caused by Skule, he said. Difficulty arises in some obscure doctrines of law relating to the liability of lunatics and and infants, the spokesman added.

Research has disclosed, he stated, that infancy is decided entirely by chronological age for purpose of law which rules out one possible defence. The law regarding lunacy is more obscure. Usually the only excuse is the complete inability of the defendant to comprehend the nature of his act. Such a defense, the panel felt, would be a long-awaited admission which would be acceptable in the eyes of the law.

However in addition to the physical damage there would be further consideration for loss of prestige, damage to chances of winning the parade, and apprehension of personal harm by the malicious and negligent setting off of explosives in crowded areas.

The panel felt that their position under present law was unassailable but historically it was pointed out that civilized regions of the world have always been invaded by hordes of barbarians who have defied the law and it is possible that the present situation is analogous.

'Annex USA' Debate's Topic At West Point

The first international debate for Trinity College in three years will be at West Point Military Academy on November 9. The resolution will be: The United States should become a part of Canada.

The debaters, Dwight Fulford, III Trinity, and John Barton, IV Trinity, think they will be "ecstatically received" with such a resolution. The main points of contention will be the superiority of the Canadian political system, and the rectification of the historical mistake of the unfortunate colonial insurrection.

It is hoped that the West Point team will play a return engagement after their visit to McGill later in the season.

John Barton stated that the University of Toronto Debating Union also plans a tour of the New England States early in the New Year.

If...

. . . we had a Student Union building, the printing of photographs in this paper would not depend on whether or not someone happens to be using the Hart House Camera Club dark room, and The Varsity could employ female photographers.

Tweepers' Bark Worse Than Bite

Controversy about Tweepers raged all over the campus yesterday and opinions varied greatly. Grant Gibson (I UC) thought they were "a let down" while Gerald Found (I SPS) remarked that "the build-up was priceless" and "tweepers are very interesting". But the general idea seemed to be that the Tweepers were a come down from last year's Bloops.

The Director of the Blue and White Society, John Armour stated that from 1,500 to 2,000 Tweepers had been sold. He added that Tweepers will be sold on the train to London for the Western-Varsity game and before the game a week Saturday. A great many people seem to think that Tweepers were an anticlimax because of the great success of the Bloop campaign last year. Joan Morton (II Vic) thought that more girls would have bought Tweepers if they could have worn them. "Cute but useless" was the opinion of Joyce Cartwright (II Trinity). Pete Abels (I UC) with an eye to the practical side of the affair remarked that "Tweepers made good brooms".

But Tweepers seem to have accomplished in part perhaps the purpose for which the Blue and White Society designed them; they are something that everybody can get, and that everybody can wave and that will help to reinforce the All-Varsity spirit.

Harmonious Lines

Above is a part of the cast of the Bob Revue, to be produced in Hart House on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week. The show will be a combination of the old Bob Dance and Revue and the Scarlet and Gold, the previous annual revue produced by the students of Victoria College. While the usual lack of male talent appears in the photo, it is doubtful that they would lack applicants long for the position of pianist.

No Decision Yet On Scribe's Sex

The Board of Stewards of Hart House, meeting last Friday night, made no decision on the question of whether or not female Varsity reporters should be admitted to Hart House debates.

Warden Ignatieff explained that although a couple of members "felt very strongly" about allowing women to cover debates, "others felt that it was a tempest in a teacup and decided to drop the subject." As a result no vote was taken on the issue.

The Hart House Debates Committee discussed the matter thoroughly, Warden Ignatieff said. A letter was sent to The Varsity from the Debates Committee recently, requesting that only male reporters be sent to the debates in future. The letter thanked The Varsity for the accurate coverage given the debates in the past.

Said Varsity Editor Barbara Browne regarding the letter: "We will continue to give the best coverage possible to the Hart House Debates—and the last Debates story was, in our opinion, one of the best written this year. We are sure that the quality of reporting, rather than the sex of the reporter, is of far greater interest to the Hart House Debates Committee. Reporters, as far as The Varsity is concerned, are not considered as men and women . . . within limits."

The controversy began three weeks ago at a Hart House Debate when some debaters opposed the presence of Denise Richards, a Varsity reporter, who was covering the event. After a brief discussion, the Speaker ruled that Miss Richards could stay because "she is not here as an undergraduate member of the University but as an accredited member of the press."

Funny?

Student Readers

People are funny and so are students. Especially after they have just picked up The Varsity and don't realize someone is watching them.

For example—there is the glancer type of reader. He has what is termed a glancing eye and rather impatient disposition. A glancer can always be recognized by a bobbling head with quick movements from side to side. They usually flip pages back and forth and with the thrust of a Roman Conqueror throw The Varsity into the air.

The near sighted reader keeps his face so close to The Varsity you can hardly see his face, (which may be a good thing). Today the near sighted reader is hard to recognize—they fool us all by using a magnifying glass.

The giggles reader is here to stay. One can be blocks away and still hear the giggles reader whooping it up in Hyena fashion. What usually hurts is, the gigglers seldom know what they are laughing at.

Sport page Nells are a dead giveaway. They always speak of Bob Masterson's injured players in hopes of making a hit with the boys. A co-ed may be in the middle of a serious conversation and suddenly interject her sports repertoire by saying, "gee, choo choo Morris suffered a cubal quadralateral fracture of the left cheekbone—isn't that awful?"

Last but not least is the tooth comb critic. With a dictionary in one hand and The Varsity in the other, the tooth comb critic reader is out for the kill. They check spelling, the crossing of t's, and even check the weathe. report. Some even go further, they carry a ruler to measure the distance between the lines.

Strange, peculiar, and humorous are the habits of The Varsity readers. For a few good laughs between lectures, watch the readers on the sly and see for yourself.

They will prove that students are funny.

VIC'S CORNER

Well, peoples, here is the shortened version of our Corner — no padding, no nonsense, just the straight goods — Our big do right now is the BOB REVUE, NOV. 5, 6, and 7. The second of the series of V.C.U. chapel services, which made a successful start two weeks ago, is scheduled for this Sunday, November 4th. For those who don't remember from the last service, when Dr. Moore spoke on "Creative Tension", it will be held in the Vic. Chapel, starting at 7:00 p.m. Speaker for this service will be Mr. Kelly from St. Andrew's Church in Toronto. Although Mr. Kelly is fairly new in Toronto and is quite a young man, he has already acquired the highest reputation as an outstanding and compelling speaker, and will undoubtedly live up to the high standards set by the last service. Remember the reception and refreshments afterwards, too. . . . See you there!

Prof. McMullen will give the third in his series of talks on "How To Speak In Public", dealing with different meanings that may be attached to the same word. . . . this Wed., Room 18, at 4.

GATHLETICS: The Vic. I lost to U.C. on Thursday and are consequently out of the softball finals for the first season in years. But they worked hard and there's always next year. . . . The seconds, however, are still undefeated. How about a little support at their noon hour games. Basketball practices continue. Watch the bulletin board for notices about games. WE may not win the softball crown this year . . . but Hockey practices start in a week or two, so get those skates sharpened, girls. This is your chance for glory . . . !!

Stout Play
late whistle

Editor, The Varsity:

Re "A Poor Show", Oct. 29, 1951: In order to do away with needless recriminations, it is quite in order to clarify a few points from the viewpoint of the spectator re "the Oneschuk incident." Unaware, as most of us were, of the change of policy by the Blue and White Society concerning the cheers for an injured player, what transpired at Saturday's game can hardly be justly assessed as something "petty".

The incident, as I recall it, produced the obvious effect. Catching a punt on about his own 20-yard line Oneschuk was almost immediately cut down on a spectacular diving tackle by the Queen's end. Oneschuk, however, in falling, became disentangled from his grasp and attempted to move forward while still prostrate on the ground. As the whistle had not yet sounded signifying an end to the play, the Queen's end proceeded to apply the coup de grace to the crawling Oneschuk in the form of a swan dive upon the latter's body. This apparently caused the injury which to the average fan seemed to be quite serious.

What first aroused the ire of the fans was the slow whistle of the referee and the subsequent unnecessary roughness on the part of the Queen's player. It is quite understandable then, that they should become all the more provoked by the spectacle of the Varsity cheerleaders still reclining on the ground. Furthermore, when one of the cheerleaders did run out onto the field of play where lay the injured Oneschuk it seemed that through disinterest the cheerleaders had failed to see a play which had taken place not more than 15 yards from where they were sitting on the sidelines. What the crowd did subsequent to this can hardly be considered inexcusable in the light of what the spectator saw.

Saturday's game, moreover, is not to be considered a "dull" and "insipid affair". Any game which produces over 30 first downs evenly distributed on both sides could scarcely be rated as one which hovers in the depths of "utter anonymity". More lasting impressions, to me at least, than the Oneschuk injury were the stout and inspired line play of the Queen's forward wall, the passing of Miller and the receiving of Fleming, the resurgence of the Varsity line, when defeat loomed as a definite possibility the running of Bewley, McFarlane, McKelvey, Oneschuk and the kicking of John Adams.

The cheerleaders deserve credit for their inspired work. The subsequent displeasure of the crowd would not have resulted however, had one of them shown the foresight to run over to the P.A. announcer and had their actions explained when it became apparent to them that the crowd were mistaken in their notions.

Idle P.A.
no publicity

Editor, The Varsity:

We quote from your editorial of Monday, October 29 entitled "Poor Show" — "While the Blue and White Society may have blundered badly, it was the crowd who behaved most inexcusably." We take exception to this statement.

The Varsity committed a greater error by completely overlooking the viewpoint of those several thousands who booed. From our standpoint, it appeared that the cheerleaders were falling down on their job. In the past the custom has been to cheer an injured player. Why were we not informed of the change? No mention of this was printed in The Varsity, nor was any announcement made over an idle public address system at the time.

Queen's cheered Oneschuck as he lay on the field. Being ignorant of the rule we were immediately incensed when our cheerleaders did nothing. We booed to express our disapproval. Does this imply poor sportsmanship? If so, a large percentage of the crowd were poor sports.

To say we behaved inexcusably is wrong. Our excuse was ignorance. This ignorance was due to the inefficient publicity given Mr. Masterson's request by the Blue and White Society. Publicity is their job. They didn't do it.

The cheerleaders were not at fault. They carried on in the face of adversity, for which they are to be commended. They are doing a fine job.

Dictators
slow tempo

Editor, The Varsity:

Saturday's game bears ample evidence that our Blue and White Society warrants investigation. Instead of co-ordinating and promoting all-Varsity spirit this dictatorial group has set itself over and above rather than on student level. This year they have continued their practice of reserving a choice bloc in the student section from which they might have the best possible view of the game when they might better serve their function by circulating throughout the entire Varsity cheering section.

Furthermore, the poor administration of this society is observed in the performance of the cheer-leaders. They show absolutely no sense of timing: that is, they do not seize the right opportunity to lead an appropriate cheer. And, as if the distraction of a poorly-timed cheer were not enough, we are relegated to a pathetically slow tempo.

However, we hold the cheerleaders themselves blameless of these charges as they are merely following the miserable administration of the Blue and White Society.

Proud
august body

Editor, The Varsity:

I was proud to be a member of the crowd that behaved most inexcusably" on Saturday afternoon. When a player is hurt I expect to see something done for him . . . the cheerleaders ignored the crowd's ever increasing requests for a cheer for Oneschuk. So the "rude" Varsity supporters gave him a SPIRITED SPONTANEOUS UNLED cheer.

The natural result of the cheerleaders' indifference was a reciprocal indifference on the part of the students — a forcible reminder that a mistake had been made. Each time the cheerleaders failed to regain the confidence of the crowd, an even better cheer was given, again spontaneously. For this sin we are castigated by an inept editorial scribbler.

Everyone realizes there was no personal emnity towards the cheerleaders. They erred in trying to ignore the students, but the blame for the resulting unpleasantness can be laid at the doorstep of the Blue and White Society, 100%.

The next time this august body of morons breaks a long observed tradition, they might at least condescend to tell us poor students all about it beforehand.

Fatheads
a propoupou

Editor, The Varsity:

Fatheads of the press. Ignorance has reached a new high. Our meticulous daily did appear on Monday carrying a misfit of an editorial, "A Poor Show," or was it just another bombasted typographical error (a disease unfortunately quite communicable among The Varsity staff). As usual, The Varsity, in attempting to get something down on paper, printed a large editorial of superficial nonsense. Of course we must admit there was lots of imagination.

This, however, is quite à propoupou. Our gripe is about the tripe you tried to pawn off on your indigent readers.

To begin with, you cri... the students' lack of ... after the Oneschuk incident ... you so, so decently refrained ... mentioning the rudeness ... Varsity band at half-time. ... our guests of the tri-color ... Queen's Pipe Band, were dis... ing their talents, the Blue ... White band, not to be out... came loudly tooting down ... field. We hope this can be exc... as bad management on the ... of the Blue and White Society ... take the place of the old Var... pep rallies of former years.

In our opinion the B. and ... Society, instead of crying ... quarter by justifying their ... on the cheerleader dicision, sho... revise this policy of appaud... for injured players by resorting ... the time-tried system of cheer... a wounded player by name.

A few editorials back, you ... crastinated vehemently about ... lack of student apathy on ... campus. Please elucidate on ... editorial idiocincracies. Are ... hot-blooded rugby boors or ... natured apathists?

And so as a parting word ... are forced to say that The Varsity ... as a criterion of student ... census is all wet by a prodigious ... amount.

Feeble popular yell

Editor, The Varsity:

We feel that the cheerleaders ... although they fulfilled their duties ... faithfully at the game, did blun... der by not noticing Oneschuk's ... injury until it was brought ... their attention by the so-called ... "hot-blooded enthusiasts." The ... students blamed for the rudeness ... at the game Saturday should not ... be severely criticized. In our opin... ion the Blue and White Society's ... new rule is a feeble attempt at ... covering up the cheerleaders' ... error. We don't recall hearing a ... "fight, fight, fight" cheer; it was ... just a "yeah Steve Oneschuk," a ... popular yell at any game.

The Queen's cheerleaders should ... be lauded for their alertness and ... in being the first to run out and ... see who was injured and to what ... extent. While we are on the topic ... of criticizing, the Blue and White ... Society may take a few more ... hints. Montreal Lawyer Writes New Novel

The Second Scroll by A. M. Klein, McClelland and Stewart, 1951, $3.25.

By B. H. CHETKOW

The works of the Montreal lawyer-poet Abraham Moses Klein need no introduction to aware Canadians. Anyone familiar with Hath Not a Jew, The Hitleriad, Poems, and prize-winner The Rocking Chair will recognize the well-spring of this novel.

Indeed, the language — precision and prose-rhythms are those of a sensitive poet. The abundance of Biblical and Judaic allusions, and the skill of Yiddish idiom reworked into striking English are not missing. The author's expected Hebrew and Talmudic scholarship give his volume a provocative Bible-Commentaries form that ranges from Genesis to Deuteronomy, from prayers to passages of Talmud.

Abraham Klein's over-all subject, if somewhat monotonic and perhaps familiar, is so richly and brilliantly conceived that few readers could be disappointed. The quest of a young Montreal Jew for his elusive prodigy-uncle makes possible the introduction of many characteristic Jewish situations.

The youthful scholar, the old-country pogrom, the Casablanca ghetto, the Simchat Torah celebration, the tourist in contemporary Israel, the Jew's estimation of a Catholic Monsignor are each pleasingly vivid and accurate.

Incidental to an interest-holding narrative are a modern Jew's challenging reactions to the Sistine Chapel, to the recent Hebrew literature of Israel, to a sight of Titus' arch of victory, and to both Bolshevism and Hitlerism. Gloss Beth recalls The Hitleriad, and and Gloss Dalid portrays dramatically the plight of Jews in Arab lands.

In fact, the last 75 pages of The Second Scroll complement the text with a poetic autobiography, an elegy, a prose-poem of art criticism, a dramatic fragment, and a number of liturgical creations. Each of these, like a slice of rich wedding cake, rewards careful chewing and digesting.

That a wide literary as well as Judaic background would make for the fullest appreciation of this novel is axiomatic. Yet, the diversity and multiplicity of its virtues would ensure some enjoyment to every reader. No person wishing to stay abreast of significant contemporary literature will want to miss a reading of The Second Scroll.

Ave Atque Vale

If you see a bright face and sombrero smiling up at you from a pile of pamphlets in the bookshops this week, don't start looking in the other direction because you've already been to Mexico, or aren't interested in travel literature. It just so happens that the picture on the cover is very misleading and what you are really looking at is a report by John Murray Gibbon on Displaced Persons who have come to Canada in the past six or seven years. New Colour For The Canadian Mosaic is only thirty pages long and Gibbon's presentation is hardly what you might call colourful, but we believe that the people dealt with in this pamphlet deserve more attention from native-born Canadians than they have received so far, and we are grateful to Mr. Gibbon and his publishers, McClelland & Stewart, for taking a step in the right direction.

Since its organization in 1947, the International Refugee Organization has been responsible for transplanting over a hundred thousand D.P.s from Europe to Canada. A separate organization, the Canadian Christian Council for Resettlement of Refugees, which is interested only in people of German origin who would possibly be discriminated against in a larger resettlement organization, has been responsible for bringing out nearly twenty thousand Volksdeutsche, as these German-speaking people are called. Jews, Germans, Latvians, Estonians, Lithuanians, Poles, Ukrainians, Roumanians and Jugoslavians have all come to Canada in large numbers under the auspices of these two organizations.

To anyone interested in Canadian culture, the arrival and resettlement of these people in Canada will be of unlimited interest. In Europe, D.P.s are given a short course in Canadian History, and on their arrival in Canada are given lessons in Basic English. To offset this slight introduction to the Canadian way of life they bring with them a European heritage which most of them will fail to assimilate to their new home, in their own generation. Even during the few years that they have been here there have been precious few signs either on the side of Canadians or of the D.P.s to bridge the gap between the two cultures. Your comfortably well-off, middle-class Canadian feels that these people must make their own way, and in a great many cases is afraid of the professional competition that D.P.s might offer him. On the other hand, a great many D.P.s are apalled by the Canadian's lack of interest in any kind of cultural recreation and his relentless pursuit of material comforts.

Canadians need to be reminded that these people have a great deal to give to Canada along the cultural side — an aspect of Canadian life whose neglect the Massey Report has deplored. That the D.P.s influence has already been felt in this respect is evident in the following report of a performance by the Halifax Gotshalks Ballet, formed by two exiled Latvians. The C.P. press report says: "History was made in this old seaport city last night when a ballet performance started an almost hopeless traffic jam and a capacity crowd went home clamouring for more. Halifax Theatre, long dormant, appeared making a definite comeback as tickets for the two-thousand-seat, downtown theatre sold out four days before the opening." In our opinion these people will prove to be the dark horses in Canada's future cultural development, and Canadians would do well to take a little more interest in them. We have a lot to learn from them.

One Unhappy Reviewer

One Happy Morning by Louise Riley. Copp Clark, 1951, $3.00.

"One Happy Moment" is the story of Deborah Buchanan, a repressed librarian from Montreal, who flees to the Great Wide West in order to escape from the influence of her strong-minded, clubwoman mother. She has had the usual unhappy love-affair with the usual married man, who promises to marry her, but does nothing about it. When after approximately ten years it begins to dawn on her that he has no intentions of doing so, she decides to make the break from her possessive mother, and her worthless lover at the same time. She goes to a resort in the Rockies named September Lake, and there in the guise of a divorcee, she tries to regain peace and self-sufficiency. She meets a variety of people, such as the frankly seductive, yet warm-hearted proprietress of the lodge "Vangie Roseberry", the usual stormy adolescent, obviously in love with a young handsome geology professor; the Hermit, a man of some fame in artistic circles, who has fled from it all to find reality. Mrs. Horton, the diamond in the rough, cook, and Slim, the cowboy with aspirations for higher things. Mrs. Nelson, the mother of Susan, the stormy petrel, is the typical stuffy, domineering mother and wife of America. Her meek husband Fred rebels, in the course of events, and both gain stature and happiness in the process. The two characters who play the largest part in Deborah's coming-of-age are firstly, the aforementioned geology professor, who much to my surprise did not marry the heroine, but gave in to the blandishments of his eighteen-year-old houri, Susan Nelson. The second and most clearly delineated character of all, is Dr. Andrew Thornton, a middle-aged man, who spends most of his time counselling, and making love to Debbie. A supposedly happily married man, he is on his yearly holiday from his wife, who I would feel, was a particularly long-suffering woman, if her husband had many other holidays of this type. Under his benevolent guidance and tutelage in the gentle art of love-making Deborah emerges as a fairly attractive character, with some backbone. John Montgomery, her erstwhile lover enters the book briefly, and appears as a very unappetizing type of humanity. His wife has finally learned of his continuous infidelities and has decided to divorce him. He magnanimously chases across the continent to give Deborah the privilege of becoming his wife. The latter, having been eagerly encouraged and bolstered by her friends, manages to refuse his generous offer, much to his chagrin. He promptly tries to strike up an acquaintance with the alluring Vangie, but she after leading him on in the approved fashion, lets him know her opinion of him in no uncertain terms. Deborah's mother enters at the last, and demands that she come back to civilization. She is adequately portrayed as the "I've got so much to do I don't know what to do" type of clubwoman who tries to run the community, and charity, and completely ignores her immediate family, except as useful appendages for typing speeches, and volunteering for work at charitable functions.

The finale of the story finds Deborah having resisted the efforts of her mother, to come back to her responsibilities, and starting life anew in Vancouver.

Apparently Miss Riley has been very successful in the juvenile field, and that her work in this field was better. It is not that there is anything wrong with the book; there is just a refreshing lack of originality and maturity in it. The descriptions of the beauties of the scenery, the futility of life and philosophies of life are all very laudable, but they also have a faint ring of familiarity about them. The pseudo-sophistication of the plot fails to ring true.

The structure of the book is logical, and the language is excellent. One feels however, that is somewhat incongruous for ranchhands and hotel hostesses to speak with the grammatical purity and pedantry of a French text-book.

Perhaps I have been too severe in my judgment, and no doubt lovers of soap-operas will relish it heartily. It has the modernity of an unfinished end, and psychological problems, and it is well-written, as far as actual style goes, so I am sure, that many people will find it very enjoyable.

History Love Humility

History and Human Relations by Herbert Butterfield. Collins, 1951. $3.00.

In Christianity and History, Professor Butterfield gave his conception of the Christian's interpretation of history. Now, in History and Human Relations he gives his conception of the historians' presentation of history. These books are complimentary. Both approach the "world of human relations, whoch is the historians' universe." In History and Human Relations, Professor Butterfield clarifies the principles by which the historian must approach the universe of human relations, before he may add a Christian interpretation of what he finds.

To step out of one's own shoes into the shoes of others—that is the historian's purpose. The object of his science is the human personality, because it is the "only thing in the created world that really matters." But the true historian will recognize the universe within each personality. And he will recognize that his understanding is limited by the walls of his own personality. Therefore his work is to open new windows upon an infinite vista which can never be wholly seen. His method, then, is relentless search for exact knowledge. Only thus can the historian fulfill his function of broadening our understanding of human personality.

With burning clarity, Professor Butterfield shows the dangers in history when its purpose is denied. Because he is human, the historian is found setting up false barriers of prejudice, distorting his vision of human relations. The urgency of Butterfield's work, is rooted in the fact that what we think about people to a large extent determines how we act toward them. Therefore Butterfield sees in the right use of history, a challenge to undo some of the harm that the wrong use of history has done. It is a challenge to the historian to knock down the walls of prejudice, to look upon personality with sympathy. Then he will be able to pity

Kids Find New Pied Piper

Robert L. Shayon, TELEVISION AND OUR CHILDREN. Longmans, Green, 1951, 94 pp., $2.00.

More and more of us are becoming concerned with the frightening fact the gigantic battle for power between Man and Machine, is the real crisis of Twentieth Century western civilizations. This may sound like science-fiction stuff to many, but current theories on the effect of mass media of communications are on this line. Professor McLuhan's The Mechanical Bride went into this tendency entertainingly. At the first Hart House Library Evening last Thursday, Toronto Tely Book Editor James Scott suggested that machine's coming conquest of man has been the concern of practically all American novelists on this century. Although somewhat tenuous, the theory has a sound basis.

Then on a much higher level, Professor Harold Innis of the Political Economy department has been pursuing the theory that communications and development of civilizations run hand-in-hand.

All this is to introduce and perhaps suggest the importance of a little book, Television and Our Children. Written by Robert Lekis Shayon, a Saturday Review of Literature editor, this is a collection of articles originally written in 1950 for The Christian Science Monitor.

From the point of view of TV's effect on children, based on the American experiment in commercial television, Shayon explores the possibilities and dangers of the newest method of mass communications. The increasing triumph of Machine over Man is shown in the hypnotic effect that television has over its viewers. Shayon quotes teenagers who see the bad things about television programs and charges: "They may be repelled, appalled, offended — but they are fascinated."

Included are the various theories of child-study experts on television's probable effect on children, their habits, attitudes and development. Shayon does not attempt to give a one-sided case; he admits the impossible net that the commercial entrepreneurs of Television are in. They think in terms of "will it sell the product?"

Shayon's solution then, is that the parent listener mus activate himself to doing something constructive about TV development and improvement. He is concerned "not with the complacent, uncomplaining majority,but with the dissatisfied, rebellious minority".

Writing individual letters to the entrepeneurs is one of course. To do this effectively, an accurate knowledge of TV is necessary, as well as ability to pudge, to criticize constructively as well as destructively.

This individual course is coupled with another, perhaps easier one: to persuade children to watch "desirable" programs and not "undesirable" ones. But this all must come to a head in the organization of Listeners Councils, of which there are many devoted to the improvement of radio and television. Shayon affirms that a better pattern can be gotten within the framework of commercial operation.

We in Canada, of course, may avoid some of the hazards of Milton Berle and Hopalong Cassidy when the CBC experiment in TV control comes soon. This approach of course, is based on the British example, and like CBC radio should at times give a gratifying taste of some resistance to the pressure of commercial mass appeals to the lowest common denominator of public interest.

And Shayon's final thesis is that the development of Educational

Buffalo Defeat Harrier Blues

Buffalo State won the annual three-corner harrier meet with Varsity and Niagara U. last Saturday at High Park with a low score of 32. Toronto edged Niagara for second place as Herb Tilson came through with a win, setting a course record with a five-mile time of 28 minutes, 15.5 seconds. State placed men in 3, 4, 7, 8 and 10 positions while Varsity runners came in 1, 6, 11, 12 and 13, for a total of 43. Niagara's 2, 5, 9, 14 and 17 place finishes gave them 47.

Tilson set a course record in last year's meet at Niagara when he sliced three full seconds off the previous standard. The other Toronto men who finished were Chuck Wortman in sixth place, George McMullen, Murray Gaziuk, and Bud McCurry, 11th, 12th and 13th respectively, and Bob Sheridan 15th.

The Senior Intramural Harrier was held right before the Intercollegiate, and it was taken by Vic's freshman star Pal Johnston in the time of 31:04. Gord Rintoul of UC was 6½ seconds behind for second position. Third and fourth spots went to McCurry (Dents) and Sheridan (Vic) since their times in the Intercoll. were better than that of Meds' John Pyke, who followed Rintoul. They were eligible for the Senior Harrier although they ran in the other meet, so the five best times won.

Victoria continued its domination in harrier as they walked off with the tea mchampionship. Their winning team, besides Johnston and Sheridan, was composed of Banks (6), Bird (7), Angus (9), and Harris (10th).

McGill Gains Third Win Trounce Mustangs 26-0

By their 26-0 performance against the Mustangs in Montreal last Saturday afternoon, the McGill Redmen proved that their defeat of the Metrasmen the weekend before was far from an accident. In fact they left University of Western Ontario fans feeling that their team was something more than fortunate in not absorbing a worse defeat in the first game against the Redmen.

The McGill line was the star of the game. It held the Mustang offensive to only 26 yards gained rushing, and opened holes in the Mustang front wall that allowed McGill backs to gain a total of 285 yards along the ground. The Redmen were also better in the air, completing 5 out of 16 passes as compared with a record of 4 in 19 for the Metrasmen.

Geoff Crain, who led the McGill scoring with 2 majors, opened the scoring for the Redmen in the first quarter when he gathered in a pass from Robillard in the end zone ofter a series of ground plays and brought the ball up to the Western 25 yard line.

McGill scored twice in the second quarter, the first coming on a 30 yard run by Crain for a handoff. A few moments later, a Mustang fumble by O'Hara was recovered by the Redmen on the Western 1 yard line and Findlay carried over. McGill scored its final major in the fourth quarter when Haskell Blauer scored from 10 yards out.

Dave Tomlinson converted all four of McGill's touchdowns, and Bertrand rouged Bob Smith of the Mustangs for the remaining point.

The win was a sweet one for the Redmen who have been smarting ever since their defeat by the Mustangs in Montreal for the Intercollegiate title last season. It also threw a new light on the present Intercollegiate picture. McGill now have undisputed possession of second spot in the Intercollegiate standings, trailing the Varsity Blues by only two points. The performance of the McGill line against the Mustangs has made football enthusiasts look with greater anticipation toward the final game of the schedule to be played between the Blues and the Redmen in Toronto on November 10.

Speaking Of Sport

By DAVID ROTENBERG

Now that the Intercollegiate football schedule is two-thirds over it is time to take a look at the standings and consider the positions of the other three teams in the loop.

Starting from the bottom and working up, we find Queen's who have lost four straight, but their remaining games will affect the playoff chances of the other clubs. The Gaels who played at the Bloor Bowl last weekend were a greatly improved team over the one at Richardson Stadium the week before. The Kingston crew came out fighting, scored the first point, and almost upset the highly rated locals. If they can continue this spirited playing they should score an upset in at least one of their two final games.

The defending champion Mustangs are now in third place, and after their double loss to McGill, their playoff hopes have been reduced to a great many "ifs". If the UWO crew beats the Blues next week while the Redmen lose to Queen's, and if Western beats the Gaels the following week while Varsity beats McGill, then the Mustangs will end up in a second place tie with McGill, but will be awarded a playoff with Toronto as they will have beaten the Blues while the Redmen, if these conditions are fulfilled, will not have. But this is all speculation, for if the Redmen win one or the Mustangs lose one, Western will be left in third place out of the running, and from where we sit, it seems that Johnny Metras can start to pack up the silverware right now.

The McGill crew are the only ones with a real chance to beat out the Blues for the Yates Cup. After dropping the opener to Varsity, Obeck's crew have won three straight, including a convincing 26-0 victory over the Metrasmen last weekend. If the Redmen beat the Blues at the Stadium a week from Saturday, they get a playoff no matter what happens this week and McGill must win this one too in order to take home the honors.

Junior Medicoes Trounced Dents Register 34-1 Victory

The Dentists rolled home without much competition from the Med's II team yesterday afternoon. If you like to watch a team look good in every department while the other stands around looking as if they were waiting for a streetcar, it was a good game. The final score was 34-1 for Dents. The Med's one point came when the Dent's fumbled behind their line on a kick and were ruged. That was in the fourth quarter. Dents wore down an began to look bad for a while, and the Med's team managed, somehow to get a point out of it.

The game opened up right from the kick-off in the first quarter. Med's kicked off and the Dent's ran the ball back to their own 45. They lined up and on the team back they fired a quick pass good for 10 yards. And on the next play Gilbert threw a 25 yd. pass to Conner. Lefebre went around the end for 15, and a buck through the centre for the T.D. Hori made the convert good. Dent's kicked and the Medmen fumbled and Dent's recovered on the Med's 10 yd. line. Dent's plunged through tackle to the one yd. line, and then Gilbert sneaked the ball over on the next play. Hori made the convert good without any trouble.

That was the end of that quarter, and aside from the score of 12-0 the Dentists hinted that it was going to be a stroll through the park.

Next quarter the Dent's team kicked to Med's who ran the ball back to their own 20, and on the down they fumbled the ball. Dent's recovered and plunged through the centre for 5, and a Simpson to Wall Pass for 20 yds. made the T.D. look easy. Hori kicked another through, but the team was offside.

In the 3rd, Dents kicked off, Meds fumbled a rolling ball and again the Dentists recovered. On the next play they pulled a beautiful sneaker, and the Gilbert to Conner pass went over. Hori again kicked the convert with all the assurance of a boy kicking a can out of the way.

Dent's kicked off. Meds tried two plays and kicked the ball. Dents tried two plays and kicked the ball. The Medmen tried one through the centre for five and then fumbled behind the line. Dent's rushed in and got the ball for another T.D. The convert was no good.

Three more plays ended that quarter. In the fourth Dents began to look disinterested. The Med's began to use the pro pass to some advantage. They forced their way and the Dents team fumbled their way till finally Bobechko was able to kick behind the Lent's line. The rouge gave the Medmen their only point.

Dents began to come to life again. They brought the ball well up the field, and then kicked it to Meds. Meds tried a buck, and then a pass which was intercepted by Dentistry. That was the last play of the game and it seemed fitting that Dentistry should have been handed the ball.

Sportswoman

The women's softball play-offs got underway at Trinity field yesterday when UC whipped St. Hilda's II 13-5. The Red and White got away to a good start in the first inning when they batted in 11 runs, and held the Saints to only two runs in the last half of the session.

After the first inning the game was very close, with the UC girls getting two in the second and the Trinity team retaliating with three in the third. Mary Craw was a standout for the UC'ers with her careful pitching and her three run homer in the first. Heather Chipman aded a two run homer for the winners in the second.

In the other contest, Saint Hilda's firsts overpowered Vic II's 15-2, in four innings. The Saints built up an eight run lead before the Vicsters hit the scoresheet in the bottom of the third. The Scarlet and Gold came through with some inspired hitting but an error by one of the runners kept their score down to two. The Trinity girls came back strong in the fourth plating seven runs to put the game on ice. Donna Paisley and Marg Martin were outstanding for the winners while Joan Gore turned in a good performance in a losing cause.

He Scores

The above picture shows Dents' quarterback Doug Gilbert going over the Meds' goal-line on a quarter sneak for the Red and Blue's second touchdown in the first quarter. The Meds' line is holding back its opposition and seems to have stopped everyone but the ball carrier, who got right through.

Gilbert led his team as the Dentistry squad piled up the biggest score of the Interfacuity season. The Dents got 34 points on six majors, three converts and a single. The Medsmen got their single when the Dentistry squad fumbled behind their goal-line.

Badminton Squad Trials Tomorrow

The University of Toronto will go in for badminton in a big way this year, the Athletic Association announced yesterday. A team will be entered in the Toronto and District badminton league this year and from this squad the players for the Intercollegiate meet will be chosen.

Last year was the first in which badminton was recognized as an Intercollegiate sport. The Blues were entered in the Western section of the intercoll loop and came first in a meet against Western, OAC, McMaster and Waterloo College. As winners of this event the Varsity birdmen went to McGill but lost out to the Redmen.

Neil Hamilton and John Nasih, who were one, two on last year's squad will be back again this season, but they will be unable to compete in the Toronto and District league as it is a "B" loop and they are rated as "A" players, and therefore the city team will be composed of all new men.

In order to find the students at the University capable of holding down a post on his team, the badminton club is having an elimination tournament at the Drill Hall tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m. Anyone interested should phone Ed Clarke at KI. 0318, but entries will be accepted at post time.

Pitching Sportshoes

There were two soccer games played yesterday. At noon, Emmanuel had little trouble as they beat the Jr. SPS crew 4-0. Vanstone turned in his usual good performance netting two goals while teammates Logan and Penrose got one each.

In the four o'clock game, Sr. Meds and St. Mike's fought to a 1-1 draw. McDowell scored for Meds and Davies got the equalizer for the Mikemen.

In Boxla activity, Forestry beat the Meds III entry by a 4-1 count. Cunningham put in two goals for the Woodsmen and teammates West and Shannon added one apiece. Roberts of Meds spoiled the Forestry shutout.

On the volleyball floor, Jr. UC defeated the Trinity A entry in two straight games by identical 15-9 scores.

The Senior UC team didn't do as well as their Juniors as they lost to Senior Vic 15-0 and 15-3.

Senior Soccerites At Demonstration At Niagara Falls

Yesterday the University of Toronto Athletic Association repeated a precedent set last year when Art Chetwynd, director of publicity of the Athletic Association went over to Niagara Falls Collegiate accompanied by three members of the University of Toronto Soccer Blues to lecture and demonstrate to about three hundred school children the art of playing the soccer game.

Last year Brian Barton, the Blues' playing coach, Tom Broadhurst, and Newton Reed accompanied Chetwynd. This year Broadhurst, and Reed went again, with Ken Jessop replacing Barton. The demonstration was received enthusiastically by the school children, and it appears that this lecture and demonstration will be a good thing to continue in the future.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

You can never tell about screen biographies. But it is probably fairer to approach them from the viewpoint of Entertainment rather than Accuracy.

There is the Serious type. The Paul Muni versions of Louis Pasteur and Emile Zola were very dignified, almost sanctifying. You can win Academy awards with that sort of thing. Then there is the Not-So-Serious type, for the want of a better label. The Jolson episodes were more Jolson soundtrack than Jolson history. You can break Box Office records with these.

Then there are sports biographies. It is kinder not to do more than mention THE BABE RUTH STORY. But THE PRIDE OF THE YANKEES and THE STRATTON STORY were good pictures. They told about baseball stars Lou Gehrig and Monty Stratton in thoroughly entertaining if somewhat tear-jerking fashion. The only qualm is that if a sports figure is to be immortalized in celluloid, it seems there would have to be something really bad happen to him. Nobody makes a movie about Ty Cobb, or even Jack Dempsey. Not recently anyway.

The current sports biography is JIM THORPE: ALL-AMERICAN (at the University). The more correct title should perhaps be BURT LANCASTER: ALL-AMERICAN. But this film, made by the same Warner Brothers who made the Mister Paul Muni epics, is an interesting mixture of sports and entertainment. Plus, it would seem, some solid biography.

JIM THORPE: ALL-AMERICAN is an absorbing and enjoyable film. An example of the new Hollywood compromise between entertainment and a serious message, this biography does an excellent job. And who is to say that the method of compromise, for example GO FOR BROKE, is not the most effective? If a thing must be said persuasively, to a mass group, a qualified elaboration of the American Dream would be taken in by those who would walk out of A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE.

What makes JIM THORPE seem an honest attempt at biography is that it is hard to pin down exactly what the Message is. That is, there is no one Message, but pertinent comments on the Indian problem, still quite valid, on miscegenation, and on the age-old argument about amateurism (we think of Avery Brundage) are presented.

Thorpe's story is of tremendous athletic achievement, of great triumph and deep bitterness. The breakdown of a proud, stubborn and simple man is portrayed without the usual complete sympathy so often awarded by Hollywood writers.

And the most exciting thing about this Michael Curtiz movie is that the ups and downs of Thorpe's career are depicted on and not off the athletic field. To do this effectively, Burt Lancaster, probably the only Hollywood star who could convincingly portray an all-around athlete, plays Thorpe with intensity. Lancaster flashes across the screen, in the Stockholm Olympic pentathalon and decathalon, playing football for the Carlisle Indians, baseball, etc. This is like seeing the hands of a movie pianist, only more so.

As ALL MY SONS and THE KILLERS proved, not only has Lancaster much muscle, he has acting ability. There is not too much acting needed in THORPE, but the brooding, bony face of Lancaster makes you feel at times that this could be Thorpe himself.

The Hollywood grandiose touch naturally results in athlete-heroes becoming supermen. At other times, this faculty has been annoying, but not in JIM THORPE. The legend and the records show that this Oklahoma Indian was a kind of superman himself.

Thorpe's breakdown after the death of the young son is convincing but not as exciting as the first half of the film when he is the nation's and Carlisle's darling. The script sinks a few times to soap opera quality, but is offset by happy scenes like the wordless contest between Lancaster and rival Steve Cochran on the campus athletic field for the favor of heroine Phyllis Thaxter.

Charles Bickford is superlative as mentor and friend, Pop Warner. Miss Thaxter is a pallid sort anyway, and seems mismatched from the start, but she is sweet-girlish in a 1920-ish way.

With JIM THORPE is a Bugs Bunny cartoon, HIS HARE-RAISING TALE, which unlike the usual Bugs effort also has a fine punchline, and introduces a welcome newcomer, a pop-eyed nephew of the smart-alec rabbit.

all men, because he will see that they are in the human predicament together with himself.

We are all, in a sense historians. We peep out upon the world of human relations and draw our own conclusions. But Butterfied has shown in a polite but unmistakable way that most of us are quacks. There is intellectual and spiritual glue in our shoes. We can't get out of them and into someone else's, especially if the someone else doesn't think as we do. If this book makes us want to change shoes, it has succeeded in what it set out to do. And Butterfield recommends as the most effective glue solvent, the Christian attitude of love and humility.

A Tired Gimmick

The progress of our much-touted civilization has now arrived at the point where nearly every week is a special Week, dedicated to the solemn admiration (and financial support) of some facet of North American life.

We now have a Canadian National Institute for the Blind Week, a Health Week, an Education Week—even a National Cat Week. Like all good advertising gimmicks, this one gets tired easily. Effective within its limits it certainly is. But we would like it to leave us a little space in between when we can think our own private thoughts.

There are fifty-two weeks in the year. This is an unfortunate circumstance but a fact. We would like to take the liberty of performing a facial contortion. We would like to curl our lip and put tongue in cheek. This done, we would like to suggest that the obsolete seven-day week be replaced by a five-day week, in order that there may more weeks in the year to set aside for Favorite Causes.

Limited as we are, as to the number of weeks at our disposal, technicalities are bound to become embarrassing at times. This week the worst has happened. October 27 to November 3 has been set aside as Canadian Book Week. It has been set aside every bit as forcefully as National Radio Week. What to do? Can the Twentieth Century mind devote itself to two causes in one and the same week?

We suggest that the week of November 4 to 11 be set aside as National Week Week. Its aim will be to give individuals across the continent a chance to sit back and think about the institution of the National Week, how it can best be utilized, what Causes are worthy of a National Week, and whether the National Week device is so worn out as to warrant discontinuing it.

We predict that one of the outcomes of National Week Week will be the appointment of an International Week Coordination Committee. Its purpose will be the prevention of such blunders as the one under whose effects we are straining at present—the coinciding of two National Weeks.

Short of this, the only effect will be chaos.
Its cure? The abolition of the week.

Doors

Complaints around the University once in a while have effects. Once upon a time, The Varsity printed a story to the effect that the door of Hart House was impossibly heavy. The story even insinuated that the weight of the door had been the direct cause of a mythical student's death. That day, the door of Hart House was loosened.

This fall, Hart House frequenters found the door again too heavy for the human touch. The rare student carrying an armful of books suffered especially. Soon the wheels were set in motion to make the door open more easily. It does. Now when it is given a healthy push it swings back, hits the wall, and smacks the unsuspecting on whatever portion of the anatomy happens to be nearest.

Under the category of the sticky and heavy also comes the Southeast door of University College. Co-eds have been seen waiting at the door until a male of the species comes along to apply his superior strength. It is a regrettable situation.

Yes Or No?

Athletic Scholarships

This is the Second of Two Articles on the Current Problems of Collegiate Athletics.

By MAL CRAWFORD

There is little doubt that most of us would like to see the continuance of intercollegiate competition in football and basketball. The excitement, the loyalties, and the needed escape from four dark walls and a ceiling, which the game itself provides; the cheering and the cheerleaders, the camaraderie of the away weekends; the bands, the bottles, the blondes . . . the whole spectacle is in itself a part of our way of life.

The men who play the games are students like everyone else, must pass their exams like everyone else or they do not play football. As with students in other heavy extra-curricular activities, it is almost impossible for intercollegiate athletes to hold academic scholarships. This is more true of these activities than it is of most because a football player cannot take a night or two off to get ahead on his studies, as can a debater or a campus politician. The competitive element is too high—and perhaps that is all to the good. A large proportion of college football players have become successes in the business world as a result of the competitive drive developed in athletics.

If the athletes contribute in a large way to college life, and need financial support to stay in college, it seems only reasonable that they should receive it. Charges of professionalism are entirely pointless; a subsidized college athlete is no more a professional athlete than an academic scholarship holder is a professional student. The former usually makes a broader contribution to university life than the latter because he is encouraged to be a good student too, and must pass his exams, whereas the latter is not required to be an athlete, and usually hasn't time for much else besides if he wishes to keep his scholarship.

I would personally be in favour of athletic subsidies simply because of my acquaintance with athletes in both American and Canadian universities who would not be able to go to university had they not received this help. A football or basketball player can use his ability in athletics to provide himself with an education, and consequently a career which would otherwise be only a vision.

Colleges whose prestige and financial position have been established by famous football or basketball teams have been able to raise or maintain high academic standards. Some have in this way become ranking universities. Gate receipts have enabled them to afford higher paid staff and facilities, and the name itself serves to attract students. This is not a very secure position for a university to be in, since it would seem that if the teams failed to win, or got involved in some scandal, the whole university would go into decline. However, it cannot be denied that colleges like these are providing thousands of students with good educations which many of them would not otherwise be able to obtain.

These so-called athletic scholarships, which seem to result almost inevitably when sport becomes business too, are of course not taken out of the funds of the universities. They don't have to be. Usually alumni organizations provide a fund for the purpose. In the Western Conference, there is another fund as well which is taken out of the program sale at the games. This seems to me to be better than letting in outside influences like booster clubs, which sometimes gain virtual control of a university's athletic department, and at best makes life very unhappy for losing coaches.

Unfortunately, alumni interference is not the worst that can happen to a college if athletics and the rah-rah spirit is the main reason for students' being there, or if busy ticket wickets are the authorities' main concern. A large number of American universities have degraded themselves academically with physical education courses featuring twenty hours a week of sports and one hour of academics, or with courses in Canasta, fly casting, and other aspects of higher learning. These are extreme cases, but they do exist, especially in the deep south and the far west. While the financial expediency of catering to people who want to be college boys or girls but not university students may be just as responsible for these monstrosities as football players on a free ride to a B.A., football was in many cases the original reason for lowering the standards.

Instead of compromising the academic standards of the university directly, it can be done indirectly by doctoring the marks of players to give them the standing required by the league. This is an even greater offence than the other, since as well as lowering the academic standards by encouraging poor students, it often allows a person who has no right to be at university and will probably gain little benefit from being there, to take the place of a bona fide student. Such a case came to light this year at William and Mary University in Virginia. Instances of this sort are rarely heard of, but are easy to conceal.

It is possible that the whole matter in the United States may have to be covered by a Federal law regulating subsidization of athletes and athletics. However, it would be much better for all concerned if such regulation could be left to the heads of the universities themselves. It is up to them whether academic standards are to be corrupted or maintained, whether a sensible system of athletic scholarships is to be devised or whether under-the-table handouts are to continue. Even in the wildest moments of football frenzy, few would censure a university president for upholding the integrity of the university.

Picture Window College

Editor, The Varsity:

It is our unanimous opinion that the University of Toronto is not providing what a university should provide and ought to be annexed to the United States immediately. As the University of Northern New York, we could have:

1. A subsidized football team and courses which are not unreasonably difficult for it, such as knitting, or needlework, so that the players could do their homework while warming the bench.
2. Professors like the ones we see in the American movies, i.e., unmarried, uninhibited and under thirty.
3. As part of the United States, a bigger voice in the UNO, and perhaps even a university representative on the cultural committee.
4. All undesirable males on the campus drafted for active service in Korea.
5. Slacks worn to classes in winter and shorts in the summer.
6. A vote on the personalities and teaching ability of our professors.
7. A Student Union (all American universities have them) complete with cocktail bars to replace our obscure dives.
8. Instead of outdated architecture, modern aluminium and picture windows; instead of gargoyles to frighten us, a statue of Benjamin Franklin to inspire us.

In short, we yearn to be a drop in the fountain and a source of North American culture.

Sepflabav

Editor, The Varsity:

In Monday's Varsity I read a letter to the Editor by a young Vic student who calls himself Walt Stewart. I cannot express to you my concern over this matter. Is not this university a Christian university and are we not church-going, law-abiding citizens? That such a man as this Walt Stewart should be allowed on the campus and allowed to speak, shows such a public apathy that it sickens me. This man who has organized a society called the SEPFLABAV is a discredit to Vic and the university as a whole. Good God, this man is toying with the most sacred things in life.

My anger at him is only slightly more heated than my anger at the editors of The Varsity for allowing this to be printed. With a woman as Editor-in-Chief I expected purity in every word. But this is not purity, this is vile rubbish. I hereby declare that I shall lead a crusade against this society. Those who wish to join my society, the SDPFLABAV (Society for the Discouragement and Prevention of Free Love, Atheism, Boozing and Allied Vices) can reach me between the hours of 8-12 in the KCR. I am always in the right-hand corner. Ask anyone who is there. They know me. We shall lick this thing.

Richard Arnold, II Vic.

Not Just Junk

Editor, The Varsity:

In a letter to the Editor last Friday regarding the insertions of editorials from other campus newspapers into The Varsity . . .

Admittedly Mr. Shepherd would have a legitimate complaint had The Varsity been going to extremes in printing just junk, but of the articles I have read, some have been amusing and others enlightening. Surely we can share a column or two for such material as merits the honor and privilege; not only does it create friendliness (of which this earth is in need) but as the editor stated in the post-script, we ought "to know how people elsewhere are thinking. . . ."

NFCUS A World Leader In Pan-Am Union Stand

We are rapidly assuming a position of recognized leadership in international student affairs, Syd Wax, chairman of the International Activities Commission, foreign arm of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, reported yesterday.

Over the weekend Wax was contacted by the Brazilian Student Union and the United States National Student Association. Both commended the forward stand that NFCUS is adopting in the international field, Wax reported.

The Brazilian student union is leading an attempt to organize a Pan American Student Union. A conference to discuss formation of such a confederation will be held in Rio de Janeiro from November 3 to 10. At the last NFCUS conference in London, Ontario, the IAC was mandated to take an interest in the formation of the Union.

In a letter to the secretary of International Affairs of the Brazil Student organization, copies of which were sent to student leaders and university newspapers across the country, Wax, on behalf of NFCUS asked if sufficient time had been allowed to properly organize the student unions in South America before attempting a full scale Inter-American Conference. Wax also asked whether it would not be wiser to organize a strong South American student organization first and leave a full Pan-American Union until later in the year.

Because of finances and the early time of the conference NFCUS will not send an official delegate to the conference. However IAC is arranging with Canadian University graduates, who are working in Brazil at the present time, to act as an official observers at the conference.

A telegram was also dispatched congratulating the Brazil union on its efforts and expressing the support of NFCUS toward establishment an a Pan American Student Union.

To Debate Need For Union Now

The University of Toronto Debating Union is planning a debate run by SPS to be held next Thursday afternoon on the motion, "Resolved that the University of Toronto needs a Student Union as soon as possible." Speaking for the affirmative are Cliff Wilson, IV Architecture, and Mrs. Lois De Groot, IV SPS. Dave Rose and Al Strauss, both IV UC, will oppose the motion.

Chuck Li. Hanley, III UC, Chairman of the UTDU, said this is the first of a series of invitation debates to be held in each of the colleges and faculties to stimulate university-wide and co-educational debating. The program for 1951 will also include proposed tours to Boston, Chicago and the Eastern Canadian Universities in co-operation with the Intercollegiate Debating Union. He said that four Scottish universities are sending teams to Canada in January to visit McGill, Queen's, Western and Toronto. Preliminary trials among these four universities will decide which university will compete for the Championship Trophy between Canada and Scotland.

The debate to follow the one at SPS next week is to be held in Trinity. As yet the topic has not been decided.

Problem Of Communist China To Be Discussed By U.N. Club

Mr. Ali Tayeb of Karachi, Pakistan will outline the problem of admission of Communist China to the United Nations at a meeting of the United Nations Club in Wymilwood Thursday. The meeting will be a joint one held by the International Students Organization and the U.N. Club. A social hour starting at 3:45 will be followed by the regular meeting at 4:45.

The urgent and thorny problem of the admission of Communist China is the current topic of U.N. Club discussion groups which will continue throughout November in preparation for the model Security Council meeting on December 6. On that date students elected by the eleven study groups will present the view of their respective countries in the Security Council.

After two meetings the membership of the U.N. Club is over 50. The majority of members are Canadian students. A special invitation is therefore extended to students of other countries at present attending the University of Toronto to join the club. In this way a true understanding of the point of view held by each of the countries studied will be more easily obtained.

Mr. Ali Tayed was born and lived in India where he attended the Moslem University Ali Garh, graduating with both BA and MA degrees. Following the partition of India Mr. Tayeb moved to Karachi Pakistan. Last year he came to Canada on a Vincent Massey Scholarship to do research work for his Doctorate of Philosophy at U. of T. Mr. Tayeb is presently teaching on Asia in the Geography Dept. and is Don of Caven House at Victoria

CAT CONTEST

The Varsity's Cat Photo Contest, announced in yesterday's paper, has a further announcement to make. The deadline for photos will be extended to 2:00 p.m., Friday, November 9.

Prizes of one tin of cat food will be given for the cutest and most repulsive photographs of our feline friends. The contest is sponsored in the interests of National Cat Week, November 4-10, which aims at the restoration of the Cat to his rightful position in contemporary civilization.

Entries should be submitted to The Varsity News Office, Rm. 62 in the basement of University College. Admit to Lectures cards must be checked before entries can be accepted. Members of The Varsity staff are not eligible for this contest.

The Champus Cat has expressed a strong interest in Cat Week, and will have somewhat to say about it next week. He has been quoted as saying on the subject, "Well, I'll be!"

If...

. . .we had a Student Union Building, a great deal of valuable newsprint would be saved because The Varsity wouldn't run a campaign every year for one.

Exchange Specs With Carabiners

"What we try to do on the Carabin weekends is to swap spectacles a while with the Montrealers."

This was how one student participating in last year's Carabin week-explained the aim of Varsity's reciprocal visits with the University Montreal students. The object is to find out where the difference in look lie, and, equally important, to emphasize what we have in com-
. The views shared by both the English and French-Canadians can used as weapons to attack the differences.

Since all students share a love for, and let-down many barriers er, argument, a good party or a sing song, the Carabin weekends have, the five years of existence, included all these things in generous asure.

This year's program will follow similar lines. For three super-active , forty Toronto students and forty Carabins will trade ideas (in glish, French and sign language) on Life, Love and the Pursuit of ucation. When the Carabins leave, both they and their hosts should left with many new things to think about, as well as with pleasant mories.

Later in the week a detailed program will be published of the ac-ies planned for the Carabins' visit here, which will take place the ekend of December 7, 8 and 9. The return visit will be some time in ruary.

Application forms are available in the two S.A.C. offices.
Montreal is a university composed mainly of students in professional rses. In the past few professional faculty students have volunteered Varsity, to the disappointment of the Carabins. The SAC External airs Committee, which runs the Carabin Weekend, hopes that more
dents of the professions will apply this year.

Need Churchmen For Far North

"Many people in Northern Ontario are living on the stomach level instead of the soul level," said Bishop Wright of Algoma. The topic of his speech on Tuesday, sponsored by the Trinity Student Christian Movement, was the opportunities for university graduates in outlying districts. He said the need for recruits for the ministry, in all communions, was outstanding.

Social workers with definite training are needed to raise the standard of living, and there is also a great need for doctors, especially in thinly-populated areas, he said. Bishop Wright also talked of the work of teaching in the Indian schools. He stressed the fact that culture of all kinds is lacking in Northern Ontario, partly because of the newness of the mining communities, and because so much of the wealth of the mining and paper industries drains away to Toronto.

The Bishop's diocese of Algoma extends from North Bay to the lakehead and from Muskoka to Kirkland Lake. It covers about 70 thousand square miles. This compels him to spend about half of his time travelling from place to place. There are 214 individual churches in this diocese, but even in some cases one clergyman covers as many as 10 of them.

Top Jazzman At Toronto

Louis Armstrong — the greatest name in jazz — returns to Toronto on Nov. 3 for a concert at Massey Hall. This will be his first appearance here in two and a half years.

It may also be his last for a long time: Existing Hollywood commitments and further tempting offers from the west coast may mean break-up of his All Stars. Louis is reported to be considering staying in Hollywood.

With him on Nov. 3 will be five men and one girl. And All Stars they are: Earl Hines on piano, Barney Bigard on clarinet, Cozy Cole on drums — all top jazz musicians and two newcomers to the band: bassist Dale Jones and trombonist Russ Phillips. The girl is Velma Middleton, who adds her lusty voice to the proceedings.

Satchmo's fabulous career has paralleled the story of jazz music. His trumpet has led the way; his inimitable manner of singing has delighted generations; his magic personality has helped make him one of the giants of the jazz world.

$1,000,000 For Needy Students In Saskatchewan — Douglas

The Saskatchewan Minister of Highways and Transportation, the Honourable J. T. Douglas, addressed a group of students of the Student Christian Movement Tuesday evening. Mr. Douglas outlined the policy of the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan as regards agriculture and labor.

In outlining the C.C.F. plans for industrializing the province Mr. Douglas cited both successful and unsuccessful attempts. "In the insurance field we have broken new ground in automobile insurance and for $10 a year offer the cheapest automobile insurance in any province in Canada," he stated.

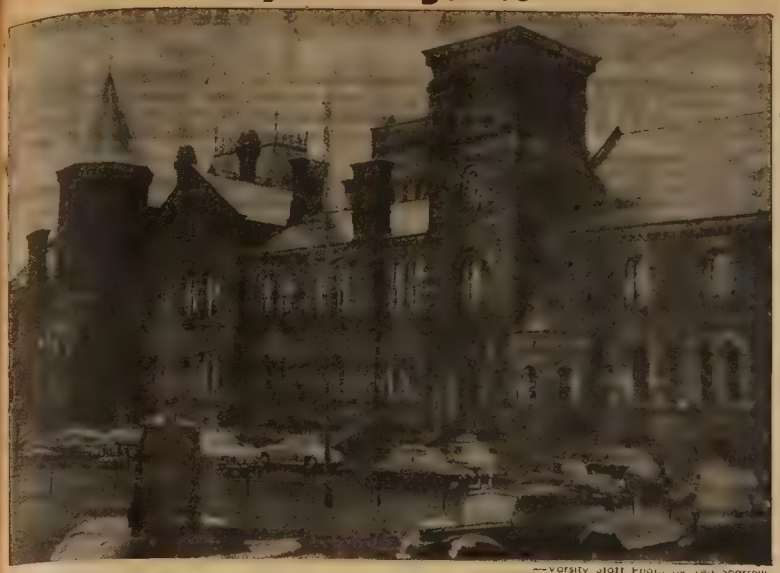
Most of the buslines in the province have been taken over and the mileage of bus transportation has been increased by over 50% stated Douglas. There was no alternative to entering the air field, added Douglas, as there was no other way to open up the northern part of the province. Now trappers, prospectors and even American tourists can travel easily throughout northern Saskatchewan, he said.

Assistance given to prospectors in the north led to a uranium find in the Black Lake area which is one of the greatest finds on t continent. A mill is being built th now and when it is completed t output should be more than th at Great Slave Lake, stat Douglas.

"Horsemeat is becoming popul in Saskatchewan and is doing aw with the surplus of wild hor which use up good pasturag pointed out Douglas. In Swi Current a horse processing pl has been built and is finding ready market in most of Euro In Vancouver, Winnipeg and pa of Saskatchewan there are sa that sell horsemeat, he added.

The C.C.F. Government enlarg the power system and bought up private systems needed to increa the output, Douglas said.

"The hospitals planned for community have produced wonde ful results", said Mr. Douglas, wh describing the great hospitalisa scheme set up in the province.



Mr. Douglas also told of a fu of $1,000,000 set up to aid needy u versity students who could defer payment until their graduation. is hoped to make it a revolving fu

US Schools Report Need Of Engineers

Morgantown, W. Va., (Exchange) —There is a shortage of all types of engineers in the U.S. The Daily Athenaeum, Morgantown's student newspaper reports. Because of the rush to enrol in the engineering profession after the war, students were warned against an impending surplus of engineers and the danger of unemployment. The enrolment immediately dropped drastically. Now American students are being urged to take engineering.

University College, pictured above, is one of the most fascinating pieces of architecture on the campus. It was built in 1856, burned down six years later, and was subsequently rebuilt. Since then, the interior has been modernized. However, the numbering system of the rooms has not been changed, and students have been known to be lost for days among the intricate mazes of U.C., looking for lectures.

Push Professional Spirit Cut Social Life — SPS

The Engineering Society is going to try to bring back into its program a bit of the professional spirit which has been lost almost completely, said Society President Doug Sherk yesterday.

He explained that many Engineers feel that during the "big spending years" after the war, social events played too great a part in Skule life, while technical activities were almost completely eclipsed.

For this reason, the Engineering Society is trying to attain closer affiliation with the graduate and professional engineering groups, in an attempt to "show that we're not just lecture-going fun-lovers, but potential engineers," Sherk explained.

The Society will also try to build up greater interest in the General Meetings, which sponsor guest speakers who are in many cases prominent professional engineers.

"Skule Nite and the Engineering At-Home will, of course, aim at being better than ever this year," however, there won't be any year dances, except the Grad Ball and perhaps the Engineers' Ball. "The aim is to have a lot of fun," said Sherk, "but to have it all at a few times, instead of spread through the year."

This trend towards more professional activities is just a return to the original idea of the Engineering Society, he stated. As examples of what he hoped the Society should gradually be able to do with popular approval, he pointed to the McGill Engineer," a magazine put out by that university's Engineering Society, made up of technical articles. Examples of similar magazines on this campus are the Medical Journal and the Commerce Journal.

In an effort to effect closer affiliation with the graduates, the Society is sending two representatives to the Engineering Alumni Junior Council (i.e., the part of the Engineering Alumni Association made up of graduates of the past ten or twelve years). The graduates are also being invited to attend Society meetings when there are items of mutual interest, such as the float parade.

Engineers' GoodName In Danger

A plea that "all tentative charges against 'Our Good Name' might be dropped" was filed by the Engineers yesterday. The 'Good Name' refers to the Faculty of Engineering and the charges were laid by the Faculty of Law when a Skule detonator "seriously damaged" the Law float in Saturday's Float Parade.

"Confronted, during the parade, with an unexplainable pile of junk blocking our path," the Engineers said, "we were forced to remove it by honest engineering methods. The 'object', a front-page article in The

EAC To Rehash Soviet Exchange

Immediate discussion of the proposed Russian and Canadian student exchange will be instituted by the representatives of the External Activities Commission in their school or faculty organizations. This was the result of a motion passed at the meeting of the External Affairs Commission last night in the Mining Building Board Room.

Reports of the stand adopted on this issue by the colleges and faculties will be presented at a meeting of the EAC in four weeks. On the basis of these reports EAC will take a stand to be presented to the National Federation of Canadian University Students.

The motion was presented by Peter Alley, IV Trinity, vice-chairman in charge of International Student Service on this campus. It was the result of a stand adopted on the exchange visit of Russian students at the recent ISS conference at McMaster University.

Three alternatives were presented to the meeting by Alley. Either EAC press for a reversal of the NFCUS policy by asking that the Russian student delegation be invited to come to Canada this year, or go on record they do not favour such an exchange at all. The third alternative is that the delegates to the next NFCUS conference be instructed to issue an invitation next year.

In order to put the NFCUS stand adopted at the last NFCUS conference in London, Ontario in September squarely before the students on the campus, a directive was issued the publicity committee to prepare a statement on the history of the invitation issue and the reasons for the stand adopted at the NFCUS conference for publication in The Varsity.

Alley also told the EAC that no chairman had yet been found to take charge of the proposed student relief campaign. Five hundred already have been approached without success, he said.

Because no chairman has yet been found, no report has been presented to the Commission on the type and organization of the campaign suggested for this year.

Discussion about the importance of getting the campaign organized and underway as soon as possible ensued. A motion was finally adopted mandating the chairman and two vice-presidents of EAC meet with the provisionary campaign committee and report to the next meeting of the EAC on a suggested type of campaign. A definite decision will be made at that time.

The weekend committee reported that a letter has been sent to McMaster, Waterloo, Ontario Agricultural and Ontario Veterinary Colleges suggesting a joint week-

Letters about the "Onescnuk incident" will be printed in the future only if they contain new material and are not re-hashes of old letters.

The last word goes to D. Sherk, IV Eng. Bus.:

"The true shame of the situation is that the people who do the loudest shouting in this matter are never around when the Blue and White cries for members and helpers early in the Fall . . .

". . . let's not blame the lack of spirit on the cheerleaders and the Blue and White. Let's blame ourselves."

Cowardice

Editor, The Varsity:

The reluctance of the Campus Tories to participate in the campus mock parliament elections is political cowardice. There are two possible reasons: (a) They are properly afraid of losing; (b) The Macdonald-Cartier club on its present exclusive basis is incapable of fighting a proper campaign.

If the campus Tories are to be effective they must seek support outside the one college and certain fraternities where they are now centred. This means admitting outsiders to the clique. This the Macdonald-Cartier group do not want. Thus they are seeking to hinder elections not through direct opposition but by working through the Political Science Club.

The attitude of the Macdonald clique is disgraceful. Dignified exclusiveness is out of date. If they do not think enough of their party and its program to present it to the students, it is high time for the formation of a more representative Conservative group that will. The date for action is November 15.

J. Medcof,
President, U. of T. Liberal Association.

Yea Team

Editor, The Varsity:

As members of this year's cheerleading squad, we would like to express our regret over the controversy now raging in The Varsity regarding the Oneschuck Incident". As was decided at the beginning of the season, we have led an applause of respect, for an injured player while he was being assisted from the field. It seems unfortunate that no objection has been made to this practice until Saturday when one particular star was injured, although a number of our fine players have been hurt at different times.

We understand the concern of the fans over the apparent serious injury to Steve, but the continuous booing and lack of cooperation which was evident for the rest of the game was most disheartening.

We again express our apologies to have caused the disapproval of the fans, because such an attitude will not give our fine team the support tthey are worthy of. We would also like to thank those who did stick by us, although they may not have understood the situation.

In future let's all pull together in a mutual effort to maintain the spirit of our University. Let's get behind the Blue and White Society, for their unselfishness in devoting time and work, for everyone's benefit.

Editor, The Varsity:

Certain young ladies of the undergraduate body, according to an article in your Tuesday Edition, have expressed disfavour of Skulemen.

I would like to state that not all Skulemen were at the Debates Club meeting. Furthermore, the Freshmen Reception Committee of the Engineering Society greatly appreciates the large attendance of comely co-eds at the Skule Freshman Dance in September.

Don't give up, girls! We're not all disinterested boors.

Yours very truly,

When I saw Tennessee Williams' A STREETCAR NAMED DE... almost two years ago at the Royal Alex, I found it an extremely m... comment on our society and times. Obviously the author wanted to s... forcefully as he could that the 20th century stinks. In this attemp... succeeded.

He used old Aristotle's theory of catharsis—the play must finall... the castor-oil for the pity and terror that it stimulates in the audi... — and our feelings were completely in Mr. Williams', and the a... hands. "It's you men—you make us dress this way!" And with that she blew hot too demurely into her half-full coffee cup, pursed her lips around the edge of it, and took a firm and deliberate gulp. W eopened our mouth, and then quickly closed it. The conversation was obviously entering an enforced lull.

It gave us a chance to mentally recap the previous little discussion which had prompted the young lady's statement. We had started off by marvelling at the pains and discomfort girls go through in attiring themselves. This was immediately challenged and defended on behalf of her sex by a reasonably comely senior coed of probably better than average intelligence, who was every inch of her a woman—make no mistake about that.

"When you stop and think about it, you girls really go through hell to get dressed," we had commented about five minutes previous.

"Nonsense," she retorted. "We don't have any more real trouble than you fellows do."

"Is that so?" we challenged. "Just stop right there. Look at yourself, or any other girls for that matter. You start off by wiggling, squeezing and squirming into the straight-jacket's first cousin. Then you strap and hitch yourself together upstairs. If you don't wear suspenders your garters just about stop circulation in your thighs. And how you girls can ever walk around in the winter with only those transparent silk stockings on never ceases to amaze me. Which brings me to another point: your shoes — high heels which curve your arches every which way, narrow petite block areas which pinch and condense your toes, open toes, open heels — you've got to have the sense of balance of a tightrope walker, and the ability to endure pain of a contortionist to wear them. It must be a relief to put on loafers or saddle shoes. No, honeybun, you can't tell me you girls dress as comfortably as we men do."

"How do you know about these things?" she looked us right in the eye.

"I've got a sister."

The prosecution rested to catch its breath.

Her eyes were flashing now. "What about in the summer when boys were hot trousers that make their legs sweat, and we can go stockingless?"

"Hardly an adequate comparison when one talks about comfort. You still wear your girdles, etcetera. The only pressure from clothes we feel is from our belts, and then we adjust them accordingly. Perhaps garters and starchy collars, too, if you want to really scrape the barrel. But these are so minute compared to your discomforts."

"Well, boys don't like girls with tummies," now she was strictly on the defensive. "It's easier to wear a girdle than to hold your stomach in. Fellas don't like girls who aren't neat and well-figured. It's you men — you make us dress this way!"

It was at this point that we had paused. She looked up from her coffee now. She wasn't pouting any longer. In fact, she was breaking out into a big grin upon discovering she had admitted something she did not intend to.

"Don't get me wrong, dear light-of-my-life," we explained. "I don't think there's anything easier on the eyes than a young lady in all her finery, unless, of course, it's two young ladies in all their finery. I was just appreciating all the pain and suffering you girls go through, which we — the stronger sex — just take for granted."

"Okay, I get the point," she was demure again. "Well, you're the first . . ."

She suddenly shot her hand up to her shoulder.

"Oh, that darn strap! Excuse me. I'll be right back.

5 Lectures To Instruct Lost Frosh

A series of lectures organized by the University Health Service will begin on Thursday, Nov. 1 with a lecture by Warden Ignatieff, of Hart House. He will be talking on, "The University and the Community."

He says, "The student's time is so highly organized both in class and out that the University might add to his confusion rather than clear his thoughts. He has pressures and pulls from both timetable and student groups." Mr. Ignatieff's talk will discuss these things with special emphasis on the extra-curricular phase of the student's life.

All the lectures, which take place once a month, start at eight o'clock and will be held in the lecture hall of the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital, Surrey Place. They used to be held in the largest room of the Physics Building, but a more compact group will be possible by having it in the smaller room in the Hospital. Another advantage of having them there is that refreshments can be served. Each of the speakers will talk for approximately forty minutes. Then the meeting will be thrown open to discussion for as long as anyone remains, within limits, of course.

The purpose of the series of five lectures is to help students who come to the University without knowing exactly what they are here for. This assistance helps the min approaching studying and other activities in getting along in the group. It will also give information on University activities and get them into the swing of things in the first few months instead of the last year. It is designed to partly take the place of an orientation program for first year students which is lacking still although it has been considered.

In the four years during which similar lectures have been given, many people have expressed their appreciation of the good they have received from them. The talks are also interesting to many older students and doctors who attend them. The speakers are experts in their fields and recommended highly by the Health Service.

DRYDEN FIRST SPEAKER IN H. H. CHAPEL SERIES

The Secretary of the Young Liberal Association, Mr. Gordon G. Dryden, will be the first in a series of speakers to talk on "The Christian and This Election," in a Hart House Chapel series.

This is a semi-annual chapel series that is run by the Hart House Chapel, and which is held in connection with any pertinent issues at stake. There will be speakers from all the other parties to make the series complete.

The other speakers will be, in order, A. A. McCleod for the LLP, Charles Millard for the CCF, and possibly Dana Porter for the Progressive Conservatives.

The meeting will be held today in the Debates Room of Hart House from 1.30 till 2.00 p.m.

Friedmann On Germany At Int. Relations Club

Professor Wolfgang Friedmann, of the School of Law, will address the International Relations Club on: "Germany: focal point of East-West conflict". The meeting will take place on Thursday, November 1, at 8:15 p.m. at Wymilwood, 84 Queen's Park at Hoskin Ave.

Dr. Friedmann was born in Berlin where he attended the University and studied law. After becoming a qualified lawyer, he practised for a short time. He was a magistrate in a German industrial court when, in 1933, he got into trouble with the Nazis and left for England.

During the war, Dr. Friedmann spent three years with the Political Intelligence Department of the Foreign Office. At its conclusion, he did military government work in Germany. He was on the Economic Reconstruction Administration of Western Germany under the Eisenhower Command (S.H.A.E.F.) and was later on the British Control Commission. In 1947 he wrote: "Allied Military Government in Germany."

Dr. Friedmann was then appointed to the Chair of Public Law in Melbourne where he lectured for the three years immediately preceding his present appointment at our own School of Law.

Harrier Blues Prepare For Meet

Now that the track season is a closed book (and tragedy, at that), Varsity's distance men are preparing for the Intercollegiate Harrier a week Saturday at McGill. They have been working out this week at High Park, and travel to Alfred U. this Saturday for a dual meet.

Pictured above is the championship team of 1948. Sole member remaining at Varsity now is George McMullen, reputed to be the oldest Canadian in Milwaukee. George, standing at centre in the pic, is on this year's team, is in his final year grad studies.

Toronto teams have won the championship every year since before the war.

Last Minute Single Point Wins For Scarlet And Gold

By BRUCE NORTH

In the most sensational interfaculty football game to date this season the Victo Scarlet and Gold edged out a fighting Engineer squad 13-12. It was a spine tingler rig down to the last minute although a Victoria touchdown which was called back because holding might have broken up the game as early as the first half.

It was the Vic line that made the difference. They cut the Skulemen down with beautiful blocking which enabled Goodfellow, Frazor and Bond to tear off long gains along the ground. When he realized in the first half that he couldn't go through the Vic line, Skule quarterback Lewis switched to passes and it was this pitching arm that almost upset Victoria.

Victoria drew the first blood in the second quarter when they marched from their own 40 in 6 plays for a touchdown. Atkin and Goodfellow did the ball carrying, Atkin going for 40 yards in two plays. It was Goodfellow who took a pitchout from Lodge and went five yards around right end for the major. Williams converted.

Victoria hit back fast again when Cummings fell on a fumble on the Skule 12. On the next play Frazor bulled his way off left tackle for a touchdown. However, it was annulled by the referee because the Vic line was holding.

Skule wasted no time in the second half. The kickoff was carried back to their own 25 and then Snider and Lewis went for 9 and 5 yards respectively for a first down. Lewis faded back for a pass and was nailed for a 12-yard loss. Again he went back for a pass and this time heaved a 40-yard strike to Carr who scampered the rest of the way for a major. Prendergast converted.

Still in the third quarter Lodge took a Skule punt to their 39. Frazor, Goodfellow and Lodge carried down to the Skule 16. Goodfellow was smashed for no gain on the next play but then Frazor went to the one foot line and would have gone over had he not hit the goal post. Quarter Lorne Lodge sneaked across and Williams converted.

Skule took the kickoff to their own 35 and then marched down to Victoria's 15-yard line. But disaster struck when a fumble lost them the ball. Victoria couldn't make a dent in the vicious Skule line and kicked to their own 41. A pass was grounded and Prendergast went for 5. Two more passes advanced the ball to the Vic 15. Then Beady made a sensational catch of Lewis' pass in the end zone for a well deserved major. Prendergast converted and the score was tied.

George Hevenor then saved the day for Victoria. After Bond had carried the kickoff to his own 21, Hevenor galloped forty five yards to the Skule 35. Bond went 20 yards around right end. Bond and Lodge then bucked to the 8 and Hevenor hoofed it over the dead ball line for the big point. Lewis threw two desperation passes into the ground and the game was over.

Fourth Quarter Touchdowns Give Trinity Important Win

By FRANK QUINLAN

Trinity College's Intramural footballers took a virtual stranglehold on first place in Group 2 as they downed St. Mike's yesterday by a score of 11-1. The Red and Black needs to win only one of its remaining three games to tie for the top spot and two out of three to win it, and in both cases Forestry and St. Mike's must go through the remainder of their schedule undefeated.

Up to the fourth quarter the game had been extremely close with St. Mike's clinging to a one-point lead. But two Double Blue fumbles led to one Trinity major, and the Buttery boys struck again to score another TD against the stunned Mikemen to sew up the game and probably the play-off spot.

The first half was largely uneventful as the game early resolved itself into a two plays and kick routine that lasted until late in the second quarter.

The third quarter saw St. Mike's take a narrow lead on O'Heany's single. After the Double Blue had taken possession of the ball on Trinity's 45, little Jimmy Coghlan toddled through the line twice for a first down. Two plays later O'Heany booted a long one out of bounds behind Trinity's line for a point.

The Red and Black took full advantage of two St. Mike's bobbles in the first quarter to pull out in front. Fisher's kick was muffed on the Irish 3 and Trinity took over. After a line buck was stopped and a pass fell incomplete in the end zone, Thomas drove off tackle and stumbled over the goal line for the TD. Andison's attempted convert was blocked to make the score 5-1.

The winners struck again with the speed and suddenness of a thunderbolt. When St. Mike's fumbled the kick-off Gray scooped up the pigskin and raced to the Double Blue 25. On the next play Andison hit Thompson with a nice pass and he went over standing up. The convert was good to give the Tea-sippers an 11-1 bulge.

The Mikemen threw several desperation passes in an effort to get back into the game but it was a little too late. The game ended with Trinity parked on St. Mike's 20.

Andison's clever quarterbacking was a major factor in the Red and Black's win, as was Thomas' running and Fisher's kicking. The two lines were fairly even on the play with Driscoll of St. Mike's especially standing out as he set more than one Trinity back on his pants. The Mikemen were minus first string backfielders Miller and Russel, who are out with injuries, but O'Heany, McDonald, and Coghlan came through with good games.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Got back from a busman's holiday to Ann Arbor and Detroit the other night, where we shivered through two of the finest football games we ever saw. We had the privilege of watching the Michigan-Minnesota homecoming game from the Michigan bench, and the next day shared a windy roost with the Brigg's Stadium pigeons as the Chicago Bears edged the Detroit Lions 28-23 on the passing arm of unheralded Steve Romanik, filling in for injured Johnny Lujack.

Michigan won the college game 54-27. It was a dull affair except for a 95 yard runback of the opening kick-off by Gopher fullback Fred Engel, a 75 yard run back of a punt by Michigan's Lowell Perry, two 30 yard runs after pass receptions by Perry, two runs of 50 and 65 yards for TD's by 145-pound Wes Bradford, and a dozen or so other thrilling plays. Lowell Perry, who looks and runs much like Tom Casey, plays nearly 60 minutes every game, left end on the offense, and safety on the defence. He also did a little punting, including a 75 yarder that Minnesota fumbled and Michigan recovered for a touchdown.

The stadium at first looked small, owing to their shorter and narrower field and 10 yard end zones (Canadian end zones are 25 yards deep). Then we looked up. And up. And up. There are 97,000 seats. What with this and the small field, the stands cover more area than the field.

The teams in the Big Ten (there are nine teams so they call it the Big Ten) all carry about 50 players or so, and dress them all for games, or at least the home games. However, only 22 (the offensive and defensive terms) regularly see more than a few minutes action. The rest are held in reserve in case somebody gets hurt. They are the JV's (Junior Varsity) and except for the fact that they dress for the big game on Saturday, are much like our Intermediates. They play the JV's of other big colleges or the big teams of small colleges in midweek games, and act as practice material for the first two or three strings to sharpen up on.

At Toronto, the Blues carry about 30 plays and the Intermediates an equal number. The Ints generally play on Friday, and scrimmage with the Blues at least once a week, but do not dress for Senior games on Saturday.

In the Big Ten, unlike here, the first and second lines do not practice body contact amongst themselves much during the schedule—somebody might get hurt. The JV's, and sometimes the freshmen, supply the cannon fodder for practice sessions, and generally go at it pretty hard, since their best chance to crack the lineup is to make a regular player look bad.

Pitching Sportshoes

Lacrosse action in yesterday's intramural sports program saw SPS Firsts crush Meds first team 11-6 as Dewar poured no less than five goals into the nets and teammate McKay four. Byrnes accounted for the other Skule scores. Gear fired two for the Sawbones squad, the others going to Thompson, Sims, and Kilty.

On the soccer front Forestry I and Wycliffe I battled to a 1-all deadlock. Davis potted one for the Woodsmen in the first half and Hazard knotted it up for the Preachers in the second. The other soccer game, between Jr. Vic and Pre-Meds, was forfeited to the latter when Vic could not muster a full team.

SPS III came from behind to defeat St. Mike's A 2-15, 15-10, 15-1 in a volleyball encounter.

Blue Soccerites Travel To Buffalo

Today the University of Toronto Soccer Blues resume their annual rivalry with Buffalo State Teachers College when they cross the border to play their one exhibition game of the year against State's black and orange squad.

To date the Blues have yet to suffer a defeat at the hands of the Buffalo team. The State squad is usually a big hard hitting team, but are usually no match for the skilful passing plays of the soccer Blues.

This year however, the Varsity team is going to be severely weakened by the insistence of the border authorities that only players of British Nationality shall be allowed into the U.S. Apparently the world situation is backfiring on the Soccer Blues, as well as on international politics, as six of the eleven regulars will not be able to travel with the team.

This will entail a wholesale raiding of the Intermediate Soccer Blues ranks in an attempt to construct a team around the shell of the senior team that is left. Even so, a lot of the best players will have to be left behind because of their European or Latin American nationality.

However, with a little luck the Blues should be able to bring home he current exhibition in the Hart use Art Gallery contains forty- en oils and sketches by John ee.

Ir. Alfsen calls himself a real- who paints what he finds stir- g in the complexities and sub- tles of life. This statement calls a comment. The most strik- feeling when viewing the show that of a never-never land, ere life follows an unreal ttern of the circus and where colors are deep and romantic.

Most of the oil-paintings are por- ilts. All of them are very mel- w in colouring and deep in tone. ople represented are physical- individuals, but there does not m to be any attempt to clari- and bring out their inner intel- tual and mental character- tics. The head of Jerry, Gerald bott and the Artist's Self-Portrait em to go a little deeper than the st of the portraits.

Mr. Alfsen is very fond of fig- al compositions; "The Clowns", The Tavern" and "Back Stage" e the best examples. The omy atmosphere of the tavern, illuminated with hard light shining at alcohol-saturated faces is the moodiest and perhaps the most expressive.

The few landscapes shown do not seem to reach the high standards of the other oils. Especially the greens of the trees are strikingly raw and do not harmonize with the romantic subject matter.

The sketches are free, light and quick. Some are excellent, such as "The Spectators", "Equestrian" and "Bare-back Practice." These are sensitive in the quickness of expression, clean and exciting in lines and very pleasantly held in the frame of the paper. Other drawings, like "Gorilla", "Bears" and "Jaguar" seem indefinite, hard and unsensitive in line and everything but realistic.

On the whole the show is a visually pleasant example of how far art can get out of contact with the world we really live in. Present time, contemporary means of expression and even contemporary men do not exist. Life in art stopped about a century ago and chose to blend with another hangover from Dicheus' times: the living room of yours and mine. The gallery is open daily from 12 noon to 7 p.m. for male students. Wednesday afternoon from 4 to 5 p.m. the co-eds are invited to see the exhibition. On Wednesday, Nov. 7, there will be a talk on the current exhibition, given by either Mr. Paul Duval or Mr. George Pepper. This will take place at 5 p.m. and will be open to students of both sexes.

McLaren Film One Of Two At Hart House

Two films will be shown tomorrow at 12:30, during the weekly half-hour film period in the East Common Room of Hart House.

The first, "Fiddle Dee Dee", consists of the movement of abstract shapes to music. It was directed by Norman McLaren, who produced the first three-dimensional films at the C.N.E. this year, and who has won various awards for his experiments with films. "Fiddle Dee Dee" is a National Film Board strip lasting ten minutes.

The second film is sponsored by the Film Branch of the Toronto Public Library. It is called "Third Dimension", and deals with contemporary sculptors at work Among these are Jacobine Jones sketching the figure of a horse on a block of stone, and then chiselling it out. Frances Loring appears with her famous "Eskimo Mother", and works on a clay model. Also in the picture are Louis Parent's forty figures for the Stations of the Cross, in a Montreal shrine; Emmanuel Hahn and his designs for coins, and pottery figures of Dora Wechsler.

New World Faith Baha'i Meet Topic

Mrs. Audrey Westheuser, speaker for the Baha'i World Faith across Canada and the Northern States, will address the University of Toronto Baha'i Student Group at an open meeting today at 1:10 in Room 64 of University College.

Mrs. Westheuser is the Chairman of the Local Spiritual Assembly of Scarboro and of the Ontario Teaching Committee of the Baha'is of Canada. Her subject today will be, "The Goal of a New World Faith".

In an interview yesterday Mrs. Westheuser said that "The goal of a new world faith is to educate the human race in order that it may realize its oneness. The teachings of the Prophets are revealed for the spiritual education of mankind and Baha'u'llah's teachings have been given to enable men to become spiritually mature."

the gravy again as in the past six years.

The game itself is usually a colorful affair replete with cheerleaders, a platoon system of substitutes, and a fair sized crowd. It is a funny sight to see the thirty-odd members of the Buffalo squad warming up beside the thirteen man Varsity team, but safety in numbers does not usually work in this instance. The Blues have to work a little harder to keep up with their fresh opponents, but are a safe bet to add to their win column over Buffalo.

Storm To Miss

Last week's issue of Collier's magazine was devoted to a "Preview of the War we do not Want". We suggest, despite the protestations of the editors to the contrary, that the issue ought to have been named "Preview of the War we would Like to Get Out of our Systems".

Produced by some of the biggest names in the country — from Robert E. Sherwood to Bill Mauldin — the issue describes the hypothetical course of a war with Russia and subsequent reconstruction. We are led from the horrors of atom bomb raids on the United States right through to the production of Guys and Dolls on the Russian stage.

While the editors state that war is not inevitable and peace is to be earnestly sought, the readers of Collier's are more apt to be impressed by the fruits of victory over Russia. Their description of a war with Russia is frightening and awe-inspiring, yet the prospects of a united world tomorrow is very tantalizing. And a war with Russian Communists might achieve this, according to the Collier's plan.

A war in which the Communists were defeated would really be the war to end wars, they imply. It would have the effect of an eraser, removing all previous problems and replacing them with none—save the problems of production. And as all American readers of Collier's know, this is a surmountable one.

All these implcations are most comforting, most dangerous and most untrue. They are the ideas of the spoiled children reared in the idyllic calm of the North American world. We want our own way all the way. And until the twentieth century we have been accustomed to getting our own way.

This is why the ideas presented by Collier's may be very attractive to many people. If a war with Russia could achieve the absolute peace which we so earnestly desire, then by all means, have it.

Yet again and again, it has been proved that the road to peace does not cross through the battlefields of war. Rather, war is only a bad way of settling the conflicts which inevitably and constantly arise throughout the world.

Also, it is doubtful that we can assume, as cheerfully as Collier's does, that the bulk of the Russians are just waiting to be Americanized. However much the majority of Russians may hate their Communist overlords—and it is quite possible they may—there is little possibility that they will adopt our way of life any more readily than the one the Communists have imposed on them.

Russians are not Americans, even if biologically they are both members of the same human race. They are products of entirely different environments; their traditions, political, religious and cultural are not at all the same as those which produced the American world.

To suggest that Russia or any nation could be transformed virtually overnight is simply wishful thinking. Even in Japan, which is in some ways very westernized in outlook, the gestapo-like Thought Police was re-instituted only one week after the Peace Treaty was signed. So much for the transplanting the freedom of speech tradition!

The political atmosphere of the world today is as oppressive as the air before a storm. The policy of containment which the west has undertaken assumes that oppressive air is preferable to a storm which would devastate both the enemy and ourselves. Any suggestion that there would be a brave new world after the storm is irresponsible nonsense.

The Onion Skin

Was It Fear?

By MAX PARSONS

There was quite a rash of correspondence in these columns last week about the refusal of The National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) to invite some Soviet students to come to Canada for a visit this year. By and large students seems to support the principle behind such an invitation, although many doubted that it would do any real good.

Which is all very fine. We seem at last to be getting the view of a man very much forgotten by the custodians of student government, the poor, common student who is usually no more than a statistic in minute books and a reason for ponderous resolutions.

I have been intrigued, however, by one aspect of the situation which for some reason has escaped official notice. It consists of an odd contradiction, which I fail to understand.

First: history. The invitation to the Soviet students was extended last August by Denis Lazure, then Chairman of the International Affairs Commission of NFCUS, who was attending an International Union of Students (IUS) Council meeting in Warsaw. It went direct to the Russians at that meeting, who, after clearing it through the home office, accepted. This is a point some readers should note—the Russians, according to Lazure, had already received permission to come.

Such an invitation had, naturally to be cleared through Canadian student officialdom. Lazure brought it back to the NFCUS Conference held in London, Ont., in September, where it had a rough time. It almost didn't get out of committee—the vote was 6 for, 5 against, and there was one abstension.

The motion that did come before a full conference meeting (called a plenary session) read:

> Resolved: (a) That NFCUS, in co-operation with interested groups, attempt to bring a delegation of Soviet students on the basis of Soviet students on the basis of international cultural relations to Canada,
> (b) That no financial obligation be borne by NFCUS in connection with this project.

This is the motion that was booted out by the Conference, 12 votes against, 6 for, with no recorded abstensions. And this is the motion that all the talk has been about.

Why did the Conference turn down the proposal? The only official reason that I have been able to dig up is contained in a letter written by Syd Wax, present Chairman of the International Affairs Commission of NFCUS, to the president of the Russian student group. It reads, in part:

> This resolution was introduced at the plenary session of the conference and as a result of the discussion held it was felt that at the present time it would be impossible to arrange such a visit. A number of difficulties were raised in conjunction with the financing of such a project and the technical arrangements for conducting such a tour across Canada. As a result of these discussions, the resolution was not passed by the plenary session of the conference.

A resolution which definitely stated that no financial obligation (should) be borne" was defeated because a "number of difficulties were raised in conjunction with the financing of such a project"! I'm afraid I don't understand that kind of reasoning.

It has been suggested that the real reason that turned down the resolution was fear, fear of public opinion which the delegates assumed would crucify NFCUS if it made such a revolutionary move, and also, and more subtly, fear by NFCUS of its inability to handle delicate and controversial issues.

This is an old story. And it has really very little to do with a visit of Soviet students. Once placed on the spot with some controversial suggestion NFCUS neatly sidesteps the issue under cover of one or more excuses whic hread like a primer of cliches.

There are two very decided points of view on the Soviet students. One group thinks they should be invited so that we could have a look at some real live, breathing Russian Communists, put them into situations, ask them questions, show them what we are, and perhaps explain why, and carefully note their reactions. The other group thinks they should stay in Russia, that such a visit would bring NFCUS harmful publicity, that it wouldn't do any good anyway, that they will be no better than spies, that we couldn't change their opinions (and so why bother with them), and perhaps NFCUS couldn't handle the technical arrangements for such a trip.

NFCUS, and its officials, by their consistent refusal in the face of repeated demands, to make a public statement of why they refused the invitation, by the wishy-washy attitude they do adopt when put to the wall, have implied that the Canadian university student is afraid to take up a controversial issue and fight it out. If that is the case then I think that NFCUS has done the Canadian student a great injustice.

This argument is on whether or not it is a good idea to bring Soviet students to Canada and to participate in a reciprocal visit (a forgotten part of the suggestion). Many think it is. They feel the question should be thoroughly discussed. Discussion is not possible unless the NFCUS officials come right out into the open and give a full, detailed and intelligent statement of why they turned down the proposal.

It was not finances, for finances were ruled out of the original suggestion. It must have been something else. There are a great many students who would like to know what the something else consists of.

The buck now rests gently in the hands of NFCUS, and particularly of its International Affairs Commission Chairman, Syd Wax.

66 Good Feathers

Editor, The Varsity:

We as students of the School of Social Work, concerned with the Red Feather campaign for the Community Chest, were interested and also surprised upon reading The Varsity editorial on Monday, October 22nd, entitled "Charity Inc."

We were interested because the issues raised are the issues that face all of us. A few years ago there was no Red Feather Campaign. What happened? Many more than the Sixty-Six, with over-lapping services, were vying with each other for your dollar. Out of this chaos has grown the cooperative organization of Red Feather Services. The function of this organization is to coordinate service and eliminate waste in expenditure. We feel that the Red Feather organization in its comparatively short life, has in large measure accomplished these aims. But it is by no means perfect, which it is the first to admit, and is anxious for any suggestion which would further improve its service to all of us as citizens of this community.

With limited funds it is understandable that students will have to make a choice where they feel their responsibilities lie, to the world community of students, to the community in which they live, or to both.

We were surprised that the editorial questioned the use of advertising as a method of raising unds. Advertising IS expensive. On the other hand it is accepted as the most efficient way of selling your service or product. Business uses it, governments use it, universities use it, students in their concern for other students use it—why not Red Feather?

If anyone would like to discuss this further . . . please phone the Schol of Social Work and leave a message for any of the following students . . .

BLAST SAC RADIOMEN

McGill Weekend Pep-Rally Is On

There will be a pep-rally sponsored by the Blue and White Society Nov. 9, the SAC decided last night in spite of heated protest from the University College representatives.

A motion that the pep-rally should not be held was put forward by Chuck Hanly, III UC. The motion was defeated 8-12 by a representative vote. Hanly felt that it was unfair of the Blue and White Society, knowing that the UC Follies had previously spoken for this night to hold a pep-rally as a counter-attraction. "How much can students take?" he asked.

The UC Follies do not involve the entire campus said one of the speakers. Bill Corbett, III Trin felt that it would be a shame to kill an activity that could involve 11,000 students for the sake of a show whose mammimum seating capacity would be 450.

The spirit of the freshmen and freshies has fallen because there have been no pep-rallies this year, Jona Dancy, III Vic said. With a contending team this year, Walt Mackenzie, IV Meds, felt that the team deserves more than a few cheers at the game. He said that it would still be possible to go to the Follies after the pep-rally.

A few years ago a pep-rally was held on the same night as the UC Follies and as a result the Follies was a failure. Ann Gostling, IV UC said that you "should feel sorry for UC."

University College had wanted to have a Dance at Hart House after the Follies show. Both UC and the Blue and White Society asked for the night of Nov. 10 for a dance. No agreement was reached last spring when the dates for Hart House were being allocated. This year, Hanly explained, UC agreed in good faith to a compromise and the Blue and White planned to hold a dance at Hart House Nov. 10.

UC feels that a pep-rally on Nov. 9, coupled with a dance the following night will cause the Follies to be a financial failure. This would mean that the year's activities of the UC Literary and Athletic Association would necessarily be cut.

Radio Chairman Protests Unparliamentary Commit.

In one of the most outspoken statements in the past two years of Council history, the Chairman of the SAC Radio Committee stated last night that his committee members had "relegated him to the position of a by-stander," while they made decisions without consulting him.

The Radio Committee is a Students' Administrative Council-sponsored activity, run under the direction of a Chairman, who is a Council member. Since the Chairman was not appointed until late this year, the Council formed a committee composed of Rocky Martino, Grad, and Fred Giles, IV UC.

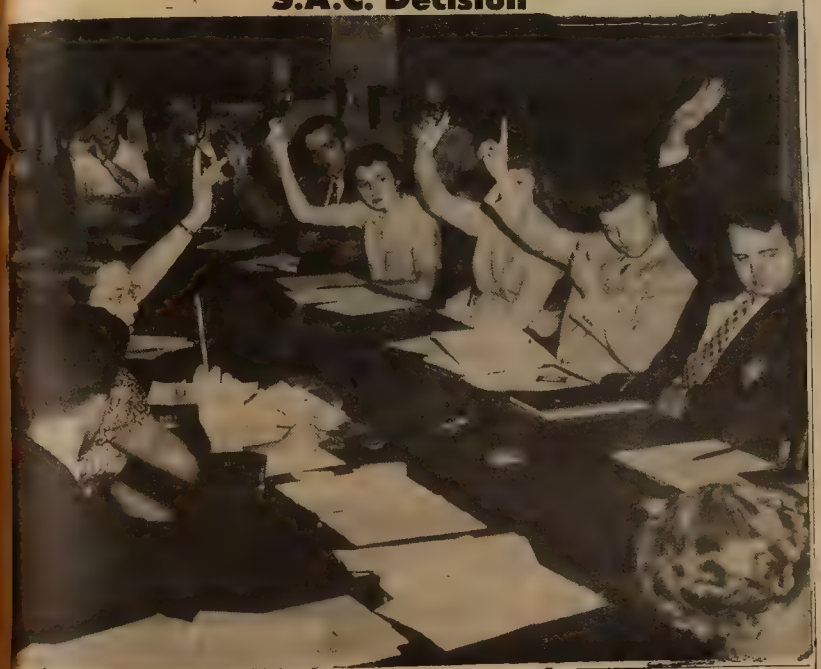
After Waite spoke, SAC President Syd Wax amplified his remarks, commenting that "these two gentlemen are running the Radio Committee by themselves. When he calls meetings of the Radio Committee, they either don't bother showing up, or spend the time telling him what they have done already, without previously consulting him."

Wax further charged that Martino and Giles were committing the SAC without authority, and were using the Radio Committee to settle private feuds.

"This committee is in the hands of too few people," charged Waite. "It must have wider campus participation. Their meetings are informal and unparliamentary; there is no chairman, they are not held in the Council office (as are other committee meetings), and there is no chairman."

"This whole thing seems to boil down to the fact that this committee is not Varsity-wide, as it should be, but two-man-wide," remarked Bud Trivett, Law.

As a result of these charges, the SAC withdrew their appointment of Martino and Giles as the members of the Radio Committee. It is now up to Waite to form a new committee.



Waite said his first move would be to call a general meeting of all those persons and organizations interested in working on a Radio Committee. He particularly stressed glee clubs, in addition to the college drama societies already working with the Radio Committee.

At the general meeting a secretary would be added, said Waite. Other appointments would be a Drama Director and Round Table Director, to take charge of the two man activities of the Radio Committee. He also hopes to expand the Committee's work to include special events such as musicales, and a university talent show.

The present Radio Committee has already made arrangements for drama productions by the four Arts College drama groups, to be heard over CJRT. Martino reported that CKEY was unwilling to broadcast the Round Table discussions, as they did last year.

However, Secretary-Treasurer E. A. Macdonald read out a letter from CKEY News Editor Harry Rasky, assuring him that CKEY was willing to broadcast the program, on the understanding that Rashy would be moderator. Previously Martino had criticized Rashy's handling of the program in his position as moderator last year.

S.A.C. Decision

The Students' Administrative Council is pictured above as it voted last night on the suggestion of the Radio Commissioner to have rescinded the appointment of the two members of his committee. Commissioner Doug Waite, Emmanuel, charged that the two committee members were running the radio activities without consulting him first.

Restrictions Keep Blues Outside U.S.

The Senior Blues Soccer Squad met Buffalo State Teachers on their home grounds yesterday under a slight handicap.

Almost half of the Blue footballers were unable to play Buffalo because of the restrictions on non-Canadian subjects entering the United States. An official of the U.S. Consulate pointed out that both passports and visas as well as an admittance feet of eight dollars per head would be required of aliens entering the US. A bond of from $500 to $1,000 might have been necessary as well, he added.

Tom Broadhurst, team manager, decided that the expense necessary to clear the non-Canadian players would not be worthwhile for the exhibition game at Buffalo. The time required to make these soccerites eligible for US entry would be at least one week, since the immigration officials usually write to the applicant's native land.

Ole Friele, IV Eng. Bus., from Norway; Bob Antoni, III Meds, from Trinidad; Wally Eze, from Nigeria; Manuel Atucha, IV SPS, from Venezuela; and Jose Atucha, I SPS, also from Venezuela; were unable to play the US team because of the entry restrictions.

JERUSALEM

School Abroad

By LENORE KERT

I attended courses at the Hebrew University this summer. No, not the beautiful Hebrew University on Mount Scopus, just outside of Jerusalem, which is in Arab territory, but the makeshift Hebrew University which comprises 25 buildings in scattered areas of the Israeli part of Jerusalem (i.e. the New City).

Such a system of widely-separated and purely temporary buildings, all having been borrowed, rented or acquired since 1948—makes the Hebrew University a rather unique one.

First, it has no campus. Our courses were given in Terra Sancta, a building which is located in a residential section of Jerusalem and which reminded me greatly of the Economics Building on this campus. Between lectures, the students congregate in the halls. Not only do they lack a Student's Union, but there are no campus coffee shops handy either. There is a sidewalk soft drink stand nearby, but standing outdoors in the intense heat isn't too satisfactory for meeting and greeting.

Football and cheerleaders, homecoming weekends and pep rallies, musical revues and large-scale dances—these things have yet to become a part of the extra-curricular college program. At present the university is mainly concerned with laboratories, libraries and finding places for the students to sleep. Many of the 200 students are from foreign countries or from other parts of Israel and with the acute housing shortage in Jerusalem, the authorities do find some difficulties in arranging accommodations.

Since we were a group of Canadian and American tourists, our lecturers spoke to us in English, but the official university language is Hebrew. I recall hearing a Psychology professor here in Toronto tell the class that he didn't mind them looking at their watches, but he wished they wouldn't shake them to see if they were still running. This must be an international joke as I have now heard it told in Hebrew, by an Israeli professor too.

Although in exile from its home on Mount Scopus and maintained in monasteries, church schools and former government offices, the University has opened new departments, faculties and schools since the establishment of the

SAC At A Glance

Besides censuring the Radio Committee and deciding to hold a Pep Rally November 9, at its meeting last night the Students' Administrative Council:

—decided to hold the Mock Parliament elections on November 15, in spite of the dangers of their being used for political propaganda in the provincial elections one week later.

—decided not to give $250 to the Folk Dancing Group, for records and choreographers, on the grounds that the 25 members of the group did not constitute an "all Varsity" activity.

—raised the SAC President's expense account from $100 to $200, and in addition created a $200 hospitality fund. This money is to be used to entertain visiting delegations from other universities.

—approved the purchase of a desk, chair, and filing cabinet for an office for the SAC President, to be placed in the Women's SAC Office in University College. A glass partition may be added at a future date.

—gave "spiritual" support to a freshman orientation scheme to consist of tea dances at the four Arts Colleges, at which arts students will be able to meet professors and other freshmen.

—heard an invitation to the Publications Commission by The Varsity to watch the printing of the paper in Oshawa the night of Nov. 15.

—approved a $250 grant towards the expenses of the delegation of the National Federation of Canadian Students to the Edinburgh Conference. The Edinburgh Conference is a meeting to be held in December between all the western national student unions.

LITERARY

The Varsity is going to publish a Literary Issue again this year. The deadline for turning material in for the issue is January 5th, at The Varsity office. There are openings for entries in Short Stories, Poetry, and Essays in both serious and lighter vein. There will also be a competition in photography. The main thing is that quality is really going to be stressed this year or there will be no issue.

SOCIAL WORK

Irving Mann, School of Social Work was elected President of the Social Work Students Association last week. Others elected were: Ben Schlessinger, Vice President; Marian Anderson, Secretary; Jan Martin, Library and Curriculum Committee Chairman; Ron Welsh, SAC Representative; Helen Wright, Social Committee Chairman; Henry Hicks, Public Relations; Jack Bevan, Activities Committee Chairman; Peter Lustgarten, Salary Standards.

Manitoba Unearths Bracken Trophy

The Bracken Trophy, stolen from The Varsity News Office Friday night, turned up last night at the University of Manitoba.

Arrival of the trophy was preceded by a letter, not on The Varsity stationary but on a page with The Varsity printed across the top, explaining that The Varsity had won the trophy the previous year, but felt that The Manitoban was more deserving of it this year. The letter was presumably signed "Editor, The Varsity".

The Bracken Trophy is presented annually to the Canadian university paper displaying the highest degree of "editorial excellence". It was won last year by The Varsity, whose editorial page was put out by Frank Moritsugu, Editor, and Jack Gray, Managing Editor.

The University of Manitoba received the trophy carefully wrapped in corrugated cardboard and packed in old copies of The Varsity. The editors of The Manitoban were impressed with the neatness of the wrapping job. The have asked and received permission to retain the trophy for a few days, but will return it to The Varsity shortly, in the same packings as they received it. It was delivered to them by Canadian National Express, prepaid.

In a long distance telephone call last night, the editors of The Manitoban said they were greatly flattered when presented with the trophy, but felt that it should be returned to those who had earned it. The Varsity has printed several editorials and columns from The Manitoban this year they said, which they were happy to see, but they felt The Varsity was also doing a good job of news coverage on the Toronto campus.

When the trophy was stolen from The Varsity ice, it was replaced by an editorial from Friday's Varsity complaining of the lack of "hell raising" on the campus. A story in Monday's paper asked the thieves to return for the sample case, but so far this has not been done.

Signs Of Winter

During yesterday's cold snap one student found it a little too cold for his taste and decided to do something about it. The bus was taking its time as usual so Ralph Halbert, II Dents, took matters into his own hands. Gathering a pile of dead leaves in the gutter, Halbert lit a little bonfire to warm his chilled hands. At last success, and just as the little bonfire flared up along came the bus.

In October, 1948, Porter was appointed Minister of Education and Provincial Secretary. In May, 1949, he was appointed Minister of Education and Attorney-General. He introduced the Teachers' Superannuation Act which provided for increased pensions for school teachers. In the same year he introduced a new basis for the curriculum in the schools, which has already been adopted in a large number of schools throughout the province.

As Attorney-General, he has attended the series of Dominion-Provincial Conferences which have been held to consider means of amending the British North America Act.

Replacement In Pediatrics Brown Goes

Dr. Chute will also be physician-in-chief of the pediatrics department at the new Hospital for Sick Children. The announcement was made late last week by University President Sidney Smith.

An Arts, Physiology and Medicine graduate, Dr. Chute interned at both the Toronto General and Sick Children Hospitals. He obtained his Ph.D. from London University.

Dr. Alan Brown graduated in medicine from this University, was resident physician at the Babies' Hospital, New York, for five years, and subsequently studied at Munich, Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London.

Woman Speaks At Hillel Series

For the first time since the Hillel Major Lecture Series were initiated a woman occupied the platform. Dr. Trude Weiss-Rosmarin, the guest speaker at the first lecture of the season, chose as her topic Wednesday night "What Can the Modern Jew Believe?"

"We believe that we are the first generation of Jews to ask what God is and wonder how can modern man believe in God, but so did man before us", said Dr. Weiss-Rosmarin.

One problem is that the person trained in philosophical thought finds it difficult to take at face value the text of the Bible as it is written stated Dr. Weiss-Rosmarin. God speaks to Moses, and in Prophets you find passages such as "and God said to me" in the Bible, and many great thinkers and philosophers with a rationalistic view cannot accept a God that uttered sounds in a language known to man, she added.

"The difficulty of the rationalists is solved by the admission that man can never really know what God is, and once we become resolved to it, the text of the Bible presents no further difficulties to us."

Even today there are two factions in the Jewish camp — the rationalists, and those who believe instinctively and have no questions in the realm of belief said Dr. Weiss-Rosmarin. Whereas the rationalists questioned and analysed the idea of God speaking to man, those who are instinctive believers accept the idea of God communicating to mortals.

The Old Testament is the essence of Western civilization and all that it has inspired; take away that and all that remains would be the barbarianism rampant among the Nazis and among the Russians who both banished the Bible.

Cheers

The Blue and White Society has reached a compromise as to what the cheerleaders should do when a Varsity Blue rugby player is injured. The decision is a result of the booing incident in last Saturday's Queens-Varsity game.

Both cheers and applause will be used, said a Blue and White official. This is to fill the gap of time while the injured player is on the field. The audience is asked to cheer while the trainers are on the field with the injured player and to applaud as he leaves the field.

Previously the cheerleaders were instructed not to lead cheers for individual players as it was felt by the Blue and White Society that applause was in "better taste".

This is the result of last weekend's game when the cheerleaders were booed as they failed to lead the crowd in a yell for injured fullback, Steve Oneschuk.

Need Private Aid Says SPS Dean

"I fear that the universities of Canada are at the crossroads so far as their independence is concerned—they are in danger of becoming government agencies," said Engineering Dean K. F. Tupper Friday night.

Speaking at the fourteenth triennial reunion of the University's Skule alumni before about 750 grads, he pointed out that the direct contribution of private industry to this University, for example, was a very small fraction of its total income.

Sixty per cent of its contributed support now came from governments, he said. This was a development of the past twenty-five years.

There were many sincere men in government agencies, but they existed to carry out the will of the government of the day, Dean Tupper continued. To preserve the vital intellectual independence of Canadian universities, more direct support must come from private industry, he stated.

Industry was obligated to universities for trained men, he said, and many of these men started at higher salaries than the professors who taught them.

Universities had traditionally been the source of supply of trained men for industry, but by the time university grads reached high-management level they had lost touch with the needs of the university, particularly its independence. The Dean felt this was essential to scientific truth and progress.

Right People Are Needed Says Liberal Speaker

"It's our job to get into party organizations and see that the right people are put in," stressed Mr. Gordon Dryden, secretary of the Young Liberals Association, yesterday at the first of a series of talks at Hart House Debates Room. Mr. Dryden went on to add that "Politics is only dirty if we leave it to dirty politicians." This talk was the first of four talks sponsored by the Hart House Chapel Committee in which men representing the four political parties will address students.

Mr. Dryden said that the Liberal party was "The party of ALL the people." In his comparison of all the parties, he went on to mention that the Conservative and Socialist parties kept people in an "Economic Strtight-Jacket." They twist the problems to fit their preconceived policies he added while the Liberal party adjust their ideas to changing needs.

Institute Features Dickinson

Mr. John Dickinson, President of the Royal Canadian Institute, will address their opening meeting this Saturday at Convocation Hall. Lantern slides will highlight his talk on "Investment in Canada". The meeting is at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall and is open to the public.

A University of Toronto graduate, class of 1T6, Mr. Dickinson is Chairman of the Investment Committee of the Guaranty Trust Company of Canada.

Mr. Dickinson will discuss Canada's economic growth over the past quarter century and for the future, illustrating his remarks with lantern slides. His main theme will be the ownership of share capital in business enterprise.

The Royal Canadian Institute act as a liaison between the scientific worker in research and the general public. Weekly meetings will be held in Convocation Hall starting Nov. 3.

SCIENCE NOTES

Pennies From Heaven

By STAN SCHATZ

When prospector Fred Chubb stumbled into a big hole in the barren wastes of Northern Quebec, he bumped his head on a ma... scientific discovery. In cooperation with Dr. V. B. Meen of th... university, he inspired a joint expedition of the National Geographic Society and the Royal Ontario Museum that culminated in the investigation and confirmation of the largest meteor crater known to man.

Such an announcement invites the question: What is a meteor crater? Meteors are small solid celestial bodies which become visible when they enter the earth's atmosphere and are heated to incandescence by impact with air molecules. They then appear as momentary streaks of light across the night sky that have been long known as "shooting stars." Unusually brilliant ones are called "fireballs." Beware of undue hyperbole, however, for if the meteor's brilliant trail is jagged and rain is falling, you are probably observing lightning! The word "meteor" is derived from the Greek word pertaining to anything in the air. Meteorology, the science of atmospheric phenomena is not concerned with meteors but with the interpretation of the Canada Life weather beacon.

Friction due to the resistance of the air raises the temperature of these swiftly moving bodies to about 7000 degrees Centigrade, and in most cases this great heat causes these meteors to burn up before they reach the earth. Those larger meteors that survive the flight through the air and fall to the ground are called meteorites. Specimens from about 1600 falls have been recovered, and new ones are being found at the rate of twenty-five a year. Their fall is frequently accompanied by bright flashes of light, by explosive roaring sounds, and by appropriate screams from startled observers. Most meteorites are found at or a little way below the surface. They are of two kinds: those composed of metal (iron and nickel) and those of stone. Something like a dozen known meteorites weigh more than a ton. A few very large ones have blasted out the great pits known as meteor craters. We may wonder why the intruder is not still balanced in its vessel like an egg in an egg cup. Simply, the heat of the collision causes the gases to expand explosively, scattering what is left of the meteorite over the surrounding country and blasting out the crater.

Ten craters or groups of craters in various parts of the world are recognized as being of meteoric origin. Until recently none approached the size of a crater in Arizona which was some three-quarters of a mile in diameter. Now, the discovery of the Chubb Crater, two miles across and seven miles in circumference, suggests that bomb-conscious man has cause to fear a yet graver menace. The obliterative effect of such an unwelcome visitor dropping into Toronto and fashioning a home centered at Yonge and Bloor Streets would encompass an area from St. Clair to Queen and from Bathurst to the Don.

In order to prevent the unnecessary loss of life in such an eventuality, it is imperative that all sinister-looking astronomical bodies be reported at once to the local authorities.

Varsity Liberals To Plan Battle

The second meeting of the University of Toronto Liberal Club will be held tonight at 8.00 p.m. in Wymilwood. The meeting will consist of a discussion of the policies that the club should take in the coming campus election, and the provincial election. There will also be speakers from several of the Toronto ridings.

"We intend to take some concrete action to control the Tory campaign of delay in the Mock Parliament elections, and plan our own strategy to ensure an effective fight," said John Medcof, IV UC, Pres. of the Liberal Club. "It seems to have fallen to the Liberals to carry the fight against Tory obstructionism for the coming campus election," he said.

Speakers have been invited from local ridings which include: Eglinton, High Park, Rosedale, Woodbine, East York, St. Patricks, and Riverdale. Any students interested in taking an active part in the Provincial Elections of Nov. 7 should come out and meet some of the people they can help. The meeting is giving the club a chance to meet the candidates and decide where we can be most effective.
